Mr. Chairman, the select committee which had been appointed by the Congress to consider and report upon a permanent system of government for the District of Columbia, had in its report recommended that 40 per cent be the amount fixed to be paid by the General Government toward the expenses of the District government. There is no doubt in my mind that but for the fact that Congress felt responsible, or, rather, its conscience was being pricked with the thought that the corrupt government of its creation had brought woe to the District, aided very materially in inducing it to assume the burden for the General Government it did when it agreed for the time being to pay one-half this city's expenses.

Washington at that time was a city of approximately only 140,000 inhabitants. The statement was made in the course of the debate on this subject that ultimately it would become a great city, and the answer was that then a change could be made. We see the aspiration of this city manifesting itself through the columns of its newspapers—there is a call for a greater Washington—and, Mr. Chairman, what will be the expenses of this city if the ambition of its progressive citizens are realized and Washington does become a city of a million or a million and a half of inhabitants? The time will then come when the current expenses of this city will easily amount to twenty or thirty millions of dollars. Do we propose then to burden our constituents with bearing one-half of the expenses of its government? It now has a population of 350,000. It is surrounded by a score or more of suburban villages, many of them miles from this capital. These suburban villages contain nearly one-half as many people as lived within the limits of the city at the time the present plan of government was devised. Our constituents bear one-half the expense of the government in every particular. Will some one tell me why the people in the mountains of Tennessee should be taxed for the education of the children within the limits of these suburban villages and of

I confess, as far as I am concerned, that I do not want the General Government to shirk the responsibility of paying every cent that it should pay-yes, I want the General Government to be liberal, if I may be permitted to use that term, in its dealings with the District of Columbia, but I do say that there are certain charges, that there are certain obligations, resting upon the people of the District that they should carry for themselves and which should not be shared by the constituents of the gen-tlemen who sit upon this floor. Will some one please tell me tlemen who sit upon this floor. Will some one please tell me why the people in Maine should be taxed to care for the indigent poor within the limits of the District of Columbia? Every capital of a State within the United States bears the burden, not alone of its city government, but it also shares the burden of the county and State governments, and in addition bears its proportionate share of the stupendous expenses incurred in the support of the General Government. In every State capital the State owns real property just as the General Government owns real estate here, and in the case of the capital city of my State the fee in the streets, avenues, and parks is in the State just as here it is in the General Government, and yet the suggestion that the State government should bear 50 per cent of the city of Austin's expenses would be promptly rejected as too ridiculous for consideration. Can some man differentiate for me between a State capital and this capital in the matter of a just and equitable responsibility from sharing the burdens of the municipal government?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman state whether or not the people of the United States are taxed to take care of the resident poor, the indigent poor, of the city?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, certainly; the General Government pays one-half of the expenses of the support of every pauper, of every blind person, of every deaf person, of every person who is afflicted in any way, whose support is chargeable to the District of Columbia.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For those who live here?
Mr. BURLESON. Yes. There is no question about that.
The question is, Why should it be? No man can give a reason, and, as was said when this matter was under discussion in 1878, no man would stand upon this floor and contend for such a proposition or would vote for it if he knew that his constituents were to pass directly upon the proposition and would hold him directly accountable for that vote.

Mr. STERLING. What is the rate of taxation in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. One dollar and fifty cents, I believe, levied only against the character of property I have indicated. mit, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to be misunderstood, all are anxious that Washington should be made a beautiful city, all take pride in the fact that the capital of this great country of ours should be the most beautiful city in the world, and I do not believe a man can be found, who has visited the capitals of Europe after visiting this capital, but will admit that to-day it is the most beautiful capital in the world; and now having attained this end the question arises, Shall this General Government continue to bear excessive burdens, more excessive than is just and fair to our constituents?

I do not want to be misunderstood. I am not only willing but anxious that the General Government should bear its full part in the expense of governing this city; but in fairness to ourselves and our constituents, we should not place on them bur-dens they ought not to carry. There is another matter to which I want to ask your attention. The District Commissioners, in my opinion, should be given larger responsibility and larger authority in regard to the regulation of local affairs within the District of Columbia. It is true that they are not responsible to any person or any authority, as I have shown, but I still believe that it would be best for this city if larger powers could be conferred on the Commissioners. Is there a man here who will gainsay the proposition if these District Commissioners had been accountable directly to the people, and they had been given the authority to act, that long before this the people of this District would have had 75-cent gas or even 65-cent gas? Is there any man here who will gainsay the proposition that they would have long since had, if not universal transfers upon all street cars of this city, a very much reduced rate? Is there any-one but who knows the people here would have had cheaper telephones in this city if the District Commissioners were vested with the authority to regulate these charges and were directly responsible to the people for their action?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would be glad to have the gentleman state upon what he bases his opinion that if the Commissioners did have greater authority we would have lower charges for the services from these public-utility corporations that he indi-

Mr. BURLESON. Because I believe it would have been just to have made such reductions, and I know that the people here would have insisted upon the reductions being made. That is the reason upon which I base my belief, and I contend it is well founded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's statement is largely speculative.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think so; and as for the matter of gas, if the gentleman will send for bulletin issued last year by the Bureau of Labor and see how very cheaply it can be produced, if he will look into the question of the actual cost of making gas, I do not believe that he or any man upon this floor would say it should not be reduced and that in doing so it would be perfectly just and fair to the gas company. I have no purpose other than to be scrupulously fair and just to all these public-service corporations. I do not want to fix a charge, and would not if I had the authority or power to do so, for 1 cent lower than was just and fair alike to the people and to the corporations which have been given, given without cost, the franchises to furnish these services to the people,

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why should in the gentleman's opinion an irresponsible commission be more quick to respond to the demands of the public than a body that is responsible to its constituents?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, the gentleman knows quite well, if he refers to this body, that the Congress is always slow to move. The gentleman also understands that the District Committee, consisting of wise men as all will confess, has many, many complex matters confronting it, and probably has not had the time to give these less important matters attention.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. OLCOTT.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.
Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he knows that the District Committee is now investigating most thoroughly the entire question of the cost of gas and the proper price that should be charged in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. I am not a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, but I remember quite well that during the consideration of this bill at the last session of Congress, when an item had been embodied in it to reduce the price of gas to the city and to the Government from $20 to $15 for the flat-flame burner, that a point of order was made against it, and it was of course sustained, and out the item went.

At that time members of this committee urgently invited the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the matter and pleaded with them to take some steps to afford the people relief.

Mr. OLCOTT. Of course my recollection does not go back to the last Congress.

Mr. BURLESON. The RECORD will bear me out in the statement I have made.

Mr. OLCOTT. But, as a matter of fact, I would like to state to the gentleman that matter is being carefully considered by the subcommittee having that matter in charge now.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman tell me whether it is going to be so carefully considered that we will not be able to get a report at this session? Mr. OLCOTT. It is going to be so carefully considered, in my opinion, that justice is going to be done to every one concerned, both the people in the city of Washington and the companies that have the right to manufacture the gas.

Mr. BURLESON. And thus it is, Mr. Chairman, that light is turned upon the proposition as to whether we are going to have a report at this session. Justice is going to be done. Why, of course, a committee of Congress could never do anything but report a measure that would be exactly just and fair. That report a measure that would be exactly just and fair. That was not the query. The query was, Will there be a report at this time, this session?

It has been charged that the capital stock of this gas monopoly has been inflated by the unauthorized issuance of certificates of indebtedness. It has been charged repeatedly in the public prints that the people of Washington City have been victimized by this monopoly for years and that they can get no relief.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell the committee why it was that, notwithstanding the fact that this House defeated a conference report and specifically directed the committee to take it out and bring back a bill fixing the price of gas at, I think, a dollar—though I am not sure—they did not bring back any bill? They did not obey the instructions of the House, as I recollect. The gentleman will remember it, I am

Mr. BURLESON. Of course, the members of the District Committee will remember it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was, possibly, a year or two

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, as I have stated before, I have no disposition to be unjust or unfair to a single publicservice corporation within the District of Columbia. not under any circumstances vote for a proposition that would take from them one-hundredth part of 1 per cent of what they are justly and fairly entitled to charge for the service they are rendering the citizens of this District, but I do believe that this system of government that we have in the District of Columbia, resulting in the irresponsibility of the District Commissioners and I say that intending no reflection upon the eminent gentlemen who constitute the board—is the prime cause for the delay in bringing the relief to which these people are entitled at this time. I realize, as I have stated, and I will not discuss the reasons why, that this can not be corrected; that we can not change the present plan under existing conditions. I believe it ultimately will come. I believe within a quarter of a century Members upon the floor of this House, upon that side as well as upon this, will have the courage to submit a plan here for the permanent government for the city of Washington that will enable the people of this District to hold directly responsible those who are chargeable with the responsibility of its government. If this could be done and the intelligent taxpaying element of the District were given the right to select the Commissioners all these difficult problems would be promptly and correctly solved.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I only wanted to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] that I put in a bill for free transfers on three separate occasions, and the present bill is now in the committee, and I hope for a favorable report and that I will be able to present it to the House at the next District day. Then, in the matter of telephone charges I propose to do something in that line as a member of the District Committee, and am now collecting data, because I do not want to go ahead without a proper backing. Just as soon as I get that backing I am going to put that bill before the District Committee. I simply say this to show that the members of the District Committee are not idle.

Mr. BURLESON. It is gratifying to receive this information, Mr. Chairman, and I sympathize with the gentleman, because he seems to be in the same condition of mind in which the subjects living within the limits of the District of Columbia find He has hope that something is going to be done.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. It is going to be done.
Mr. BURLESON. It is going to be done! Mr. Chairman, that is the first cheering information that I have heard since I have been a Member of this body coming from any member of the District Committee.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to bring a bill in and let it sleep. I am going to move that bill up some way.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman states he is getting data on the telephone subject and others. Is the gentleman doing that individually or is the committee having hearings on that subject?

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. No, sir; it is just individual action; but I will call it to the attention of the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You had no hearings upon the

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. No. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have said even more than I intended to say. I know that municipal government is a grave problem. I know that it presents many complex problems, and the thoughtful men of both parties throughout the length and breadth of our country are seeking for a solution, and the best solution, of the problem. I believe that the time will come—in fact, I am sure the time will come-when we can make these District Commissioners directly responsible to the intelligent tax-paying people of the District; and when that time does come, in my judgment we will have then devised the best form of government that can be devised for the government of a municipality.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In that connection, is it the opinion of the gentleman from Texas that the District Commissioners ought to have control of the streets and avenues of the city of Washington, independent of Congressional control?

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all. My contention is that they ought to be given larger powers relating to the regulation of public-service corporations and the charges that they make to the public for the service they render.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think that inasmuch as the people of the Republic are going to come here, either themselves or through their representatives, to transact business that Congress ought to keep control of all

Mr. BURLESON. Congress can not rid itself of the exclusive right of controlling the municipality of the District of Columbia or, I should say, of the exclusive right to legislate for the District of Columbia; but I contend that that authority carries with it the responsibility to devise for the people who reside here the very best system of municipal government that can be devised. It is true that we have not the courage now to do it, for reasons which I do not now care to discuss. We all know what they are, and I do not care to discuss them.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the gentleman does not care to discuss the reasons, of course it is not worth while to ask him for them: but I will ask him if there is any reason why three Commissioners appointed by the Executive are better qualified to see that the people of the District get a better or fairer government than Members of Congress elected directly by the as behind another.

Mr. BURLESON. I confess I know none, except the fact that we are not responsible to the people here, but to our own con-We all know Members of Congress can not, because of the multiplicity of the duties devolving upon them, give District matters their close personal attention, can not give to the details of this municipal government that attenion which it properly requires or demands at their hands. There are not three Members in this body who would not give to this city an honest, economical, and efficient municipal government if they had the power conferred upon them or authority conferred upon them and were made directly responsible to the people of the District for their conduct.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a suggestion in connection with the observation that has just been indulged as to the duty of Congress to legislate for the District of Columbia. That would apply with equal force to every duty that devolves upon Congress, and while the District of Columbia is the general seat of government, it seems to me that there is just as much pressure behind one of these duties

Mr. BURLESON. Probably so; but I venture the assertion that aside from members of the subcommittee who make up this bill there are not five men upon the floor now that could come within a million dollars of the amount appropriated last year for the District government.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is it not also true that the measure is made up by the members of the subcommittee and that there is no member of the whole committee who undertakes to be informed with reference to the details that does not come to him as a member of the committee?

Mr. BURLESON. That is largely true.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. So that confirms what I was saying. I see no difference between this legislation and any other. All it means is that Members of Congress and committees should give attention to these things that come before them, having in mind always, Mr. Chairman, the difficulties they sometimes encounter here about getting bills reported into the House, and difficulties also of getting them considered, which I grant is sometimes tense.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, the dual form of our Government, "an indissoluble Union of indestructible States," while one of the sources of our national strength has resulted in many and varied complex and complexing questions. Popular government in any form in a land of the extent and population of ours would be necessarily an intricate problem. Under our Constitution one of the elements of the problem is the constant conflict of authority between the States and the National Government. To maintain the constitutional equilibrium between the States and the United States, to preserve the former in all their integrity, and at the same time give full scope to the powers and attributes of nationality in the latter has demanded the highest wisdom and patriotism. It is therefore a tribute to the American people that to-day, more than a hundred years after the adoption of the Constitution, our national motto still expresses the true relationship between the States and the Federal Government. E pluribus unum-out of many one. Fortyfive separate and, within their jurisdiction, sovereign States, but one nation—80,000,000 people distributed among those States enjoying the blessings and charged with the responsibilities of local self-government, but one nation extending the protecting folds of its flag over States and people.

We hear much, it is true, of the dangers of centralization.

We are told that the States are abdicating their ancient rights and privileges in favor of the National Government. And we can not close our eyes to the fact that whenever government supervision or regulation or control is found necessary for the general welfare, there is a strong tendency on the part of the people of the several States to prefer to see it exercised by the Federal Government rather than by their respective States. But there is nothing unnatural in this. They see themselves relieved of the burden and the responsibility. They see substituted for the power of their States the irresistible power of the United States, representing, as it does, the combined power of all the States and of all the people. Such supervision or regula-tion or control is vastly more effective and costs the State noth-This explains the popularity of the antioleomargarine legislation, of national quarantine in its various forms, of the pure-food law, of the railway rate legislation. This tendency, therefore, is not necessarily an indication that the people are losing their old-time State pride or that they are less loyal, less devoted to their State. It is undoubtedly true that there are dangers in the tendency. It certainly should not be encouraged as to those matters which are within the strict province of the In the division of power under the Constitution grave responsibilities are devolved upon the States. Loyalty to the States, which is the sworn duty of all their citizens, is in itself loyalty to the Republic, for the States are the trustees of the Republic, and upon the manner in which they discharge their trust depends in large measure its future.

In point of fact there are on every hand tokens of that intense State pride which has characterized the American people ever since the Declaration of Independence. It was written of old that one star differeth from another star in glory," and it certainly was never truer than it is to-day that the stars that on the blue firmament of the flag represent the several States of the Union differ one from another in glory. You who come here from the State of New York insist that the star which represents your Empire State shines with a glory that is all its own; and we who come from the little State that lies nestled among the Green Mountains insist that the star which represents our State has a glory that is peculiarly its own; and so you who come from Virginia and Pennsylvania and Texas and Illinois and California, and all the other States, insist the star which on the flag represents your State has its own peculiar glory. And so to-day, as ever before, the citizens of each of the forty-five States are proud of their State. They rejoice in her achievements in peace They guard with jealous care her ancient rights and and war. They resent with just indignation any reflection upon her fair fame. They rejoice in the part vouchsafed to them in maintaining her honor and prestige, and, best of all, they see in all this nothing incompatible with their absolute and unswerving loyalty and devotion to the Republic.

Then, again, there are those who profess to believe that the dangers of centralization come from the tendency of the National Government toward self-aggrandizement, toward encroachment upon the authority of the States. Some of these now tell us that a new danger from the treaty-making power of the Government threatens the States. They call attention to the recent claim of the Empire of Japan that we have violated the treaty of 1894 in that the children of Japanese subjects domiciled in California are not permitted to attend the public schools in common with the children of citizens of that State, but have been segregated in schools of their own. I do not propose to discuss at this time the proposition whether the language of the treaty is sufficiently broad to justify the claim of Japan, nor in the brief period allotted me shall I consider the question of the wisdom of the treaty-making power undertaking to bind the National Government by such a treaty stipulation. But in view of the wide discussion that has resulted from Japan's claim and in view of the unjust criticism to which the President's course has subjected him, and particularly in view of the idle talk that has been heard about "coercing a sovereign State," I call the attention of the committee to the fundamental question that underlies these propositions—the abstract question whether the United States, by treaty stipulation with a foreign government, can lawfully undertake that the children of the subjects of that government domiciled in any one of the States of the Union shall have the same right to attend the public schools of that State as is enjoyed by the children of the citizens thereof.

No one will deny the far-reaching significance of the question. To many earnest citizens who have given little consideration to the scope of the treaty-making power of the United States the proposition involved is a startling one. Our systems of public instruction, which are jealously guarded as one of the bulwarks of the Republic and one of our priceless free institutions, are the offsprings of the several States. They are maintained and regulated by the States. And to the great majority of our people it has never occurred that the National Government could interfere in any manner with their management or control.

But the treaty-making power of the United States is broad and comprehensive. Section 2 of Article I of the Constitution provides that the President "shall have power, by and with the consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senate present concur." Section 10 of Article I provides that "no State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation." And Article VI provides that "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

The Constitution, then, confers upon the National Government the treaty-making power without qualifying words and provides that all treaties made under the authority of the nited States shall be a part of the supreme law of the land, shall spend no time upon the academic question whether the treaty-making power lies in grant or in sovereignty. whichever theory you please, the result, so far as the scope of the power in the Federal Government is concerned, is the same, If you insist that the Federal Government exercises the treatymaking power as one of the necessary powers of sovereignty, then the scope of the power is full, adequate, and complete. Or if you prefer to hold that the power was granted to the United States by sovereign States, you must remember that those States when sovereign were clothed with the treaty-making power, else they could not grant it to the Federal Government. having that power, they divested themselves of every vestige of it and conferred it all upon the National Government. This does not mean that there are not restrictions and limitations upon our treaty-making power. John C. Calhoun, whose iron logic led him to the last extreme of the States rights doctrine, set forth those limitations with force and clearness, as follows:

set forth those limitations with force and clearness, as follows:

But although the treaty-making power is exclusively vested, and without enumeration or specifications, in the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless subject to several important limitations.

It is, in the first place, strictly limited to questions inter alios; that is, to questions between us and foreign powers which require negotiation to adjust them. All such clearly appertain to it. But to extend the power behind these, be the pretext what it may, would be to extend it beyond its allotted sphere, and thus a palpable violation of the Constitution. It is, in the next place, limited by all the provisions of the Constitution which inhibit certain acts from being done by the Government or any of its departments, of which description there are many. It is also limited by such provisions of the Constitution as direct certain acts to be done in a particular way, and which prohibit the contrary, of which a striking example is to be found in that which declares that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations to be made by law." This not only imposes an important restriction on the power, but gives to Congress, as the lawmaking power, and to the House of Representatives, as a portion of Congress, the right to withhold appropriations, and thereby an important control over the treaty-making power whenever money is required to carry a treaty into effect, which is usually the case, especially in reference to those of much importance. There still remains another and more important limitation, but of a more general and indefinite character. It can enter into no stipulation calculated to change the character of the Government or to do that which can only be done by the Constitution-making power, or which is inconsistent with the nature and structure of the Government or the objects for which it was formed, among which it seems to be settled that it can not change or after the boundary of a State or cede any po

This was written in 1849. Forty years later, in 1889, the Supreme Court of the United States, in speaking of our treatymaking power, said this:

The treaty power, as expressed in the Constitution, is in terms unlimited, except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids or a change in the character of the Government or in that of one of the States, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter without its consent. But, with these exceptions, it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiation with a fereign country.

And the most cursory review of the events leading up to the establishment of the Republic shows conclusively that its founders fully understood that if the Constitution were adopted, the treaty power of the National Government would be unlimited except by those restraints above set forth. By the Articles of Confederation, adopted in 1781, the United States, in Congress assembled, was given the sole and exclusive right and power to make treaties, and the States were prohibited from entering into any treaty or alliance with any foreign power without the consent of Congress. The ratification in 1778 of the treaty with France, after the Articles of Confederation had been adopted and while they were pending before the States for ratification, was a recognition of the broad scope of the treaty power of Congress. From this time on, during the time these articles were in force, treaties were made with Great Britain, The Netherlands, Sweden, Prussia, and Morocco, and were ratified by Congress, although they contained stipulations seriously affecting many matters otherwise wholly within the jurisdiction of the States. In 1786, four years before the Constitution was adopted, the binding effect of some of these provisions upon the States began to be seriously discussed. This was particularly true as to the stipulation in the treaty of peace with Great Britain respecting debts due British subjects from American citizens. Congress took up the question whether these treaty provisions were paramount to State laws. In the course of an elaborate report, John Jay, the secretary of foreign affairs of the Confederation, said:

course of an elaborate report, John Jay, the secretary of foreign affairs of the Confederation, said:

The ninth article of the Confederation most expressly conveys to Congress the sole and exclusive right and power * * * of entering into treaties and alliances. When, therefore, a treaty is constitutionally made, ratified, and published by Congress it immediately becomes binding on the whole nation and superadded to the laws of the land without the intervention, consent, or flat of State legislatures. * * * The United States in Congress assembled have neither committed nor approved of any violation of the treaty. To their conduct no exceptions are taken; but to their justice an appeal is made relative to the conduct of particular States. The United States must, however, eventually answer for the conduct of their respective members, and for that and other reasons suggested by the nature of their sovereignty and the Articles of Confederation, your secretary thinks they have good right to insist and require that national faith and national treaties be kept and observed throughout the Union; for otherwise it would be in the power of a particular State, by injuries and infractions of treaties, to involve the whole confederacy in difficulties and war.

In his opinion it would highly become the dignity of the United States to act on such occasions with the most scrupulous regard to justice and candor toward the injured nation and with equal moderation and decision toward the delinquent State or States.

In the present case he thinks it would be proper to resolve:

1. That the legislatures of the several States can not of right pass any act or acts for interpreting, explaining, or construting a national treaty or any part or clause of it; nor for restraining, limiting, or in any manner impeding, retarding, or constitutionally made, ratified, and published they become, in virtue of the Confederation, part of the law of the land, and are not only independent of the will and power of such legislatures, but also binding, a

John Jay was a commanding figure in that period of great and historic characters. He was a delegate from New York to the Congress which convened in Philadelphia in 1774. He was a member of the Second Continental Congress, which met in 1775. He was our first minister to Spain, where he served during the later years of the Revolution. He was one of the peace commissioners that negotiated the treaty of peace with Great Britain, where he rendered invaluable services. He was Secretary of Foreign Affairs from 1784 until the adoption of the Constitution, when he became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. His wisdom and foresight was equaled only by the depth and sincerity of his patriotism, and his wide and varied experiences in national and international affairs enabled him to speak with authority. No one can read this report without being profoundly impressed with the fact that his contemporaries must have been fully apprised of the true significance of the provisions in the Constitution relating to the treaty power of the United States. The simple fact was: The United States had learned during the brief but eventful years of the Confederation that it was not the sole function of the treaty power to confer right and privileges upon foreign subjects on American soil; that the chief purpose of the power was to secure rights and privileges and protection for American citizens abroad, and that in order to accomplish this high purpose most successfully and effectively it was essential that the Government be able to reciprocate by treaty stipulations which should be binding upon the whole American people. Those were not the days when the people of the States were willing to concede any power to the National Government without full knowledge of the consequences of their All the ties that had bound the colonists together during the bitter night of the Revolution had burst asunder and, in place of a people working together in unity and concord, in place of a people working together in unity and concord, there stood forth thirteen petty republics, each racked by the intensest jealousy of all the others; each fearful lest the least concession of right or privilege for the common weal might open the way for the tyrant or the oppressor. John Fiske well describes the time as the critical period of our history. The representatives of the thirteen States in the Convention that framed the Constitution adopted the provisions respecting the treaty power deliberately and with full knowledge of their true import. It was their judgment that they had properly safeguarded the States by providing that a treaty, to be effective, must be ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate present. The Senate was to be composed exclusively of representatives of the States, and surely, said they, if two-thirds of these representatives concur in support of the provisions of a treaty it may be safely assumed that they contain nothing of serious detriment to any State. And the experience of more than a hundred years proves how rightly they judged.

This view of the scope of our treaty-making power is sustained by an unbroken line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as well as by many decisions of the State One of the first cases considered by the Supreme Court involving the question of the treaty power of the National Government was that of Ware v. Hylton. It is not only a leading case, but one of great historic interest. It was decided in 1796, seven years after the inauguration of the new Government under the Constitution. Washington was still President. The proceedings of the Constitutional Convention were still fresh in the minds of those who had participated in them, and the echoes of the fierce controversy that attended the adoption of the Constitution were still heard. Justice Chase, who wrote the principal opinion, who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and who has been described as "the torch that lighted up the revolutionary flame in Maryland," was a citizen of Maryland, where the controversy arose. Justice Pat-terson, who wrote a concurring opinion, had been a member of the Constitutional Convention, where he was largely instru-mental in shaping the provisions relative to the treaty power. Justice Wilson, who also concurred, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and one of the ablest men in the Constitutional Convention. Marshall and Patrick Henry were of counsel in the case. The fourth article of the treaty of peace with Great Britain provided for the payment of debts due British subjects from American citizens in the several Maryland, by an act of her legislature, had confiscated such debts due from her citizens. This action was brought to recover such a debt from Hylton, a citizen of Maryland, who had paid the larger part of the debt into the State treasury under the confiscating statute, and the question was whether the treaty stipulation was paramount to the Maryland statute.

the treaty stipulation was paramount to the Maryland statute. Chase, Patterson, Wilson, and Cushing, impressed by the uncommon magnitude of the subject, the bitter and exciting controversies it had provoked, and the far-reaching consequences by which their decision would be attended, although differing upon some matters of detail and in the mode of their reasoning, reached the conclusion that the treaty of 1783 was the supreme law, equal in its effect to the Constitution itself, in overruling all State laws upon the subject, and the words that British creditors should meet with no lawful impediment were as strong as the wit of man could devise to avoid all effects of sequestration, confiscation, or any other obstacle thrown in the way by any law particularly pointed against the recovery of such debts. The decision expanded from a statement of the contractual liability of an individual to an assertion that the treaty obligations of the nation were paramount to the laws of the individual States.

In the course of an eleborate oninion Justice Chase after

In the course of an elaborate opinion Justice Chase, after stating his belief that treaties made by Congress during the existence of the Confederation were superior to the laws of the States, said this:

States, said this:

If doubts could exist before the establishment of the present National Government, they must be entirely removed by the sixth article of the Constitution, which provides that "all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." There can be no limitation on the power of the people of the United States. By their authority the State constitutions were made, and by their authority the Constitution of the United States was established; and they had the power to change or abolish the State constitutions or to make them yield to the General Government and to treaties made by their authority. A treaty can not be the supreme law of the land—that is, of all the United States—if any act of a State legislature can stand in its way. If the constitution of a State (which is the fundamental law of the State and paramount in its legislature) must give way to a treaty and fall before it, can it be questioned whether the less power, an act of the State legislature, must not be prostrate? It is the deciared will of the people of the United States that every treaty made by the authority of the United States; shall be superior to the constitution and laws of any individual State; and their will alone is to decide. If a law of a State contrary to a treaty is not void, but voidable only by a repeal or nullification by a State legislature, this certain consequence follows, that the will of a small part of the United States may control or defeat the will of the whole.

For more than a century this case has been cited with approval, not only by the Supreme Court of the United States, but by many of the courts of last resort of the several States. In 1879 the Supreme Court, in the case of Hauenstein v. Lynham, held that our treaty with Switzerland was superior to the laws of Virginia. That treaty provided that citizens of Switzerland might inherit real estate situated in the United States, and if by the laws of the State in which it lay they could not hold it by reason of their being aliens they were given a reasonable time in which to sell it. Hauenstein, a citizen of Virginia, died possessed of real estate and without heirs, except certain citizens of Switzerland. By the laws of the State of Virginia an alien could not inherit property within the State, and it was claimed that the real estate escheated to the State, but the Swiss heirs contended that under the treaty they had the right to sell the land and avail themselves of the proceeds of the sale. The court sustained their contention. Justice Swayne, in rendering the opinion of the court, cited with approval the case of Ware v. Hylton, and after quoting largely from the opinion of Justice Chase, as "showing the views of a powerful legal mind at that early period, when the debates in the Convention which framed the Constitution must have been fresh in the memory of the leading jurists of the country," said this:

It must always be borne in mind that the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States are as much a part of the law of every State as its own local laws and constitution. This is a fundamental principle in our system of complex national policy. We have no doubt that this treaty is within the treaty-making power conferred by the Constitution, and it is our duty to give it full effect.

In 1889, in Jeofroy v. Riggs, the Supreme Court again reviewed the treaty-making power of the United States. Field, in rendering the decision of the court, after declaring that article 7 of the treaty of 1800 with France suspended during the existence of the treaty the statutes of Maryland, so far as they prevented citizens of France from taking by inheritance from citizens of the United States property, real or personal, situated therein, said this:

That the treaty power of the United States extends to all proper subjects of negotiation between our Government and the governments of other nations is clear. It is also clear that the protection which should be afforded to the citizens of one country owning property in another and the manner in which that property may be transferred, devised, or inherited are fitting subjects for such negotiation and of regulation by mutual stipulations between the two countries. As commercial intercourse increases between different countries the residences of citizens of one country within the territory of the other naturally follows, and the removal of their disability from allenage to hold, transfer, and inherit property in such cases tends to promote amicable relations. Such removal has been within the present century the frequent subject of treaty arrangement.

In all the times that our treaty-making power has been under review by the Supreme Court of the United States not once has it been suggested by the court that any provision of the treaty under consideration was beyond the treaty power. In every instance the question has been whether the State law in question contravened the stipulations of the treaty. If so, then it must yield to the supreme law of the land.

In 1855 the supreme court of California reviewed the treatymaking power of the National Government in the case of The People v. Gerke & Clark. The State denied the power of the Federal Government to make a treaty which should remove the disability of alienage as against the laws of the State respecting inheritance of lands situated in that State. In upholding the treaty the court called attention to the fact that cases have frequently arisen where aliens have claimed to inherit by virtue of treaty provisions analogous to the one under consideration, and that all of them were enforced in favor of the foreign claimant. The fact was noted that in none of these cases was the question raised as to the power of the Federal Government to make the treaty. Attention was called to the fact that, although it had been the practice of the Government from an early period after the ratification of the Constitution, its power was now for the first time disputed. The court then said:

now for the first time disputed. The court then said:

One of the arguments at the bar against the extent of this power of treaty is that it permits the Federal Government to control the internal policy of the States, and in the present case to alter materially the statutes of distribution.

If this was so to the full extent claimed, it might be a sufficient answer to say that it is one of the results of the compact, and, if the grant be considered too improvident for the safety of the States, the evil can be remedied by the Constitution-making power. I think, however, that no such consequence follows as is insisted. The statutes of distribution are not altered or affected. Alienage is the subject of the treaty. Its disability results from political reasons which arose at an early period of the history of civilization and which the enlightened advancement of modern times and changes in the political and social condition of nations have rendered without force or consequence. The disability to succeed to property is alone removed, the character of the person is made politically to undergo a change, and then the statute of distribution is left to its full effect, unaltered and unimpaired in word or sense. If there is one object more than another which belongs to our political relations and which ought to be the subject of treaty regulations, it is the extension of this comity which is so highly favored by the liberal spirit of the age and so conducive in its tendency to the peace and amity of nations.

Even if the effect of this power was to abrogate to some extent the legislation of the States, we have authority for admitting it if it does not exceed the limitations which we have cited from the work of Mr. Calhoun and laid down as the rule to which we yield our assent.

In 1879 a case of interest and importance, bearing upon the treaty power of the United States, was determined by the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon. Our treaty with China, then in force, declared that-

Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may be then enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

In 1872 Oregon passed the statute which provided that-

It shall be unlawful to employ any Chinese laborers on any street, or part of street, of any city or incorporated town of this State, or on any public works or public improvement of any character, except as a punishment for crime; and all contracts which any person or corporation may have for the improvement of any such street, or part of street, or public works or improvements of any character, shall be null and void from and after the date of any employment of any Chinese laborers thereon by the contractor.

And the question involved was whether this statute was in contravention of the provisions of the treaty then in force.

The court, in rendering its decision, declared:

Contravention of the provisions of the treaty then in force.

The court, in rendering its decision, declared:

This treaty, until it is abrogated or modified by the political department of the Government, is the supreme law of the land, and the courts are bound to enforce it fully and fairly. An honorable man keeps his word under all circumstances, and an honorable nation abides by its treaty obligations, even to its own disadvantage.

The State can not legislate so as to interfere with the operation of this treaty or limit or deny the privileges or immunities guaranteed by it to the Chinese residents in this country.

It will be observed that the treaty recognizes the right of the Chinese to change their home and allegiance and to visit this country and become permanent residents thereof, and as such residents it guarantees to them all the privileges and immunities that may be enjoyed here by the citizens or subjects of any nation. Therefore, if the State can restrain and limit the Chinese in their labor and pursuits within its limits, it may do the same by the subjects of Great Britain, France, or Germany.

True this act does not undertake to exclude the Chinese from all kinds and fields of employment. But if the State, notwithstanding the treaty, may prevent the Chinese or the subjects of Great Britain from working upon street improvements and public works, it is not apparent why it may not prevent them from engaging in any kind of employment or working at any kind of labor.

Nor can it be said with any show of reason or fairness that the treaty does not contemplate that the Chinese shall have the right to labor while in the United States. It impliedly recognizes their right to make this country their home, and expressly permits them to become permanent residents here; and this necessarily implies the right to live and to labor for a living. It is difficult to conceive a grosser case of keeping the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope than to invite Chinese to become permanent residents of

It is firmly settled that the United States may by treaty stipulations remove all the disabilities of alienage affecting property rights and place the persons thus relieved on an equality with the citizens of the United States with respect to those rights, the laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. It may provide by treaty that the citizens of a foreign country living in any one of the States may acquire real and personal property by gift, purchase, or inheritance; that he may hold it or dispose of it by sale, gift, or will as freely and on the same terms as may be done by an American citizen. It may provide that the foreign citizen may have the same access to the courts of the several States as is given to their citizens, It may provide that he shall be subjected to no greater burdens of taxation than is borne by the citizens of the State in which he lives

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. FOSTER of Vermout. Yes; certainly.
Mr. GARRETT. This is speculative, of course, but this is a very interesting subject. In this country I suppose there is not a State but that has a statute preventing perpetuities in the holding of estates. Now, suppose the Federal Government should enter into a treaty with a foreign nation whereby it should stipulate that the citizens of that country might hold title to property here as they hold it at home. Would the gentleman think that would be sustained by the courts?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Well, I will say in answer to the question, Mr. Chairman, that up to this time the United States Government has never undertaken to confer upon aliens any right or privilege that was not enjoyed by citizens of the United States. All the Government has undertaken to do so far in the direction indicated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gar-RETT] has been to relieve the foreigner of the disabilities of alienage and to place him, so far as his property rights were concerned, upon an equality with citizens of our country.

Mr. GARRETT. That is true.
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Nor is it to be supposed that our Government would undertake to confer upon aliens by treaty stipulations rights and privileges not enjoyed by our own citizens, or that the Senate would ratify a treaty containing such a provision.

Mr. GARRETT. In all the Southern States we have laws for separate schools for the colored and white races

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I see the gentleman's point. Mr. GARRETT. Suppose a treaty were entered into between this country and some other country giving them admission to the schools

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. There, again, Mr. Chairman, I think I have given my answer already to the question. If the State provides that her colored citizens shall be taught in separate schools and her white citizens shall be taught in separate schools, then I repeat that I have found no instance in our history where the treaty-making power of the National Government has undertaken to interfere in any way with that regulation. The furthest is has gone is to say that the foreigner shall enjoy the same rights and privileges in this country as are enjoyed by the citizens of our country or of the most favored nation. Do I make myself plain to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I think I understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. HAYES. I want to ask the gentleman from Vermont if his researches will enable him to answer whether, if the Government of the United States should undertake to make a treaty such as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] suggests, it would be a lawful and valid treaty under the Constitution?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It is my judgment that the power of the Government in this behalf is confined to the removal of the disabilities of alienage. It certainly has never been suggested by any modern government that it could, by its treaty-making power, exalt the alien above its citizens. I repeat that our Government has never undertaken by treaty stipulations to do this. All it has undertaken to do has been to place the aliens upon an equality with our citizens. In some cases in the very earliest treaties the stipulation was to the effect that the people of the foreign country should not be considered aliens; that they should be considered on an equality with American citizens with respect to the matter therein referred to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I will yield.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman inform the committee by what authority the States established what is known as "common" or "public" schools?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. By their own authority.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The reserved right of the State.
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I would say that the State is under no obligation to the National Government to maintain the public schools or any kind of schools.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does it not grow out of the fact that the States reserve to themselves all powers except those expressly given away to the National Government, or necessarily implied, and, having reserved its power, these schools are promulgated under the police power of the State?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Aside from the treaty power of the Government, the maintenance and control of the public schools in each State are within the exclusive jurisdiction of that State.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

I want to ask the gentleman in reference to a question asked him a while ago in regard to the school proposition. The language in the treaty, or at least the one that the gentleman considered, the Oregon treaty, was not that they should enjoy the same privileges as the citizens of this country, but enjoy the same privileges as were enjoyed by the most favored nation. I take it that would refer to the citizens of other countries who were provided for by treaty.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. Now, suppose that some country had a treaty with our Government that the children, we will say, should enjoy all the privileges of our public school system wherever they might be located or situated in this country; then with that kind of a clause in the treaty under consideration, even though the subjects were of a different color from us, would it not fol-low that the courts would have to hold that they should have the same privileges that children of other nations enjoyed?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly. So that if the State in which they lived had no provision respecting the separation of white and colored children of the citizens of the State, then, in my humble opinion, a statute of the State providing that the colored subjects of that nation should be segregated in schools of their own would have to yield to the stipulation of the treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us put a specific case. Suppose, in the case of California, that we have a provision in the treaty with England that the children of English citizens should enjoy the same school privileges as the children of our own citizens.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The subjects of Great Britain, it would be

Mr. NORRIS. The subjects of Great Britain, it would be:

ves. sir.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. They may be white or black. Mr. NORRIS. Now, in a treaty with Japan, that would provide that the children of Japanese citizens should enjoy the same privileges as those of the most favored nation.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That would place them on an equality with the subjects of Great Britain, but the subjects of Great Britain include nearly all races and colors.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The situation under the circumstances detailed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] would be precisely the same as it would be if our treaty with Japan provided that the citizens of Japan should have the right to attend the public schools of the State equally with and on the same terms as was enjoyed by the citizens of the State.

Mr. NORRIS. It would obliterate the color line unless the State itself provides the color line for its own citizens.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes. I state again what I have already said. If the State provides in its statute the color line for its own citizens in the public schools, then, up to this time, the Government of the United States, in its treaty-making power, has not undertaken to confer upon any foreign subject, even those of the most favored nation, a right greater than that enjoyed by the citizens of the State respecting those schools.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not claim that it could.
Mr. GARRETT. The conditions of such a treaty as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] suggests would be met by a State assuring to those children of foreign birth an equal number of days, equal opportunities in point of study. No reasonable construction of such a treaty would mean that they must admit them to the same building. If so, it would be just as reasonable to say-with the permission of the gentleman from Vermont—that by treaty they could compel them to sit by a particular individual or by a particular colored individual in a building after they had gotten in there. The conditions would be met by giving just the same number of days, with the same financial support to the school, and the same number of studies in the school.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I want a little informa-The gentleman from Vermont has evidently given this subject a good deal of investigation. Suppose the treaty-making power of this Government should, by stipulation in a treaty with any foreign power, undertake to regulate the school question in California or any other State, and should specifically require the same treatment to be shown to all the children of all the nationalities. Suppose that should be the case, would that have any validity at all in the face of the constitutional enactment or the statutory enactment of the State of California? In other words, could the President and the Senate, by the exercise of the treaty-making power, annul and abrogate a statute made by the President and both Houses of Congress?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. To the latter question I say, "Yes." It has been done repeatedly in our history. But to the first part of the question I repeat what I think the gentleman could not have heard. He must have been absent at the time I made the statement before. Our Government, up to this time, has never undertaken to confer any right upon foreigners that was not enjoyed or that was greater than the rights enjoyed by our citizens. If a State provides by law that the white children shall be educated in separate schools, the colored citizens in separate schools, then, up to this time, the Government of the United States has not gone further than to say that people coming from a foreign country might have the same privileges in those schools that American citizens have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. I yield twenty minutes more to the gentle-Mr. GILLETT.

man from Vermont.

Mr. GILBERT. What I meant to ask was, conceding that attampted—I am supposing heretofore no such power had been attempted—I am supposing a case where there is a Federal statute directly in conflict with the stipulations of the treaty-would not the statute, being last in point of time, necessarily repeal the provisions of the treaty, and has not the Supreme Court so held?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; a treaty stipulation is unquestionably superseded by a later statute of Congress.

Mr. GILBERT. I understand the law to be that an act of Congress abrogates a treaty.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Oh, yes; an act of Congress that is made later than the treaty. Certainly, that is true, because the treaty is only a part of the law of the land, and the Constitution is also a part of the law of the land, and the laws of Congress are a part of the law of the land.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to follow the gentleman with great care, but I am not certain what limitations he has placed upon the treaty-making power of the Government. For instance, he certainly would not say that the treaty-making power might modify the essential character of the Federal Government. It could not abolish the House of Representatives.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That is correct.
Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Why not?
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Why, Mr. Chairman, take the case of any government in the world that confessedly exercises the treaty-making power as an incident of sovereignty. No one would claim for a moment that that nation by a treaty stipula-tion could change the form of its government. That would be revolution. Much more would it be revolution in our case. We have a written Constitution that prescribes the form of our Government, that establishes the legislative department of the Government, and that guarantees a republican form of government to the several States. No one claims that the treaty power gives any government the right to change its form of government. And our treaty power is further limited, as I have already pointed out, by those commands and inhibitions that are contained in the Constitution itself.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Is not the gentleman therefore compelled to admit that the treaty-making power can not violate the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. That treaties as well as laws must be made under and in pursuance of the Constitution.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly. Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Would not the gentleman practically hold that since the treaty-making power can not abolish one of the powers expressly granted to the Federal Government, it can not invade the powers reserved to the States?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not concede that. The States might have reserved to themselves the right to make treaties. They might have limited the treaty-making power. But they did not do so. They conferred the whole power upon the National Government, and expressly forbade any State to exercise the power.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. And for that reason the treaty-making power could not interfere with the right of the

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. In reply to the gentleman, I fear I have talked in vain if I have not made myself plain upon this subject. I have already quoted from Calhoun on the subject of the limitation of the treaty-making power. Let me read a few words from an opinion given by him when he was Secretary of State away back in 1844. It is true that the treaty-making power is limited by certain provisions in the Constitution, but that the National Government can not interfere with matters which but for the treaty-making power would be ex-clusively within the control of the State I deny. The Government has done that repeatedly through its treaty-making power and has been sustained by the Supreme Court. Let me read. what Mr. Calhoun said:

The treaty-making power has, indeed, been regarded to be so comprehensive as to embrace, with few exceptions, all questions that can possibly arise between us and other nations and which can only be adjusted by their mutual consent, whether the subject-matter be comprised among the delegated or the reserve powers.

That is John C. Calhoun in 1844. There is no question about that proposition. It has been recognized by the Supreme Court and by the courts of the States from the foundation of the

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. If the gentleman will permit me, the cases he has read have, almost all of them, related to the conventions between this Government and foreign govern-ments concerning property relations, admitted to be a proper subject of international conventions.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Concerning disabilities

alienage.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Concerning the rights of aliens to hold property in foreign countries.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. To hold property in this country, to take property in this country, to inherit property in this country, to sell and dispose of property in this country, to reside in this country on the same terms with the subjects of the mostfavored nations, and so on. In other words, I will say to the gentleman, aside from the disabilities of alienage affecting the right of suffrage, the treaty-making power of the Government during the hundred and more years of our existence as a nation has dealt with almost every disability of alienage by treaty stipulations.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Now, if I may further trouble the gentleman, I fail to understand on what ground the gentleman would limit the right of the treaty-making power to invade the Federal Government as, for instance, to abolish the House of Representatives. That would permit the treaty-making power to go beyond the powers which the Government has and invade the reserved rights of the States in local affairs.

Mr. GILBERT. Let me put it in this shape: How can the

Mr. Gilbert. Let me put it in this shape. How can the treaty-making power exercise a function that is not delegated to the General Government at all?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Gilbert] does not state the case with exactness. I contend, as I have repeated over and over again, that the States did delegate expressly to the National Government the entire treaty-making power. If they were sovereign States when they delegated that power, then they possessed the treaty-making power as fully as it was ever possessed by any sovereign power. While the States did reserve to themselves certain powers, they divested themselves wholly of the treaty-making power and conferred it all upon the United States.

Mr. GILBERT. The Government of the United States is expressly a Government of delegated powers. Now, if the treaty-making power should undertake to exercise a function that is not delegated to the Federal Government, then that attempt to exercise it on the part of the treaty-making power would be null and void.

Mr. HAYES. Just one question. The gentleman has already stated that the State government is under no obligation to maintain public schools or to educate anybody.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.
Mr. HAYES. I presume the gentleman will not deny that the Congress of the United States would have no authority under the Constitution to pass a statute compelling State educa-tion, for example, of aliens, or regulating the conduct of the public schools in any State.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly. Mr. HAYES. But still the gentleman claims, as I have gathered, that the treaty-making power, the President, and the Senate of the United States might by treaty compel the State of California, for example, to do in this regard what the Congress of the United States under the Constitution could not do.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not say that. I want to reverse it a little. I say this: That the treaty-making power of the National Government can by treaty stipulation provide that the subjects of Japan may enjoy in the State of California, equally with the citizens of the State, such public schools as the State of California does maintain.

Mr. HAYES. Does, then, the gentleman maintain— Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I can not yield any further, because I have not the time. The gentleman has stated the question and I have answered him.

Mr. HAYES. One other suggestion and I am done. tleman would doubtless admit that the courts have decided that a treaty is not of the same character as the statutes passed by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It is on an equality with the

Mr. HAYES. The courts have decided that a statute of the United States is of a higher character.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Oh, no; treaties and laws of Congress are equally the supreme law of the land with the Constitution.

Mr. HAYES. Equal? Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. If a statute of Congress is passed later than the treaty, it supersedes it if relating to the same subject-matter.

Mr. HAYES. Then I am mistaken. Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. There is no question about that. As I have already shown, the treaty-making power may provide that the foreign subject may be relieved of all the disabilities of alienage affecting the rights of property.

Aside from the treaty-making power, all these matters are in the exclusive jurisdiction of the State; yet whenever the United States includes any of these provisions in a treaty the authority of the State must yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. My time is very limited, but I will yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the gentleman this: Does the gentleman take the position that treaties are the supreme law of the land, or only such treaties as are made under the authority of the United States?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. A treaty must be constitutionally

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, then, if there be a power such as is not delegated, but is reserved to the State, does the gentleman think that the President and the Senate and a foreign country can exercise that power?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Well, I might read to the gentle-man from John C. Calhoun. I have read some from it already.

I think he covers the whole ground.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman contend that what he has read from John C. Calhoun covers the point I am asking about now?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I certainly do. But repeat your question, please.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Whether, in connection with the exercise of power, a given power which has not been delegated to the Federal Government, but under the eleventh amendment is reserved to the States or the people, the action by treaty of the President, the Senate, and a foreign country will control, notwithstanding the action of a State?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. If the Constitution provides, as I have already indicated in what I quoted from John C. Calhoun, that a certain thing shall be done in a certain way, then it must be done in that way, and not by treaty. For instance, as I have read from Mr. Calhoun, the Constitution provides that no money shall go out of the Treasury except by appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not the point, if the gentleman will pardon me. I am not asking him about those matters concerning which the Constitution expressly lodges power in a certain department of the Federal Government. That is what the gentleman is talking about, where the other department undertakes to usurp it by treaty.

But I am talking about that vast reservoir of powers that are not delegated to the Federal Government, but are reserved in amendment 11 to the State and the people. Now, does the gentleman contend that the Senate, the President, and a foreign country may change the Constitution of the United States by exercising a power that is not delegated to the Federal Government, but is reserved to the States?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do contend that the treaty-making power is not limited to the powers that are granted to the Federal Government expressly by the Constitution. Now, take this question of disabilities of aliens. Is there any question about that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a different matter; a question in my opinion that is delegated. Now, let us talk about a matter about the nondelegation of which there is no doubt. Suppose that the Federal Government undertook in a treaty to make any regulations for the benefit of a foreign power concerning the trial of a man in a court of justice in a State for petty larceny. Do you pretend that the Federal Government could enter into any valid, binding obligation that would be constitutional and therefore valid, that would not be set aside by the States upon a subject-matter everybody admits is a reserved and not a delegated power?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Why, Mr. Chairman, I do not for a moment claim that the Government could go further than to provide that the accused, if an alien, should have the same rights, be accorded the same treatment, and be subject to the same penalty as if he were a citizen of this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman— Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Let me go on and finish this. I have undertaken to do throughout my remarks is to show how far, in my judgment, the National Government can go under its treaty-making power respecting the removal of disabilities of aliens living within the United States.

WILLIAMS. In other words, the gentleman contends that the Federal Government, or rather the President, the Senate, and Japan, for that is what we are dealing with

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The treaty-making power, I call it. Mr. WILLIAMS. That the treaty-making power can control, amend, alter, or repeal a State statute concerning the management of schools established by the State, paid for by the State, and engaged in the business of education-a business reserved to the State?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. If the gentleman had heard all I have said upon the subject, I do not think he would undertake to state the case in this way. Let me say again for his benefit that what I have said is, that the United States, by treaty stipulation, might relieve the subjects of a foreign power of the disabilities of alienage respecting the public schools. And the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] seems to concede that the disabilities of alienage are within the jurisdiction of the treaty-making power of the Federal Government. Consider for a moment some of the provisions of this very treaty with Japan. This will indicate to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Wil-LIAMS] the scope of the treaty-making power as exercised in these latter days.

I read from Article I:

The citizens or subjects of each of the two high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party, and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property.

Mr. GILBERT. That does not touch it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That does not touch the school question, and I desire to say that I stated distinctly at the start that I was not considering the question whether the language of the treaty was sufficiently broad to justify Japan's claim.

They shall have free access to the courts of justice in pursuit and defense of their rights; they shall be at liberty equally with native citizens or subjects to choose and employ lawyers, advocates, and representatives to pursue and defend their rights before such courts, and in all other matters connected with the administration of justice they shall enjoy all the rights and privileges enjoyed by native citizens or subjects.

In whatever relates to rights of residence and travel; to the possession of goods and effects of any kind; to the succession to personal estate by will or otherwise, and the disposal of property of any sort and in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the citizens or subjects of each contracting party shall enjoy in the territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights, and shall be subject to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native citizens or subjects of citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation.

The citizens or subjects of coche of the company of the citizens of subjects of the most-favored nation.

The citizens or subjects of each of the contracting parties shall enjoy in the territories of the other entire liberty of conscience, and, subject to the laws, ordinances, and regulations, shall enjoy the right of private or public exercise of their worship, and also the right of burying their respective countrymen, according to their religious customs, in such suitable and convenient places as may be established and maintained for that nurpose.

They shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatever, to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are or may be paid by native citizens or subjects, or citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

A consideration of these far-reaching provisions will show the scope of the power given to and exercised by the National Government respecting treaties. One of the most important of these provisions is that relating to the courts. Those who contend that the Government has not the power to say by treaty stipulation that aliens may enjoy the schools of the States on equal terms with their citizens say truly that the States are under no obligations to the National Government to maintain any schools. It is equally true that the States are under no obligations to the National Government to maintain courts of justice. They are as much the creature of the individual States as are the public schools. And yet the Government has stipulated, as it does in this treaty with Japan, that aliens may have access to such courts as the States maintain for the protection of their rights and the redress of their wrongs equally with and on the same terms as the citizens of those States; and no one has successfully denied its power to do this. If the Government can do all these things for the alien, the conclusion is irresistible that it may guarantee the child alien, who is in no way responsible for the circumstances in which he is found, that he may enjoy the public schools of the State in which he lives equally with and on the same terms as the citizens of that To say to the child alien that "in whatever relates to right of residence he shall enjoy in the territory of the United States the same privileges, liberties, and rights as native citizens" means for him protection from those conditions that would dwarf or injure his inner life, as well as protection from outward violence.

As I said at the start, I am not discussing whether such a provision is contained expressly or impliedly in our treaty with Japan. That is for the executive department of the Government to determine. Nor am I considering the wisdom of such a provision. If it is contained in the treaty and if it is deemed unwise, there is a proper and honorable method by which to secure its modification. But if it is contained in the treaty, so long as the treaty remains in force it is binding upon the conscience of the people of the State. As the Supreme Court declared in 1893:

The United States are a sovereign and independent nation, and are vested by the Constitution with the entire control of international relations and with all the powers of government necessary to maintain that control and to make it effective. The only government of this country which other nations recognize or treat with is the Government of the Union, and the only American flag known throughout the world is the flag of the United States.

And so long as the treaty remains in force it is the sworn duty of the President to enforce its provisions as a part of the supreme law of the land, and in doing this he shall not be charged with attempting to coerce a sovereign State. For while the individual States within their sphere are supreme, the power of the National Government within its jurisdiction is "absolute It extends over all the people and to the and uncontrollable." and uncontrollable." It extends over an the people and to the farthest corner of the remotest State. And the President in executing the laws of the nation wields the combined power, "the absolute and uncontrollable power," of fourscore millions of sovereign people.

From the days of Benjamin Franklin, our first and still our greatest diplomat, the American people have insisted that our foreign relations should be grounded in the highest morality and justice. Our foreign relations have become one of the most important functions of the Government. Our own growth and expansion during the last hundred years, and the contraction of the world through the extinction of distance, have brought the nations of the earth to our door and have taken us to their door. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are con-stantly in foreign lands. They are there for business, for pleas-In addition to the tourists who come to our country from lands we have a million immigrants per year. These ure. In addition to the tourists who come to our country other lands we have a million immigrants per year. people leave kindred and friends at home and form new friendships here. Hundreds of thousands of them return each year, leaving kindred and friends here. Our vast foreign commerce brings us into contact with the other nations of the earth, for the products of our field and our factory go to nearly every harbor in the world. And so it comes to pass in these days of modern development and modern enterprise and modern invention and modern unification that no nation lives unto itself Our diplomacy has assumed new proportions. And in all her foreign relations the great Republic standing for equality of opportunity must continue to shape her conduct by the principles of the highest morality and justice. [Applause.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss the pres Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss the present economic and political situation. As the close of the Fifty-ninth Congress is rapidly approaching, it may not be out of place briefly to review the history of the great American parties, to consider their underlying principles, to compare their achievements, and to analyze their attitudes with reference to the future.

The most amazing fact in all the amazing history of the United States is the vitality of the Democratic party. It is as eternal as justice, with which it is synonymous; as indestructible as truth, for which it stands. No other political organization ever survived such revolutions of human thought and action as those through which it has passed intact, unawed, and undismayed. Frequently majorities, fascinated by the lights that quiver about the rot of empire and of greed, by the glamor of concentered wealth, the pageantry of power, have rejected its pure and salutary teaching. Frequently it has come unto its own and its own received it not. Frequently its enemies have pronounced it dead, but always they have seen it rise with added stature and redoubled strength to press anew the conflict for the people's rights. [Applause.] The Democracy is imperishable because it rests on an imperishable doctrine—the doctrine of equal rights. When first the human heart was stirred with pity for the wrongs of man democracy began. The first tear that quivered in compassion for human woe and want was the first Democratic platform. The most tragic struggle of all the ages of God has been the struggle between those who loved the people and wished to see them prosperous and free and those who distrusted, exploited, and oppressed them.

The fundamental division in every nation and in every time has been between the overburdened many and the underburdened few, between the masses and the masters, between the advocates of the people's dominancy and the people's subordination. Even when republics were to be established the same division has been observable among those summoned to devise a system of government. The American Revolution was equally the most notable and successful contest for popular rights in mortal records. It dedicated a virgin world to liberty. dominated and transfigured by a valorous devotion to the principles of equality and brotherhood. The motives which prompted the colonists to commit their lives and fortunes to the issue of unequal conflict were expressed in the Declaration of Independence, an instrument so molded in the eloquence and the justness of human rights that it will be recognized forever as the permanent constitution of liberty, the chief classic in the literature of freedom. [Applause.] It was the inspiration of the Revolution, and the Supreme Court of the United States has officially declared it to contain the spirit of our Government. The essence of that celebrated document was in the announcement of the truths it proclaimed to be self-evident, the truths that men are created equal, that they are endowed by the Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that to secure these rights governments are constituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. tremendous significance that the author of this immortal proclamation, Thomas Jefferson, was also the founder of the Democratic party. [Applause.]

When the Declaration of Independence flowered from his brain and pen, the Democratic party of the United States had been definitely inaugurated. For fifty years Jefferson remained the world's most conspicuous defender of human rights, the leader of the Democratic party. He was the opponent of imperialism and monopoly, a disciple of equality. He believed in the people; he was devoted to their interests. He championed both the capacity and the right of the people to govern them-selves. "I am not among those," he said, "who fear the people; they and not the rich are our dependence for continued freedom." "Again he said: "The people are our only reliance for the preservation of our liberty." Again he said: "No other depositaries of power than the people themselves have ever been found which did not end in converting to their own profit the earnings of those committed to their charge." It was fitting that the founder and the leader of the Democratic party should have been so forcible an exponent of the people's cause. eighty years after the death of Jefferson, sixty years after the death of his great successor, Jackson, another leader has arisen to illustrate in his life, to glorify in his utterance, the permanence of the Democracy and the beneficence of its principles in William Jennings Bryan. [Applause.] Thus the Democratic party of the United States began with the United States. It has destroyed the various parties with which oppression and greed have successively opposed it, the Federalist party, the Whig party, and minor organizations, and it is only a matter of time, such is the vitality of its beliefs, until it sends its latest adversary, the Republican party, to join its departed prede-cessors. [Applause.]

I said that even in assemblies gathered to frame systems of governments for republics the line of division was observable between those who upheld and those who doubted the capacity of the people for self-rule, between those who would give the people as much to do with government as possible and those who would give the people as little to do with government as possible, between democracy and aristocracy. In the Constitutional Convention of 1787, which devised our present Federal system, the followers of Jefferson represented the forces of popular government, while Alexander Hamilton, a man of extraordinary ability, led the element which distrusted the people. The tendencies typified by Hamilton and Jefferson in the formative years of the Republic have constituted the basic battle line between American political parties throughout our history. Democratic party is the only American political party that has maintained a continuous existence from the beginning of the nation to the present, and to-day it proudly reasserts the tend-encies and principles of Jefferson. The party which first followed Hamilton and his aristocratic teachings was the Federalist party. It crumbled before the repeated assaults of the Democracy and was succeeded by the Whig party. The Whig party in its turn succumbed and the present Republican party took its place. To-day Hamilton and Jefferson live again in the Republican and Democratic parties. The Republicans reverence Hamilton as their father god, their tutelary deity and saint, and they have established lordly clubs bearing his name in the great cities. We have examined Jefferson's ideas in order to ascertain the origin and inspiration of the Democratic party; now let us investigate the beliefs of Hamilton in order to grasp the aim and mission of the Republican party.

In the Constitutional Convention of 1787 Hamilton proposed a plan of government for the United States, a plan which provided that the President and Senators should hold office for life, subject only to impeachment, and that the Federal authorities should appoint the governors of the States, who were to have a veto over all State legislation, these governors to have virtual life The people of the States were to have no authority in the matter. In a speech before the Convention "he acknowledged himself," to quote exactly from Madison's minutes, "not to think favorably of republican government, but addressed his remarks to those who did think favorably of it," in order to try to persuade them "to tone their government as high as possible." Again, in giving the Convention his ideas of government, he said that in his private opinion he had no scruple in declaring the British Government the best in the world, and that he doubted whether anything short of it would do in America. As to the Executive, he said before the Convention that the English model was the only good one on the subject. Let us not forget that the English Government was and is a monarchy. Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, of Massachusetts, one of the Republican leaders in the Senate of to-day, says in his Life of Hamilton that Hamilton did not believe in democracy as a system of government; that he believed in class influence and class representation, a strong government, and in an aristocratic republic. Such were the views of the man whom Republicans acclaim as founder and as saint-views which contradict the spirit and question the stability of American institutions. It is little won-der that the Republican party which traces its birth, through Whig and Federalist ancestry, to the aristocrat who doubted the people and who would have subjected the masses to the classes, today shows its loyalty to its origin through violation in the Philippines of the principle of government by consent of the governed and through destruction in the entire United States of the principle of equal rights by a system of tariff taxation which impoverishes the many and upbuilds the few. The monarchical impulse is seen in the Republican President to-day, who tries to regulate everything in the country from the size of families to the method of spelling. [Laughter.] When he gets through with Congress he brandishes the big stick above the cradle and the dictionary. The Republican party in its wild career has piled Pelion on Ossa, Root on South America, Taft on Cuba, and Roosevelt on Noah Webster. [Laughter.] Since the President has begun to reform the dictionary the American people are preparing to give him an instance of simplified spelling he may not appreciate. They are going to spell President, B-r-y-a-n. [Laughter and applause.]

Oppression finds its climax and avarice its crown in the present Republican tariff system. It is the most effective instrument of public spoliation that greed has yet fashioned or tyranny devised. Its own history is the most emphatic exponent of ny. If there is anything a Republican hates it is [Laughter.] When the American Republic began it was chiefly an agricultural country, and for more than twenty years it so remained. The war of 1812 with Great Britain closed our ports and gave an impulse to domestic manufacture. Large sections of the country turned their attention and their capital in that direction. The close of the war brought an influx of goods from Europe, and the young industries hardly able to stand were threatened with extinction. President Madison, in his message of December, 1815, recommended a tariff on for-eign goods sufficiently high to shield the youthful industries until they could care for themselves. The tariff of 1816 was the result, a tariff averaging 20 per cent, a tariff recommended by a Democratic President and adopted by a Democratic Congress. Thus the Democratic party in 1816, forty years before the Republican party was born, through a 20 per cent tariff preserved American industry in the hour of its real peril. Today the Republican party, with a tariff ranging from 50 to 100 per cent, pampers American industry in the period of its greatest strength. [Applause.] Secretary Shaw, the Republican Cabinet officer, said recently that the American people should be willing to pay a little more in order to help American manufacturers, and so they were ninety years ago when American manufacturers needed help. But the people are unwilling and unable to pay from 50 to 100 per cent more for almost every article of necessity and use to these manufacturers to-day when they have become the richest and most powerful in the world, able to meet and master competition anywhere on the globe, when through combination and monopoly they have become so omnipotent and so merciless that the question is no longer how to use the people's means for them, but to protect the people's

From 1816 to 1846 the American people discussed and tested every phase of the tariff question. In 1828 and in 1842 high protective tariffs were enacted with rates running as high as 50 per cent. But the final judgment of the people was against the high protective system, and in 1846 the Democratic party established a tariff law on the principle of revenue, the principle that no higher rates should be levied than necessary to furnish revenue for the expense of government economically administered, a tariff law which met with almost universal approbation. The original advocates of protection never urged it as a permanent policy; under the leadership of Clay they defended it only as a means of putting new and inexperienced industry on its feet. The idea of perpetually transferring a large per-centage of the people's earnings through import taxes to the manufacturing classes, regardless of how powerful and how prosperous, how independent of both foreign and domestic competition they may become, was not dreamed of in the United States until the Republican party, out of its wedlock with criminal wealth, produced a school of stand-patters, of whom Secretary Shaw is perhaps the most exhilarating example. [Laughter and applause.] Under the Democratic tariff of 1846 and its successor, the tariff of 1857; the country enjoyed the most general and most genuine prosperity of its history. The crisis of 1857 was a speculative disturbance emanating from the very exuberance of the times, a flurry due to the excessive purchasing of western lands and the construction of too many railroads for the immediate needs of the country. The Democratic tariff of 1846 was so satisfactory that the Whig Administration of 1848 did not dare or desire to change it.

James G. Blaine, one of the ablest and most uncompromising Republicans in American annals, says in his great book, Twenty Years in Congress, that the acquiescence in the tariff of 1846 was so general that in 1856 a protective tariff was not even suggested, or even hinted at, by any one of the three parties which presented Presidential candidates. lation increased, from 1850 to 1860, 35 per cent; wealth, 126 per cent. From 1850 to 1860, under Democratic tariffs, railway mileage increased 300 per cent; from 1890 to 1900, principally under Republican tariffs, only about 19 per cent. From 1850 to 1860 capital employed in manufacture increased nearly 90 per cent; from 1890 to 1900, about 30 per cent. From 1850 to 1860 the value of manufactured products increased 85 per cent; from 1890 to 1900, about 40 per cent. Thus, after thirty years of tariff discussion and legislation, the American people deliberately and with practical unanimity adopted the Democratic conception of tariff taxation. Indeed, it is doubtful craic conception of tariff taxation. Indeed, it is doubtful whether the repudiated doctrine of high protection would have ever reappeared in our political history but for the civil war. The civil war marks the boundary between the two great periods of our tariff history. The present Republican tariff system finds its origin in that frightful strife.

In order to meet the enormous expense of an enormous war the heaviest taxes which the country and its resources could possibly bear were imposed on practically every article of production and consumption. As an offset against the high internal rates on manufactured articles heavy duties were laid on competing imposts. The war tariffs reached an average of almost 50 per cent, but they were defended on the ground of an emergency which threatened the nation's life, and it was generally understood that they were to be reduced at the close of hostilities. Indeed, the tariff acts of July, 1862, and April, 1864, were entitled "acts to increase duties temporarily." The other great war tariff act, the act of June, 1864, did not use the word "temporary" in its title, but Mr. Morrill, the Republican spokesman, in urging its passage, said that it was intended as a war measure, a temporary measure, and that it must be defended as such. The contest ended and all the exorbitant war taxes were removed except the war tariff. And that war tariff the Republican party has gradually increased, until today, forty years after the war, in an age of peace, it ranges from 50 to 100 per cent. The only exception in this long period of rising taxation was the three-year interval of the Democratic tariff of 1894, the so-called "Wilson law," which inaugurated a substantial reduction of the martial charges. Thus to-day the people pay on almost everything they eat and wear and use the highest tariff taxes the country has ever known, taxes higher than those of the most stupendous war in American or in universal history, taxes higher than those which would not have been tolerated a moment but for the argument that they were the temporary weapons with which a gigantic national crisis must be fought.

The most universal Republican argument on the tariff question is the panic of 1893, and it shows that Republican aversion to history is equaled only by Republican perversion of history. Republicans assert that Democratic tariff legislation produced the panic of 1893. The Wilson tariff bill, the only Democratic tariff since the war, became a law in August, 1894, and soon times began to improve. And yet Republicans say that the Wilson bill of 1894 caused the black times of 1893. When the economic convulsion of 1893 occurred, Republican tariff rates were in unrestricted operation. Cleveland had been inaugurated, it is true, but the McKinley tariff act of 1890 was in force and so continued until late in 1894. Johnston and Taussig, two of the most prominent authorities on our fiscal history, unite in attributing the panic of 1893 to causes entirely disassociated from the Democratic party and the Wilson bill. Occasionally Republicans assert that it was the prospect of a Democratic tariff which produced the panic. This is to say that the American people deliberately voted upon themselves the prospect of a panic, and the mere statement of such an absurdity is its own refutation.

Our agricultural and industrial enterprises are rapidly outgrowing home consumption. If fact, many of our industries and commodities are absolutely dependent on a widening foreign market. Our export trade now reaches an annual volume of over a billion and a half. It becomes more necessary every hour that we should cultivate harmonious trade relations with other countries. And yet the enormous rates of the Republican tariff are producing antagonisms everywhere. Nation after nation is constructing retaliatory tariffs against us. Germany, in a remarkable spirit of forbearance, has postponed for another year the operation of her retaliatory tariffs against American goods in the hope that our tariff may yet be modified. But the standpatters control the Republican party and are set like flint against the slightest reduction. They continue to place the United States in an attitude of defiance before the world. And yet the present Republican tariff law itself, in section 4, made distinct provision for a 20 per cent reduction of all its rates through such reciprocity arrangements as might be negotiated with other countries within two years from its enactment.

How arrangements were negotiated with important countries and how they were allowed to die by limitation in the Republican Senate is ancient, but none the less deplorable, history. And yet McKinley, on the day of his assassination at Buffalo, in September, 1901, warned the American people that the period of exclusiveness had passed; that the expansion of our trade and commerce was the present problem; that the high tariff schedules should be reduced. The Republican party has ignored this solemn counsel. And yet Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, a prominent Republican Senator, in a speech in the United States Senate in January, 1903, recalled the fact that he had been a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in 1897, when that committee framed the present Dingley tariff, and stated that in fashioning its schedules duties were put up for the express purpose of being traded down. The rates which were purposely made too high in 1897, the year of the enactment of the present Dingley law, have not yet been traded down, and we are now entering the year of 1907. And yet President Roosevelt, in his first annual message, his message of 1902, recommended the appointment of a commission of business experts to correct the inequalities of the present tariff system. In his messages of 1903, of 1904, of 1905, and of 1906 he has been silent on the subject. The inequalities continue, and the President last summer at a conference at Oyster Bay gave formal adhesion, it is commonly understood, to the stand-pat element. It is now the general report that he has consented to permit no tariff relief whatever during the remainder of his spectacular Administration.

One of the most sinister results of the Republican tariff is the modern trust, the synonym of monopoly. Shielded from foreign competition by the tariff, the American manufacturers have combined to destroy domestic rivalry. Henry O. Havemeyer, the president of the sugar trust, stated in his testimony before the Industrial Commission that the mother of trusts was the customs tariff. Moody, in his remarkable work, The Truth About the Trusts, enumerates nearly 300 articles of common use which he shows to be under the actual or potential control of monopolies. Prominent among these tariff-burdened and trustgoverned articles are agricultural implements and farm tools, practically all steel and iron products, including nails and chains and cutlery and wire, bleachings and duckings, borax, chemicals, paints, oilcloths, mattings, carpets, rubber and leather goods, building stone, lumber, furniture, cement, glass and glassware, harness, saddlery, and hardware, tin plate and tinware, toys, typewriters, sewing machines, watches, and so forth. I have mentioned these few items out of a host of items to show that the tariff and the trust dominate the necessities of life, the articles which the poorest family must have in order to live. Even if the trusts had not combined to control these articles, the Democratic party would hold that the present high tariff taxes upon them in the interest of manufacturing magnates, already wealthy and more than capable of competing with the world is plunder in the name of law.

Observe the injustice to which the system subjects the agricultural masses, the producers of cotton and corn and wheat, for example, the prices of which are determined in the markets of the world because the supply exceeds the home demand, and the foreign price regulates the home price. They must sell the products of their toil in competition with the earth, with the cheapest places of production on the globe; they must buy the things with which they make these products and sustain and educate their families from industrial monarchs in this country, who are shielded from foreign rivalry by the tariff and sheltered from domestic competition by the trust. [Applause.] What is the result? Ten and a quarter million people in the United States engaged in agricultural pursuits, with a capital, including all farm property—lands, buildings, implements, live stock, and the like—amounting to twenty and one-half billions, obtain an annual return of three billions; 7,400,000 people engaged in manufacturing, with a capital of about eleven billions, obtain a total annual return of about thirteen billions. The Republican protective system compels the farmer to pay a price for manufactured products based on the highest tariff in the world, but it can not compel the foreign or domestic purchaser of the farmer's cotton or corn or wheat to pay one cent more than the price based on the cheapest market in the world. The American manufacturer bases the price of an article on what the foreigner can lay it down for; he knows that the consumer must get it from him or the foreigner. In fixing his price the foreigner reimburses himself for the tariff charge, the transportation cost, and allows for a profit. This price the American manufacturer charges, pocketing as clear and unearned gain the equivalent of the tariff and the transportation charges. This price the American manufacturer charges whether the foreigner actually brings the article here or not; he knows that if the consumer should endeavor to seek relief by purchasing from the foreigner the latter would add these elements in making up the charge.

making up the charge. When the American consumer buys an imported article, the equivalent of the tariff charge goes to the Government for purposes of revenue. When he buys an article of domestic manufacture, the equivalent of the tariff goes to the manufacturer for purposes of enrichment. During the twelve months ending with last August we bought a billion and a quarter of foreign goods, and of that amount several hundred millions went to the Government in the shape of revenue. During the same twelve months we bought over eleven billions of home goods, and of that amount not less than two billions, as I shall demonstrate later, went to these pampered manufacturers in the shape of plunder. Secretary Shaw, in his very entertaining speeches throughout the country, talks of jewelry and cut-glass vases, and endeavors to leave the idea that only those who actually buy imported goods bear the burden of the tariff. The fact is that the equivalent of the tariff charge forms an element in the price of every article of domestic manufacture when there is a tariff rate on the corresponding and competing foreign article. Almost every article of domestic manufacture is protected by such a rate. It is not a matter of surprise that this heartless system is rapidly consuming the substance of the people and concentrating the wealth of the country and the control of its industries in the tariff-favored classes. mins, of Iowa, one of the country's foremost Republicans, recently elected governor of Iowa for the third time, said, in a recent speech on the tariff, that the total life-insurance grafts of all time had not been one-fifth of the annual amount of which the people have been despoiled by excessive tariff rates. It is no longer necessary that the American people shall pay more in order that American manufacturers may thrive. Our industries are now the most powerful and successful in the world. Our country is to-day the foremost industrial and agricultural power of the globe. With unparalleled agricultural resources; with an unequaled abundance of food supplies and raw materials for manufactures; with unrivaled mineral deposits, leading the world in coal, in iron ore, in copper, and in lead; with 18,000 miles of navigable waterway and more than 200,000 miles of railway; with four-fifths of the world's cotton; with every climate and every soil; with the greatest stretch of territory on the globe in which there is absolute freedom of trade, we have achieved the industrial primacy of mankind, and the whine for continued subsidies from the people for our giant industries does little credit to American intelligence or American patriotism. [Applause.] Nine million people at work in the factories of Great Britain produce goods not much more than half the value of those produced by about seven and one-half millions in American factories. The numbers engaged in the factories of Germany and France are much greater, the value of the products in both countries much smaller, than in those of America. And yet our manufacturers have the hardihood to ask for contributions from the people to protect them against these countries, with which natural advantages enable them so easily and so successfully to compete. Iron and steel can be made in the United States cheaper than anywhere else in the world, as admitted by Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, on the floor of the House during the last session. Then why should the people be subjected to a tariff of 40 per cent on iron and steel?

Why do American manufacturers need protection when they undersell foreign competitors in foreign markets and sell their American products cheaper abroad than at home? It is a frequent assertion of Republican speakers that only four millions of goods are sold abroad at cheaper prices than at home. Mr. Dalzell, one of the most gifted and conspicuous champions of high protection, repeated this statement during the last session. And yet in the same speech he stated that we sold our surplus cheaper abroad than at home, so that our mills and factories might run twelve months in the year instead of nine. Is it possible that our mills and factories turn out only four millions of goods in three months? The average annual output is about thirteen billion, or more than a thousand millions every month.

Mr. Schwab, the steel magnate, said in his testimony before the Industrial Commission that it was a fact generally true of all our exports that they sold at lower prices in foreign markets than at home. According to the testimony of James J. Hill before the Merchant Marine Commission, a railroad 1,500 miles long was built in Canada a few years ago with American steel rails bought from American manufacturers at $10 per ton cheaper than a competing and parallel American railroad was able to buy them.

The New York Press of May 7, 1906, a stalwart Republican paper, reported the sale of 35,000 tons of American steel billets during April at an export price of $18 per ton when the home price was $27 per ton. This means a difference of about $245,000 a month, or two and one-half millions per year, in favor of the foreign consumer in this one item of the great iron and steel trade. Seeing this statement in the New York Press, Congressman Spight, of Mississippi, wrote the editor and received not only a confirmation of the statement regarding steel billets, but a statement from that great Republican paper's regular trade representative to the effect that the same practice applied not only to billets, but also to rails and all other iron and steel material. Our iron and steel exports for the last fiscal year exceeded $160,000,000. As has been admirably brought out by Congressman RAINEY, of Illinois, the jeweler Keene, at 180 Broadway, New York City, has this sign above his door: "Great protection sale; Waltham and Elgin watches bought in England cheaper than in America and brought back to undersell Keene has been conducting a profitable business by purchasing American-made watches in foreign countries, reimporting and selling them in the United States cheaper than the American wholesalers could buy them in America. It is the statement of William E. Smythe, an economic writer and student, that "we are selling cotton goods cheaper in China and Japan than in Georgia where the cotton is grown or in Massachusetts where it is woven into cloth."

It was a recent remark of H. Rider Haggard, the famous Englishman, after making a personal investigation of conditions in the United States, that prices had been elevated in this country to the prohibitive point for all but the very rich. "Why," he added, "the bacon we eat in Amity on the table costs more in Colorado, where it is made, than it does in England." In a desperate endeavor to defend the sale of American goods abroad cheaper than at home, Congressman Charles B. Lands and others have said that it was the mere dumping of the surplus—that having supplied the American market our manufacturers would dispose of the surplus abroad at prices below the home figure. If it be true that American manufacturers supply the home market so completely that they must dump the surplus abroad at emergency prices, how is it that foreign manufacturers found a market in the United States during the last fiscal year for the billion and a quarter of competing goods which they sold here?

The Republican clamor for high protection never ceases. They tell us that it is patriotism to feed these bloated interests with the people's earnings forever. Patriotism, indeed! Let us examine the patriotism of the beneficiaries of this extortionate taxation. During the year ending with last August American manufacturers sent abroad over a billion and a half of American goods. How much of this American export trade was carried in American ships beneath the American flag? Not one-fifth. And yet the American flag was once the commercial monarch of And yet the American mag was once the commercial monarch of the waters and American ships rode every sea. Once we were the ocean carriers of America, yea, the world, but that was in a period of low tariff taxes. With the increasing tariff taxes of the Republican regime it became more and more expensive to build an American ship. Ships are built, equipped, and managed in competition with the world. Mr. Joseph L. Bristow, a distinguished Republican, says, in his report on Panama, that a German steamship of 3,500 tons can be operated for $15,315 less per year than an American steamship of the same tonnage, a British steamship of 2,500 tons for $18,289.68 less per year than an American steamship of like tonnage. Now, as the American shipowner, on account of the increasing cost of production and maintenance resulting from increasing tariffs, was compelled to raise his carriage rates above those of foreigners, did the American manufacturer offer to pay him more in order that the American flag might retain the commercial mastery of the seas? No: the American manufacturer began the employment of foreign ships and foreign flags the moment they could underbid his countrymen. American ships fell to pieces at the wharves while foreign vessels, with strange pennants above their sails and strange voices upon their decks, succeeded to the carriage of American goods. To-day the American merchant ship is hardly a reputable factor in the world's ocean trade. By far the larger portion of American oversea traffic is transported in foreign bottoms.

Such is the patriotism of the tariff-swollen classes. economic tories who have fattened on the tariff are entirely willing to have the shipowners subsidized from the United States Treasury—the pocket of the people—and already a ship-subsidy bill has passed the Republican Senate. The manufacturer says to the shipowner: "The American people have enriched me; perhaps you can be equally successful. Don't ask me for aid; ask the people. Get Secretary Shaw and Congressmen Hepburn, GROSVENOR, and others to tell them that it is 'pay'-triotism, with the accent on the 'pay.'" [Laughter and applause.] A with the accent on the 'pay.'" [Laughter and applause.] A few months ago the city of San Francisco sank upon its dissolving foundations, and the heart of the world stood still. It fell a blackened mass, and from the ruin there rose a cry that must have startled the outposts on the battlements of heaven. And as the gallant people staggered from the chaos and the wreck, exhibiting that American courage which is most conspicuous in disaster, a thrill of sympathy and admiration went round the globe. A bill was introduced in the American Congress to remove the high tariff taxes on building material intended for San Francisco in order that the stricken people might more easily rebuild their broken homes. But the tariff satraps and their servitors, the Republican standpatters, who dominate Congress and the country, killed the bill. They were willing that a few millions should be voted from the people's Treasury for temporary food and medical supplies, but not one dollar for permanent aid would they yield through the slightest modification of their unholy privileges. It was perhaps the most revolting example of insolence and cupidity the favored interests have yet How long will the American people consent further to enrich this arrogant and unfeeling class-a class blind to every consideration but that of interest; deaf to every cry but that of gain-a class rapidly becoming experts in oppression and artists in plunder-the patricians, the tories, the aristocrats of modern times? [Applause.]

Patrician, aristocrat, tory—whatever his age or name,
To the people's rights and liberties a traitor ever the same.
The natural crowd is a mob to him, their prayers a vulgar rhyme,
The freeman's speech is sedition and the patriot's deed a crime.
Wherever the race, the law, the land—whatever the time, the throne,
The tory is always a traitor to every class but his own.

[Applause.]

But they tell us that the especial object of the present tariff system is to protect the American wage-earner against the pauper labor of Europe. And yet almost every European country has a high protective tariff: Is it possible that the high protective tariff produces pauper labor? And if the high protective tariff produces pauper labor in European countries how long will it be until it produces pauper labor in the United States? They boast of the size of the American wage under the present ariff and talk of preserving the American standard of living. Let us see. It is the estimate of the Massachusetts bureau of statistics that it requires $754 per year to support an American family of five. John Mitchell in his valuable book on organized labor says that $600 a year is necessary in the anthracite district for a family of ordinary size.

Now, what is the actual American wage? The census of 1900 shows a little over 5,300,000 wage-earners in the United States, with a total annual wage of a little over $2,300,000,000, or $438 a year apiece-$438, the princely amount on which the American wage-earner is to maintain himself and his family and try to look cheerful when Republican standpatters eulogize Republican prosperity. [Laughter and applause.] Adding wages and salaries and cost of material and miscellaneous expenses, there was a total expenditure in American manufacture last year of about eleven billions. The total value of the product was some-thing over thirteen billions. Two billions went to the small class of protected owners, the real beneficiaries of Republican prosperity. Turning to agriculture, we find that according to the last census 10,300,000 people engaged therein received for their total product $3,700,000,000, or less than $370 each per annum, and this includes farm owners. This, forsooth, is our matchless prosperity-$370 per year for the man engaged in agricultural work, $438 per year for the man employed in the fac-The Republican doctrine seems to be that unto everyone that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. [Laughter.] Republicans forget that the true test of a nation's happiness and prosperity is not the amount of its wealth alone but the extent to which that wealth is diffused among the people.

It is the statement of Moody, the foremost authority on trust conditions, that there are now in the United States 440 industrial, franchise, and transportation trusts, with a total capitalization of twenty and one-fourth billions, an amount equivalent to one-fifth the nation's wealth, and that these are largely dominated by the Rockefeller and Morgan financial And so the concentration of wealth proceeds. was recently said by a noted writer, Charles E. Russell, regarding the beef trust, after a close investigation, that it to-day fixes the price of all meats, fruits, fertilizers, and dairy products; that within certain limits it can make the price of corn, oats, and wheat what it pleases; that to-morrow it may be able to control the price of every loaf of bread; that the growth and development of this terrible monopoly threatens to reduce to semiserfdom the farmers of the West. It is a lamentable fact that the trusts are more numerous, more merciless, and more powerful at this hour than ever before in our history. And yet the Republican party has had absolute control of every branch of the Government for almost ten years, and for five of these years Theodore Roosevelt has been President. The laws against the trusts have been plain and ample. And yet not one monopoly controlling a life necessity has been dissolved; not one trust magnate has been sent to jail. The Northern Securities Company, a northwestern railroad combination, was dissolved, but soon resumed operation under a slightly different form. It is shown by the economic author Smythe that to-day almost all the important railway mileage of the Union is in the control of six great capitalistic groups—the Vanderbilts, the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Morgan, the Gould-Rockefeller, the Harriman-Kuhn-Loeb, and the Moore; that there is practically no competition among them, and that they have divided the country, this great sextumvirate, into so many conquered provinces, known as the Vanderbilt territory, the Gould territory, etc.

How has the President enforced the criminal laws against the trusts? A few underlings have been fined, but the great criminals are still free to exploit the people and to defy the law. And yet the President has gained a distinct popularity from mere attitudes and mouthings against the trusts. It is a singular fact that the period in which the President has issued the most furious proclamations and uttered the most resounding platitudes against monopoly has been the period of its most rapid development and most consummate power. One of the surest remedies against most of the trusts is entirely to remove or materially to reduce the tariff that has nurtured them. Sald Mr. Sherman, a leading Republican of his time:

If individuals or combinations combine to advance the price of domestic products I would without a moment's hesitation reduce the duties on foreign goods competing with them in order to break down the combination.

Said United States Senator Washburn, another celebrated Republican:

The Republican party has got to disconnect itself from trusts, and whenever they find the trust is depending for its exorbitant profits largely on protective duties it will be the duty of Republican Congressmen and Senators to remove the duties at once. This should be done at once with the duty on steel rails and steel plate.

Sherman and Washburn made these statements over seven years ago, but the Republican party has remained as unresponsive to them as to the last warning of McKinley against the continuance of the present destructive system.

The rapacity of monopoly, the pressure of enormous tariff taxes, the small returns of labor are uniting to convert a country dedicated to the people's rights into a country shadowed with the people's wrongs. [Applause.] It is the estimate of Mr. Charles B. Spahr, a noted statistician, that 1 per cent of the families in the United States hold approximately 90 per cent of the national wealth. The census of 1900 shows that of the 16,000,000 families in the United States 8,800,000 own no homes at all, 2,100,000 have their homes mortgaged, while less than 5,000,000 American families own their homes entirely free from incumbrance. The last census further shows that in the 160 cities of the United States with at least 25,000 inhabitants 1,027,000 own no homes at all, 435,000 have their homes mortgaged, while only 561,000 families own their homes; only 14 per cent with homes free from debt, 11 per cent with homes mortgaged. 74 per cent without homes.

In his remarkable book on economic conditions, entitled "Poverty," Robert Hunter shows that approximately 10,000,000 people in the United States are on the verge of destitution. It is universally recognized that the problem of existence, of securing food and shelter and clothing, is becoming more difficult every day. For the staples of life we must pay from 35 to 50 per cent more than ten years ago. The prices of rent and fuel have increased enormously. While the millions of small wage-earners are confronted with the questions of shelter and food, the other millions whose earnings are somewhat larger, the clerks, the stenographers, those who are trying to establish a business and who get from $15 to $35 a week, are having a more and more distressing struggle to preserve appearances. The increasing domination of the trusts is making it more and more difficult for young men to start in business with any hope of ultimate independence and success. The trusts are writing the death warrant of the small business man. Young men are rushing into the overcrowded professions, because they prefer a few clients and a precarious living with independence to the perpetual enslavement of the trusts. One of the deepest students of the times, Judge Grosscup, of Chicago, says that the loss which republican America now confronts is the loss of individual hope and prospect. The son of John D. Rockefeller, the greatest monopolist of the age, said in a defense of the trusts before the students of Brown University:

The American Beauty rose can be produced in all its splendor only by sacrificing the early buds that grow up around it. The rose has 1,000 buds, and in order to produce the American Beauty the gardener goes around it with a knife and snips 999 in order that all the strength and beauty may be forced into one bloom.

Such is the brutal teaching of the trust; 999 small business men must be destroyed in order that the American beauty, the trust, may thrive. As has been truthfully said, with the highwayman of a century ago it was, "Your money or your life;" but with these modern trust vandals it is, "Your money and your life." [Applause.] We see the small business men falling on every side, and there is no Red Cross for the wounded on the economic battlefield. Dr. William Howe Tolman, the director of the Institute for Social Science in New York, an institute devoted to the collection of sociological information, says:

The increased cost of living is presenting a tremendous problem to the industrial class all over the country. The worker has little or no surplus left over from his weekly wage. It is well-nigh impossible for him to lay up for the traditional ralpy day. As for lifting himself up or bettering his condition, the little margin between income and expenditure, which formerly enabled him to do that, has been wiped out.

But the strongest proof of the increasing sharpness of the times is found in the number of women and children who have been driven into the struggle for the daily wage. In this land of fancied freedom and prosperity more women and children are to-day compelled by the growing sternness of conditions to labor for daily sustenance than ever before.

The head of the family with an average yearly return of $438 if he is in the factory, or $370 if he is in the field, is finding it impossible to support his loved ones. Where once he left his wife to minister at the fireside, the children to gather love of honor, home, and God from her radiant example, they must all now rush in many instances into the pallid rank to toil for shelter and for bread. Over 5,000,000 women have been lashed by pitiless necessity into the arena of economic conflict, 2,000,000 of whom are in the factories and the mills. Over 1,700,000 little children are forced by frowning want to work for wages in the field, the factory, the workshop, and the If BEVERIDGE and Lodge are in earnest on the subject of child labor, let them join with the Democrats in reducing the high-tariff charges and in removing the conditions which drive entire families into the factories, the fields, the mines. plause.] Despite these conditions we are still told that American labor under the high-protective tariff is the happiest and most highly paid on earth. We reply that American labor is underpaid; that it has an insufficient wage; that our marvelous wealth has been turned from the channels of equitable distribution along which Democratic laws and principles once di-rected it into the private treasuries of protected classes. We say that a system which concenters wealth and distributes want may be protection for the few it favors and upbuilds, but that it is oppression for the many it despoils. We say that this high-protective system has made the Government an accessory to theft, an accomplice in plunder. When a government founded to promote the high principles of equality and freedom, heralded as the ark of liberty, the refuge of the world's oppressed, is thus prostituted it is small wonder that socialists assault our basic institutions and anarchists proclaim all government a lie. [Loud applause.]

The Democratic party will materially reduce or, if necessary, entirely remove the duties that aid the trusts, and it will set in motion against all trusts and all trust owners the neglected machinery of the Federal law. It will rearrange and modify the tariff rates on the basis of equality and justice, touching articles of necessity very lightly or not at all, imposing a somewhat higher charge on things not necessities but still not luxuries, and laying the heaviest rates on luxuries. In no event will it collect more from the people than is necessary to defray the unavoidable expense of a government administered with the most rigid economy. Democrats believe that the power of taxation should not be used to build up one man with another's means. The Democratic party revised the exorbitant tariffs of 1828 and 1842 and gave the American people in 1846

the most satisfactory tariff law they have ever had. The Republican party will never make a sincere and effective modification of the present enormous rates. It has pretended to undertake their revision on several occasions since the civil war inaugurated them on a scale which would never have been permitted in a time of peace, but the Republican party has never touched the tariff except to increase it. The last Republican national platform asserted that the tariff should not be revised until changing conditions demanded it, and experience demonstrates that the dominant element of the Republican party will never admit the existence of such condi-tions. In October of 1905 the Republicans of Massachusetts, in State convention assembled, demanded a revision of the tariff.

During the first session of the present Congress the Republican Members from Massachusetts authorized Representative McCall, of that State, in the name of Republican Massachusetts, to request the Republican Congressional leaders to permit a revision of the tariff. In March of 1906 Mr. McCall addressed a letter to Chairman PAYNE, of the Ways and Means Committee, the Republican floor leader, reciting the tariff clause in the last Republican national platform, stating that the Massachusetts delegation believed, with the people of Massachusetts, that conditions had so changed that the public interests demanded the alteration of the present tariff, and asking revision and readjustment. Mr. PAYNE, voicing the views of the dominant, stand-pat element of the Republican party, replied, denying that conditions had so changed and refusing the appeal. He said that Congress was not prepared to review the tariff schedules in that calm, judicial frame of mind so necessary to the proper preparation of a tariff act at a time so near the Congressional elections. The Congressional elections have passed, and we are now told that the Republicans will not consider the question of revision before 1909. And so the subterfuge and procrastination continue.

Not only has the Republican party desecrated the principle of equal rights in the establishment of a flagrant tariff system, but also it has degraded another basic principle of the Declaration of Independence, the principle of government by consent of the governed, through its policies in the Philippines. During the last eight years the Republican party has extended our dominion over 9,000,000 foreign peoples in foreign seas, the vast majority of whom are subjects governed regardless of their consent. The subjugation of the Philippines has cost us hun-dreds of millions, aside from the sickening slaughter following a fanatical and hopeless resistance. Thus the Republican party has made the American flag a symbol of tyranny. It has violated its original teachings and blasphemed the memory of its founders. The Republican party was dedicated to the preservation of the rights of men. It was born with a cry against human slavery on its lips. With impassioned energy it proclaimed the doctrine of universal liberty, and 3,000,000 bayonets glittered from the Mississippi to the sea to translate that doctrine into the institutions of the country. It claims to have liberated 4,000,000 of the human race from bondage. And yet to-day the Republican party holds 9,000,000 of the sons of men in absolute subjection. [Applause.]

Rise, Wendell Phillips, from the dead and behold this spectacle, you who renounced allegiance to your country because it was not wholly free and with an eloquence not of earth assailed the established customs of a century-rise and scourge with epic wrath this Republican defamation of all for which you fought and toiled. Rise, Garrison, you whom history terms "the liberator," whose fearless gospel incited war that chains might fall and break, and observe the degradation of the party which was first elevated to power on the tide your energies had set in motion. Rise, Lincoln, you who would not govern a people in the world against that people's will and with sorrow beyond all words bear witness to the repudiation of your life's supremest teaching, the sentiment of your inspired deliverance at Gettysburg, by the recreant sons of heroic sires. When the Roman republic first established colonies, which it governed without regard to the will of the subjected peoples, the decline of its liberties began, although it preserved long afterwards all the outward forms and signs of freedom. After pointing out this fact in Roman annals Froude, the great historian, says:

If there be one lesson which history clearly teaches it is this, that free nations can not govern subject provinces. If they are unable or unwilling to admit their dependencies to share their own constitution, the constitution itself will fall in pieces from mere incompetence for

But they tell us that we are a world power and that we must have dependencies in order to maintain our dignity and extend our influence. We say that the world influence of this country will be far more salutary and more lasting through the consistent exemplification of the principle of self-government on this continent than through the acquisition of provinces in every quarter of the earth. But why have other nations acquired dependencies? It is because they have developed their own territory to the fullest possible extent and must find outlets for surplus energies and overflowing populations. Is this the condition of the United States? No; it is capable of perhaps ten times its present population, and the development of its continental territory will consume our best thought and effort for centuries to come. Then why cling to distant lands in persistent violation of our most cherished principles? Our entire for-eign possessions are not to be compared to our Western States and Territories as an outlet for population, a field for capital and manufacture. California and Nevada are as large as Holland, Belgium, Portugal, and France combined; Washington and Oregon are as large as Great Britain, Denmark, and Switzerland; Utah and Arizona are as large as Spain; Idaho and Montana are almost the size of Austria and Hungary; Wyoming and Colorado are as large as the German Empire; New Mexico is practically the size of Italy; the Dakotas, Kansas, and Nebraska are as large as Norway and Sweden; Indian Territory is the size of Greece, while Texas and Oklahoma are equal in area to New Zealand and Japan. The combined population of the foreign countries I have mentioned is about 300,000,000; that of the Western American States equaling them in territorial extent about 10,000,000. What infinite possibilities of expansion and development are presented within our own boundaries! The limitless West is ours already; no millions to be expended in subjugation, no blood to shed, no graves to fill, no principles to violate; the people already Americans, their institutions our institutions, their sympathies our sympathies, their hopes our hopes, their God our God. As has been strikingly said, "Let us dig more ditches in the West and fewer graves in the Philippines." [Applause.]

The Republican party has exhibited an astounding and dangerous indifference on the subject of the currency. They boast of establishing the gold standard, but they have done nothing to solve the problems that have arisen since its establishment. an address several months ago before the West Virginia Bankers' Association Secretary of the Treasury Shaw said:

The system is not perfect largely because it is nonelastic. It fails to respond in volume to the changing needs of seasons and localities. Attention has been called to this many times by many people. That there will be no further currency legislation until we shall have experienced a panic occasioned by the want of elasticity I am convinced. The country does not appreciate the danger, and until the danger is fully understood no remedy will be applied. We came nearer such a panic September 20, 1902, than most people appreciate. The fact that we escaped then does not raise a presumption that we will always escape. A glaring defect at a vital point will somewhere sooner or later assert itself.

Could there be a more unanswerable condemnation of the Republican party? We have here the deliberate prediction by a Republican Cabinet minister of a panic with his own party in full control, and a deliberate admission that his own party will do nothing to remedy the defect and prevent the panic. But this is not all. Henry Clews, the famous financier, a profound observer, and a confirmed Republican, says in his weekly financial review of October 6, 1906:

It is absolutely certain that continued refusal to adopt sane currency measures will lead us to drift into one of the greatest financial crises that the country has ever seen. Of course we shall have panics with or without currency reform, but disaster will be immeasurably aggravated by clinging to a clumsy and antiquated currency system or correspondingly ameliorated by adopting a system that is scientific, elastic, automatic, and suitable to American necessities.

Further on he says:

No civilized country in the world maintains a system so ill suited to its wants as the United States. That we are so far astern in this respect is a sore reflection upon our national intelligence.

What an indictment of the Republican party! It is permitting the United States to trail behind the world with a clumsy and antiquated currency system, and it is taking no step to remedy a situation which both Shaw and Clews tell us will result in a panic. Thus the country, under Republican management, is staggering headlong into disaster and convulsion.

Under Republican management the Federal expenditures have increased at an appalling rate. Exclusive of the Panama Canal appropriation the increase of governmental expenditure in 1904 appropriation the increase of governmental expenditure in 1904 over 1903 was thirty-five millions; in 1905 over 1904, forty millions; in 1906 over 1905, more than seventeen millions—an increase of over ninety-two millions in three years. The total national expenditure for 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, excluding the Panama Canal, was over $2,866,000,000; the total expenditures for 1898, 1899, 1900, and 1901, the four full years of McKinley, over $2,430,000,000. Thus, exclusive of all expenses in Panama, the expenditures of the four years of Roosevelt exceeded those of the four years of McKinley, although he conducted the Spanish-American war, by over four hundred and thirty millions. Our colonial, military, and naval expenditure has assumed European proportions.

It is a curious and significant fact, a tribute to the vitality of Democratic principles, that the President and the Republican party after receiving in November, 1904, the largest national majority in American history, had to turn to the rejected Democratic platform for the principal and most popular legislation of the Congress following that election. [Loud applause.] I refer to the railroad rate law. This law is a distinct step toward stricter regulation, and it contains many improvements on the old act, but it would have been made vastly more effective had not the President surrendered to the Aldrich-Allison element in the Senate. So far as actual relief from unjust rates and discriminations is concerned, little has been accomplished. only practical effect of the new law is to enable the controversy between the shipper and the carrier to be transferred more quickly to the courts, where the case still may be tied up in-definitely. The new law makes more effective changes along other lines, changes which the railroad interests were glad to accept after winning the main issue of a court review. movement for stricter regulation of railways did not originate with the Republican party. It began, so far as national parties were concerned, when the Democratic national platform of 1896 demanded the enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The demand was embodied in every succeeding Democratic platform and urged by Bryan and other Democrats. It was never mentioned in a Republican national platform. Roosevelt astounded his party associates when in his message of 1904 he took up this Democratic demand. A bill indorsed by the President and known as the "Hepburn bill" passed the House almost unanimously without any provision regarding a court review. When the bill reached the Senate the President announced that no court-review amendment would be tolerated. Seeing that he could not obtain enough Republican votes to pass the bill through the Senate, he opened negotiations through ex-Senator Chandler with the Democrats. TILLMAN had been placed in charge of the bill by a shrewd move of its Republican opponents. Prompted by the highest and most patriotic motives the Democratic Senators stood firmly by the President and it soon became evident that the President was about to achieve a notable victory for the people. Suddenly, while the Democrats and a small contingent of Republicans, composing a sufficient number to have passed the original Hepburn bill, were standing loyally in the breach, the President announced that he would accept the Aldrich-Allison amendment, and the battle for the people's rights was lost. Later, when LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, introduced an amendment providing for a valuation of railway properties in order that the Commission might have an accurate basis for the determination of a fair and proper rate, his Republican colleagues voted it down, the Democrats valiantly supporting him. It is evident that if effective rate legislation is to be had the Republican party must be banished from control. The work has only begun.

Roosevelt himself can not stay the tide he has unwittingly helped to set in motion. His attempt to secure popularity with measures which Bryan and the Democracy originated is like the endeavor of a pigmy to steal the thunderbolts of Jove. The other measures which became laws at the recent session, the pure-food bill, the meat-inspection bill, the quarantine bill, the canal-type bill, etc., were either nonpartisan or perfunctory. The Republican party was literally forced, after years of inexcusable delay, by a threatening public opinion and the Democratic filibuster to admit Oklahoma and Indian Territory to statehood. The principal measures which the President specifically recommended and to which the Administration was officially committed, the Philippine tariff bill, the ship-subsidy bill, and the Santo Domingo treaty, all failed. What a spectacle! A President and a party fresh from the greatest majority in our history unable to pass any other than Democratic or nonpartisan measures! [Applause.]

The Republican Senate has persistently blocked the movement for the election of United States Senators by the direct vote of the people of each State. The last two Democratic national platforms demanded this reform, and the American people are almost a unit in its favor. The Republican national platforms have maintained an obstinate silence regarding this measure while the Republican Senate stands like adamant in the way of its adoption.

Accustomed to limitless and perpetual power, the Republican party has drifted into a complete paralysis, a hopeless inertia, Stand pat is merely another expression for dry rot. [Laughter and applause.] Swollen with the spoils of office, corpulent with the wine of power, distended with the dropsy of corruption, the Republican party drags its huge, infected body across the halls of state, helpless among the trophies of the past, powerless alike before the problems of the present and the retribution of the future, while its coward lips wail out "Stand pat, stand pat!" [Laughter and applause.] "Stand pat," although the pillage of the people never ceases; "stand pat," although the pillage of the Republic is by a ruthless tariff law transferred from the millions who support to the masters who exploit it; "stand pat," although the Republican party refuses to lighten the tariff taxes which it first imposed as a temporary burden in the years of war to double and redouble as a permanent tyranny in the years of peace; "stand pat," although the tariff law itself provides for a reduction of its charges; "stand pat," although the enormous rates incite the antagonism of the world and imperil our foreign trade; "stand pat," although McKinley pleaded from the doorstep of the grave for lower tariffs; "stand pat," although patriotic Republicans of Massachusetts, Iowa, and all the country unite in the general prayer for less oppressive schedules; "stand pat," although our loftiest principle, the very soul of the Republic, the principle in the name of which our country was consecrated in the blood and tears of patriots, the principle of government by the governed's will, has been abandoned in Republican policies abroad; "stand pat," although the currency situation is black with impendent danger; "stand pat," although the expenditures of the public moneys has become a riotous dissipation, a wanton waste.

Let me say here that a small but entirely sincere element of the people, in utter despair over Republican conditions, have fallen into socialism, into the violence and iconoclasm of ultra radicalism. In seeking a remedy for existing evils the Socialist would give us still more serious ones. He would overturn the basic institutions of our civilization; he would uproot the foundations of individualism and freedom. Let me quote from the Socialist platform of 1904: "Socialism means that all things upon which the people in common depend shall by the people in common be owned and administered. * * * The so-called in common be owned and administered. * trust is but a sign and form of the developing socialism of the world's work." Thus the Socialist would substitute common ownership for private ownership; he would destroy the insti-tution of private property. He hails the trust as a natural step toward common ownership. He would make the government a universal trust, an unlimited monopoly. He would make us a nation of employees; he would leave no prospect for individual enterprise and ownership. He forgets the lessons of history and the make-up of the human nature, for history and experience teach us that when the government owns everything it is not long before somebody owns the government. The safety of mankind and the permanence of freedom require the separation of government as far as possible from all purely private enterprise. The happiest and purest government is the impersonal government of law, of law before which all citizens stand as independent equals, not as servants and employees. [Applause.]

The Socialist would abolish the private ownership of land. Without the private ownership of land, what would become of the individual ownership of home, the very cornerstone of civilization? Without the individual ownership of home, how long would the institution of marriage retain its sacredness? It may be a significant fact that many Socialist leaders entertain lax views regarding marriage. The glory of English liberty, our brightest heritage, has proceeded from the sanctity which has ever surrounded the humblest English home. Said Chatham, in the British Parliament: "The poorest man may in his cottage bid defiance to all the forces of the Crown. It may be frail; its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it; the storms may enter; the rain may enter, but the King of England can not enter! All his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement." [Applause.] What sacredness would attach to a so-called home in which a man knew that every other man in the country, of whatever race, had an equal interest? Socialism would wreck our civilization and remit us to savagery.

The Democratic party would apply to society and its varying emergencies the principles of equality and brotherhood, the principles which its founder embodied in the Declaration of Independence and which constitute the underlying spirit of American institutions. They tell us that the Democracy changes its issues at each election. We answer that the basic principle of the Democracy, the principle of equal rights, never changes, although its application to new conditions naturally develops new measures, and that thus the Democracy keeps step with time. We applied the principle of equal rights in 1896 when we said that justice to all the people required an increasing volume of standard money to meet the increasing needs of business, and we have been sustained by events. The volume of standard money has experienced since 1896 the greatest increase in its history. We applied the principle of equal rights in 1900 when we defended the doctrine of government by the governed's will, and to-day the American people are realizing the soundness of that position. We applied the doctrine of equal rights in 1904 when we denounced the corrupt partnership of the dominant party with the great corporations of the country. Our candidate for President openly charged that the Republican campaign manager had received immense corporate donations. With violent effrontery the President denounced the charge as false, and the country believed him. It has since developed that almost at the very hour of the President's loud denunciation the Republican campaign manager was receiving the funds of widows and orphans from the great insurance corporations with which to debauch a free electorate. [Loud applause. 1

Thus the Democracy applies an eternal principle to unfolding events. Thus it adopts new measures when new measures are necessary to the application of this principle. Thus it occupies a rational middle ground between the ultraconservatism, which would preserve existing conditions at any cost, and the ultraradicalism, which would overturn the foundations of society. We say to the Republican stand-patter: "You can not arrest the tide of progress; the tariff must be revised, the doctrine of government by the governed's will must be restored, economy must be practiced in the Government expenditure." We say to the Socialist: "You can not uproot the fundamental institu-We say to tions of home and land and property without precipitating both anarchy and savagery." Paraphrasing the idea of another, the situation may be thus described: Plutocracy and Republicanism "Stand pat; let evils rage;" Socialism shouts, "Pull down the temple, though it crush us in its fall;" the Democracy, applying the deathless principle of equal rights, cries to all the struggling race of man, "Forward, march; keep a just and even step with time." [Applause.]

In the defense and promulgation of the Democracy we need an especial enthusiasm, an enthusiasm like that which an old negro deacon prayed might be given to Sam Jones from on high. Sam Jones had been invited to address a colored church in Georgia, and they called on this old deacon to open the service with prayer. He responded with a plea of fervid eloquence and power, accompanied by the vociferous hallelujahs and the melodious amens of a typical Ethiopian congregation. "O, Lord," he said, "gib Brudder Jones de eye ob de eagle dat he may see sin from afur. Glue his ear to de gospel telephone and connect him wid de central skies. 'Luminate his brow wid a brightness dat'll make de fires ob hell look lak a tallow candle. Nail his hands to de gospel plow. Bow his head in some lonesome valley where prayer is much wanted to be made. 'Noint him all over wid de ker'sene oil ob Thy salvation and sot him on fire." [Laughter and loud applause.]

With an enthusiasm that can not die let us gather beneath the stainless standard of the stainless leader, who, in a recent private journey around the globe, was honored by the nations as perhaps no other private citizen of any country was ever honored before, whose every heart beat is a throb of brotherhood, whose soul is illumined with the love of man, whose arm is tireless in the people's cause. The most powerful lesson of history is the triumph of truth, truth the force invisible yet omnipotent, its scepter swaying all the vassal years. In its silent courts the centuries assemble to cry earth's multitudes to judgment. The prostrate rise; the exalted fall. The mask of sanctity drops from the brow of gain. From sword and crown there leaps the accusing blood of peoples conquered and despoiled. Chains fashioned in the forges of the world's injustice break and hands unshackled are to God uplifted. Men and nations, stripped of arrogance and rank and all the ornaments of earth, await the verdict of eternity. The deeds and motives of all days and ages are measured by the test, severe yet beautiful, of fidelity to truth. And no man, in all the years that have been and that are to be, will stand before that solemn assize with more assurance of its approval than the defender of humanity, the cru-sader of equality, the friend and champion of the overburdened millions, the exemplar of righteousness and love in his conception of government and in the conduct of his life, William Jennings Bryan. [Loud and prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 17, 1907.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, offered the following

Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore.

Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another; in honour preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord.

Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with mc, to give every man according as his work shall be. Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

Father of love, Father of life, we commemorate this day the service of him whom Thou wast pleased to call from service here to higher service there. Teach, us, Father, every man, every woman, every boy, every girl, how to do the duty that comes next our hand in every living day. Show us what that duty is. Show us from hour to hour how we are to do it. Give us strength for our weakness that we may be fellow-workmen with our God-not alone, not as if we could be alone, but as together, to bear each other's burdens, to live in the common life, each for all and all for each. This is our prayer; and that Thou wilt unite us, Father, as Thine own children in Christ Jesus.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is done in Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory. Forever and ever.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Kean and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

Mr. GALLINGER submifted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for completing card index, and to correct and transcribe the indexes of copies, correct the dockets, and index all wills filed from 1801 to the present time, etc., in the office of the register of wills, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LONG submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $66 to reimburse William C. Eckstein for amounts paid to John E. Allman and A. S. Lucas, who were erroneously placed on the roll of privates of the fire department of the District of Columbia in the month of July, 1906, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be

DONATION OF CANNON TO SOUTH DAKOTA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 80) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two 3-inch wrought-iron muzzle-loading cannon, with their carriages, limbers, and accessories, to the State of South Dakota; which was, in line 8, to strike out all after "Provided," down to and including "States," line 9, and to insert: "That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of said cannon, carriages, and accessories."

Mr. KITTREDGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 21194. An act to authorize J. F. Andrews, J. W. Jourdan, their heirs, representatives, associates, and assigns, to construct dams and power stations on Bear River, on the southeast quarter of section 31, township 5, range 11, in Tishomingo

H. R. 21402. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Gregg Shoals;

H. R. 21677. An act to amend an act granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain a canal, power station, and appurtenant works in the Mississippi River in Scott County, Iowa;

H. R. 22135. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ashley River, in the counties of Charleston and Col-

leton, S. C.:

H. R. 23560. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Benton and Franklin counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company

H. R. 23561. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Walla Walla and Benton counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company;

H. R. 23578. An act to authorize the county of Clay, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, in said county and State; and

H. R. 23821. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. FORAKER, as modified by him yesterday, as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13–14, 1906. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during sessions of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER rose. Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I will ask the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio long enough to say that in his speech yesterday afternoon the Senator stated that it was his desire To that, Mr. President, I have no objection. to close this debate. But it is my purpose to offer an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, and in that connection I should say that it is not my purpose to discuss the amendment at any considerable length, nor, in fact, to go beyond a statement of its intent and scope. It seems to me, in the light of the Senator's declaration and expressed wish, it is proper for me to give him notice of this purpose. It will be entirely agreeable to me for the Senator himself to determine at what point my proposed amendment shall be submitted, whether before he proceeds with his argument, or later, after he shall have concluded.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I would rather, for reasons which I think the Senator will appreciate, conclude my remarks at this time. I would be obliged to the Senator, however, if without interrupting me to make his explanation he would be willing to offer his amendment so that I may be advised of its nature

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was with that purpose that I made the suggestion, as probably the Senator from Ohio, in the course of his concluding argument, would want to have an opportunity of noticing the proposed amendment. That course is entirely agreeable to me. I send it to the desk to be read for the information of the Senator and the information of other Senators, and at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Ohio I shall ask to submit briefly a statement as to the purpose and scope and intent of the proposed amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky proposes an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary. After the first words, "Resolved, That," it is proposed to insert the following:

Without questioning or denying the legal right of the President to discharge without honor enlisted men from the Army of the United

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I need not say I am opposed to that amendment and can not accept it. I want to get the facts, and my resolution calls for nothing but the facts.

But, Mr. President, I do not think the Senate should now, by adopting an amendment of that character, preclude itself from considering this question of power when all the facts that may be obtained by the committee shall have been laid before the Senate.

I had hoped it would not be necessary to say anything more on the question of the power of the Chief Executive, but this amendment makes it necessary, perhaps, that I should address myself to that proposition at this time, not for the purpose of shows pose of elaborately arguing it, but only for the purpose of showing at least that it is a question about which we should not preclude ourselves by taking action of this kind before we have learned and established what this case is.

There is another thing, Mr. President. On yesterday, supposing I was meeting the objections of all Senators who were disposed to have an investigation at all, I agreed to a modification of my resolution. I did that upon the theory that all question of power was to be postponed until the case was brought before the Senate upon the testimony. I did that for the sake of harmony. I did that for the sake of getting the facts and opening the door-

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator does not, I am sure, mean to be understood

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure the Senator does not mean to be understood as even intimating that I or those about me were parties to that agreement.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly not. I am speaking about my party colleagues on this side of the Chamber. I supposed when that modification was agreed upon it would be satisfactory and we would have a vote; that those who did not want an investigation of the facts would vote "no," and those who wanted an investigation of the facts would vote for the resolution, with the understanding that we were not hampered or restrained in the investigation of the facts, but that no question of power was to be considered by the committee or to be reported upon by the

But now, in view of what the Senator brings into the case, let me speak about the power of the President to make this kind of an order. I listened with close attention and with very great interest to the very able arguments of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNox], and other Senators on that point, who contended that the President had power inherent in him as Commander in Chief to make the order in question, and that, such power inhering in him as Commander in Chief, it had not been taken away from him by any statute or by any regulation of the Army, but, on the contrary, had rather been confirmed to him. I believe that, in a word, is the gist of the arguments that have been made on the other side as to this proposition.

Mr. President, when I spoke here on December 20 I touched upon that point because I thought we were challenged to speak about it by some passages in the President's message. I then made some rather extended remarks as to what was the constitutional power of the President and what was the constitutional power of Congress with respect to the Army, contending in that behalf that the constitutional power of the President is the power to command and that the constitutional power of the Congress is the power to raise armies and to provide rules for the government and regulation thereof. And I contended that because of these constitutional provisions it was competent for the Congress to make all necessary regulations, and that when any regulation had been made by Congress for the government of the Army, as to the size of it, as to the units of its organization, as to the distribution of it between infantry, artillery, and cavalry, as to enlistment, as to discharge-anything permanent in its character as a regulation, those regulations were absolutely binding on the President, as well as on everybody else, and that the President had no power to make regulations except only when authorized by Congress or when Congress had neglected to make some regulation, which necessity compelled him to make for the preservation of his Army or for its proper government or management.

I will ask to have incorporated in my remarks at this place what I then said on that subject. I send the remarks to which I refer to the desk, and ask that the Reporter may incorporate

VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is The granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

"The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia, etc."

I have read far enough. That is all that the Constitution says as to the constitutional powers of the President as Commander in Chief. In section 8 of Article I of the Constitution it is provided as I shall read. I have a note of it, but I prefer to read from the Constitution itself. However, to save time I will read from my notes. Section 8 of Article I reads, in part, as follows:

"The Congress shall have power * * * to raise and support armies; * * * to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces."

That is all that is applicable, and I confine myself in the reading to that.

That is all that is applicable, and I confine myself in the reading to that.

Now, Mr. President, it must be apparent to anyone without any study that the constitutional power conferred upon the President of the United States as Commander in Chief is to command the Army, and the power conferred by the Constitution on the Congress is a power to raise the Army and to prescribe the laws and the rules whereby the Army shall be regulated. Nobody would pretend that the Congress had any power or that anybody else had any power over the President as the commander to direct the movement of troops, to say where they should be stationed in time of peace or how they should be directed against the enemy in time of war. He, in that particular, is absolute, without anybody to question his authority.

But, on the other hand, it seems to me, Mr. President, equally clear no one can question that the Congress has power to prescribe by law what rules and regulations shall govern the Army as to its organization, as to the size of the Army, its maximum, its minimum, as to the number of the infantry regiments, the number of cavalry regiments, the number of artillery regiments, and the number of batteries, and the number of men in each of these units of organization; and how, Mr. President, particularly, men shall be enlisted and men shall be discharged from the Army, the terms and conditions upon which they shall be revice—long service, faithful service—whether or not they shall be recognized by the Government and be rewarded by the Government. All that rests with Congress as a part of that power. As a part of that power it is competent for the Congress of the United States to provide that no man shall be summarily discharged from the Army after he has been regularly enlisted except upon certain terms and conditions; that no man in the Army shall be found guilty of any offense with which he may be charged except after he has had an opportunity to appear before a tribunal where he can present his defense, where he can be represented i

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, I call attention to what I then said and repeat it in substance, so that there may be no misunderstanding of what I have been contending for, namely, that the constitutional power of the President is the power to command, the constitutional power of the Congress is the power to regulate and govern the Army; that the President is supreme as commander and can not be interfered with by the Congress, and that the Congress is supreme in legislating for the Army and can not be interfered with by the President; that the President can make regulations only by authority of law or as a result of a necessity that Congress has not provided for.

That was my first statement. I repeated that statement in effect when I spoke here January 7. I did not suppose there would be issue taken upon that proposition. But there has On yesterday the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] cited some authorities to support his contention that this power inheres in the President to make regulations and to make orders; and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooners] contended that whatever the power of the Congress might be to regulate and govern the Army, it did not extend to the regulation of orders issued by the Commander.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] told us that our fathers made the Constitution with the British constitution in mind, and that when they provided that the President of the United States should be the Commander in Chief of the Army they had reference in their minds to the powers of the King as the commander in chief of the British army.

Mr. President, I was rather surprised to hear that kind of a statement coming from a representative of Massachusetts, the scene of the Boston tea party, Bunker Hill, and other places of great Revolutionary historic interest, for of all the men in this body he should remember that our forefathers and their predecessors fled to this continent in order that they might get away from the King, and they had no purpose at any time, certainly not when they framed the Constitution after our independence had been conquered, to create a king or to create kingly power for any man to exercise.

I have some authorities on that subject. In the first place, I call attention to what Alexander Hamilton said. In that elder, if not better, day when lawyers were lawyers and proud of their profession and ready to stand up for the law everywhere and under all circumstances, when courts were courts and fearlessly administered justice, and when Senators were Senators and spoke on the floor of this Chamber precisely what they spoke in the cloakroom, he was considered a fairly good authority on the Constitution of the United States. Alexander Hamilton, in the Federalist, said what I am about to read.

I need not tell you who Alexander Hamilton was. He was the greatest creative genius of the formative stages of our Government, the most brilliant man of his time, the best authority on government making, and the most pronounced type of all who contended for a strong centralized government. It was his contention throughout that the central government should be a strong government, as nearly the opposite of what we had under the Articles of Confederation as it was possible to make it, and to him, perhaps, more than anybody else are we indebted for our Constitution, not that he said as much in the Convention as others or took as much part there, but because he led successfully the greatest parliamentary battle ever fought on the American continent, or in the world, when he secured the ratification by the New York convention of the Constitution of the United States, which without that ratification never would have been adopted.

Mr. President, here is what Alexander Hamilton said on this I read this in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] that the Commander in Chief was given all the inherent power, the same power, that per-tained to the commander in chief of the British army. In discussing this subject in the sixty-ninth number of the Federalist,

Alexander Hamilton said:

I will not read all of it-

The President is to be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. In this respect his authority would be nominally the same with that of the King of Great Britain, but in substance much inferior to it. It would amount to nothing more than the supreme command and direction of the military and naval forces as first general and admiral of the confederacy, while that of the British King extends to the declaring of war and to the raising and regulating of fleets and armies; all which, by the Constitution under consideration, would appertain to the Legislature.

I need not read further. I have read enough to show what Mr. Hamilton's view was of the Constitution he helped to make, the Constitution which he did more than any other one man to secure the ratification of by the requisite number of States.

He did not imagine, Mr. President, that the power that was being conferred upon the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy was the same as the powers of the commander in chief of the British army. He recognized that we were undertaking here to escape not only from kingly power, but also from unwritten constitutions, and to establish governments founded on written constitutions. Those men knew exactly, and better than anybody else, what to put in a constitution to express their purpose, for they were the greatest constitution makers the world has ever known. Gladstone once said with respect to that Constitution-I can not quote his words exactly, but I can substantially—that it was the greatest work ever struck off by the hand of man at a single effort. The only criticism I would make upon that statement is that it was not a single effort. It was the ripened work of two hundred years of constitution building. Our fathers, in securing and drafting and discussing their charters, their organic laws, had come to understand the work of creating a government resting on a written constitution better than anybody else in all the world. They knew the danger of leaving anything to be inferred from the institutions in the light of which, of course, our institutions were founded.

Therefore they provided what? Not that our Commander in Chief should have the same power as the British commander in chief, but that he should be limited to the power to command, while the other power that had belonged to the British commander to regulate the army should be given to Congress.

I think that authority of itself is enough to establish the proposition for which I have been contending. But let me call attention in this connection to the fact that I cited on previous occasions a number of authorities precisely in line with what Mr. Hamilton said, and yesterday the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] cited one of them in his argument. He cited it to show that the President of the United States has power to make regulations inherent in him as Commander in Chief, as I understood the Senator. The case I refer to, as cited by him in support of that proposition, is reported in 16 Peters, known as the "Eliason case." In that case—I cited it in one of the speeches I made here on the subject-the Supreme Court said that the President had the power to make regulations when Congress had not acted with respect to a subject where regulation was necessary, and it said all such regulations as the President might see fit to make would have the effect of law. provided, Mr. President, provided they were within the legal and constitutional sphere of the President-not otherwise.

But, Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Pennsylvania cited an authority that no one else until he cited it had called attention to in this debate, O'Brien on Military Law. I had never seen the work. This is a work that was published sixty years ago. I overlooked it because I was looking for something more modern, and I shall call attention to something more modern presently. I sent at once to the Library and got this work, looked through it, to find that it is one of the best authorities on this subject I have found anywhere. I am greatly obliged to the Senator from Pennsylvania for calling my attention to it. After discussing the power of the President as Commander in Chief and after citing the constitutional provision that the President shall be the Commander in Chief and the Congress shall have power to raise armies and provide rules for the government and regulation of the same, this author proceeds. I read from page 30:

proceeds. I read from page 30:

The effect of these provisions is that Congress, after raising and equipping an army, can not use it against the liberties of the country, because it can neither command it nor appoint a commander to it. The President can do nothing detrimental to the public safety, for Congress may at any moment strike from his hands the instrument he is misusing. Independently of this, any military command contrary to law is null, and no military officer dare obey it under penalty of punishment by a military or civil court.

In all that relates to the raising of an army, to its strength, to its organization, to its criminal code, Congress is omnipotent, the President powerless. The same remark applies to the fiscal concerns of the Army.

And then, passing over a part of the text, he continues:

The command of the President is, indeed, absolute within its sphere, but its sphere is bounded on all sides by law.

It is "bounded on all sides by law." And so it is-

The moment the Executive oversteps the boundaries prescribed he becomes powerless and his commands are of no force.

I looked to see the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] in the Record this morning, but it has not yet been printed. Therefore, if I am in error in quoting him, I hope he will correct me. I understood him to say that this power conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress to provide rules for the government and regulation of the Army was not a power that authorized Congress to interfere with any order the Commander in Chief might make.
- Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator appeals to me, that is my opinion. I think Congress is given power to govern the Army through rules and regulations. I agree entirely with the Senator that neither Congress nor the President can exceed the constitutional power. Neither can the President exceed any statutory restriction.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand. All I appealed to the Senator for was to see that I did not misquote him.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.
Mr. FORAKER. I am quoting him simply from recollection, because I have had no opportunity to see his remarks in

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.
Mr. FORAKER. But now, in answer to that, Mr. President, I read again the sentence that prompted me to make that allusion to the Senator's remarks:

The moment the Executive oversteps the boundaries prescribed he becomes powerless and his commands are of no force.

That is, an order-

Mr. SPOONER. I agree to that. I said, if the Senator will permit me a moment, that where the President in the exercise of a power which he possesses, derived from the Constitution or from a law, makes an order, while the Congress may change the rule it can not review and set aside that order.

Mr. FORAKER. That is true, Mr. President; but I have been reading from Mr. Hamilton to show that the power of the President is a power to command, and that all power with respect to the regulation of the Army is vested in Congress. the Congress do not exercise that power and the necessity arise, the Commander in Chief may, from the necessity of the case, prescribe a regulation for it. I am not done reading from this author. He says further:

this author. He says further:

Congress may declare when and for what objects the Army is to be used and for what purposes it may not be used, and thus chart out accurately the limits of Executive power. And even within these limits the action of the Executive indirectly, but absolutely, depends on the concurrence of Congress, which must appropriate funds for the purpose before even a corporal's guard can be moved.

So contracted is the actual authority of the President that, but for the protective power of his qualified veto, his command might be so restricted by legislation as to destroy its utility. It is in the power of Congress not only to protect itself, but to embarrass the action of the Executive at every step. It may prohibit the approach of troops within a certain distance from the Capitol; it may raise troops for a special service, such as to garrison a particular fort or to operate in a particular district, and may declare that this corps shall serve nowhere else. In none of these or similar cases dare the President overstep the limits prescribed. The only effect of his illegal order would be to subject to punishment the officer who obeyed it.

As Commander in Chief the President may issue to the Army any military commands or orders whatever, provided they be not illegal. These orders are of binding force on those to whom they are given, not merely by virtue of law, but in consequence of the article of the Constitution appointing him supreme commander.

Then, passing over a part of the text, he continues:

Then, passing over a part of the text, he continues:

As the Executive has no legislative power it is plain that the regulations issued by him to the Army are not law; and as he is as much bound by law as any other citizen it follows that, if any of them conflict with law, they are so far null and void, otherwise they are constitutionally binding as military commands.

Or military orders, to adopt the language which was employed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. President, there is not in point of principle much difference between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself. The ence between the Senator from wisconsin and mysen. The difference is in the application of it. What I have contended for from the outset is, as expressed by this authority, that the President, in the exercise of his power as Commander in Chief, is surrounded on all sides by law, and is just as amenable with a content of the content of to law as is anybody else, and this authority, taken in connection with the interpretation of the Constitution given by Mr. Hamilton, shows that his power under the Constituion is limited to command; the same power as, he says for illustration, would belong to the Admiral of the Navy or the first General of the Army. That is what Alexander Hamilton said about it, and that is what I contend for in regard to it.

But, now, let us come down to something more recent. not been very long out of the active practice of the profession of law, but I have been out of it long enough for text writers to commence a series of publications on a new classification of law. There is no new law in it, but the classification is new. All these orders and regulations about which we have been talking are now classified by the text writers as administrative law, and a number of books have been written on this subject quite recently. I have before me one by Fairlie. I read from it at page 32, where he discusses this subject:

Military powers.—The President is by the Constitution Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and also of the State militia when in the service of the United States. Congress, however, has the power of declaring war and of military legislation. It is thus difficult, if not impossible, to draw a strict line of demarcation between the authority of Congress and that of the President. But the general principles of demarcation can be indicated, and in practice there have been very few important conflicts. Congress regulates whatever is of general and permanent importance, while the President determines all matters temporary and not general in their nature.

It is by virtue of that rule by virtue of that principle. Mr.

It is by virtue of that rule, by virtue of that principle, Mr. President, that Congress, within the exercise of its constitutional power, undertakes to regulate not only how men shall be enlisted when an army is raised, on what terms and conditions and for what length of time, what they shall be paid for their services, but also undertakes to regulate how men shall be discharged. It is just as much a permanent rule to regulate the discharge as it is to regulate the enlistment. Nobody will contend that anyone but Congress has constitutional power to raise an army. No one should contend that with respect to anything permanent in the nature of regulation anybody but Congress has the power to act. If it be true that the powers of the Commander in Chief under the Constitution of the United States are not the powers of the British King; if it be true that his powers are only those deduced from the Constitution; if it be true, as Mr. Hamilton says, that he is but the first general, then it follows, Mr. President, that he has no so-called inherent power with respect to discharges; and he has never pretended to ex-ercise the inherent power to grant discharges as President of the United States from the beginning of our Government down to this day. He never undertakes to discharge a man from the service in time of peace except in accordance with the rules prescribed for the government of discharges by Congress or by Army Regulations promulgated by the President through the Secretary of War, by virtue of authority from Congress. I might read at greater length to the same effect on that subject.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does not understand me as taking a position which contravenes what he has just read?

Mr. FORAKER. I do. Mr. SPOONER. Well-

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the Senator to say—and I understood him to say it in so many words—that the Commander in Chief, by his inherent power, without regard to the statutes, had authority to discharge a man from the service if he thought the good of the service required it, without regard to a regulation of Congress on the subject.

Mr. SPOONER. On the contrary, Mr. President, I said that it was not necessary in this matter to discuss that question.

Mr. FORAKER. I know that is what the Senator said.
Mr. SPOONER. And I did not discuss it.
Mr. FORAKER. Well, but the Senator certainly made Well, but the Senator certainly made the statement I refer to.

I said it was unnecessary to discuss the Mr. SPOONER. question, because the President proceeded under the act of Con-

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; but the Senator had spoken of the inherent power of the President, indicating the opinion that, in the exercise of his inherent power without any statutory provision, the President may so discharge a man; but he did add-and I should have added that in the statement of what the Senator said when I quoted what he said on the point to which he was addressing himself when he took exception to a portion of my remarks—he added that it was not necessary now to discuss that, because the statute of Congress so provided. Then the Senator went on to challenge all who believed that the President had this statutory power, to point out wherein it had been limited. Now, I am going to tell you wherein it has been limited, according to the opinion I have about it. I say I am at a disadvantage when I undertake to quote the Senator, because he speaks with such an entertaining manner, so elaborately, and so forcibly, and on this occasion he spoke at such length that it is impossible for me, two days afterwards, without having a chance to look at the text of his remarks, to be sure that I am quoting him accurately.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I should have been very much delighted to have printed my remarks in the RECORD the next morning, but I did not have an opportunity to read them until last night on account of the pressure of other only referred to it by way of apology for myself. That is all.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not finding any fault with that.

I want to call attention to another late work, by Goodnow on this same subject. These are modern works. At page 86, after fully discussing this subject—I am going to read very briefly, because it is not necessary to read it at length—it is sufficient to say that it agrees entirely with every authority that I have quoted—with Fairlie, with Hamilton, with 16 Peters, with O'Brien, and with all the other cases. At the foot of page 86, after fully discussing the question, he says:

Furthermore, such executive regulations, whether issued by the President or by heads of Departments acting under his direction, must conform to the law, else the courts will refuse to enforce them.

He cites 106 U. S. Reports, 466, the case of Barlow v. Jones, the syllabus of which reads as follows:

1. Animals specially imported from beyond the seas for breeding purposes are not subject to duty.

2. The Secretary of the Treasury has no authority to prescribe a regulation requiring that before admitting them free the collector shall "be satisfied that they are of superior stock, adapted to improving the breed in the United States."

The Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court, in which he said that it was competent under the law for the Secretary, with the approval of the President, to establish such regulations as had been established because the law authorized it, but that there was no power anywhere in the Secretary to prescribe a regulation, or in the President or in anybody else, that added to the law or took away from it. Therefore, when they said a certain class of animals might be admitted duty free, the Secretary could not add another necessary qualification to exempt them from duty.

Now I come to the challenge the Senator gave to point out any limitation upon the power conferred by article 4 of the Articles of War upon the President. It has been quoted so often that I suppose I need not quote it again, but if I can find it perhaps I had better do so.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have it here and will hand it to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I thank the Senator.

The fourth article of war provides as follows:

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

The Senator argues that this is a broad and unqualified conference of power, by this fourth article of war, upon the President to grant discharges; and on its face it is. He challenges us to point out any limitation upon it. Mr. President, that is the easiest thing in this whole debate. This limitation upon the President is found in all the articles providing for courts-martial, especially the sixty-second article of war. It is in one article after another, as I have heretofore pointed out. It is in these articles provided that for this and that and the other offense, enumerating every possible offense that could be foreseen and thought of beforehand that a soldier was likely to commit, he should be subject to trial by court-martial, and his punishment should be such, and only such, as the court-martial might direct. Then we have the sixty-second article. It is the omnibus article, which provides that any other offense that a soldier may commit, not specified, shall be punishable after a trial by court-martial in such manner as the court-martial may direct.

The point that I contend for is this, Mr. President, that where an enlisted man is charged with a crime, charged with an offense that is cognizable under the Articles of War, and with respect to which he is entitled to trial by court-martial, neither the President nor anybody else has the right to take the law as to that offense into his own hands. He has not the right, because in the contract of enlistment that the enlisted man enters into, it is expressly provided that he shall be ruled and governed in accordance with the Articles of War.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is conceded that one of the crimes committed at Brownsville, by soldiers or otherwise, is murder, which is a capital offense under the laws of Texas. call the Senator's attention to the fact that article 62, which he says governs all crimes, especially excepts capital cases.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly it does. I have already pointed that out and commented on it; not on this occasion, however.

Mr. CULBERSON. I want to ask the Senator, in view of the fact that there is absolutely no provision in the Articles of War punishing capital cases, does he deny that the President has authority to discharge from the Army a murderer?

Mr. FORAKER. I deny, Mr. President, that the President of Mr. FORAKER. I deny, Mr. Fresident, that the Fresident of the United States has any authority whatever with respect to discharges from the Army, except only that which is conferred upon him by statute. The power conferred upon him by the fourth article is to be construed in connection with all these other safeguards which the Congress, in enacting these Articles of War, has seen fit to throw about the enlisted man for his protection. In the case of murder he is entitled to be turned over to the civil authorities to be tried.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. It is one of the provisions, however, of the Articles of War, I believe, that a discharge may be granted on account of conviction in the civil courts. Now I yield to the

Mr. CULBERSON. I may have misunderstood the Senator, but I understood him to say that the President had no power to discharge in this case, because the punishment of every conceivable crime was provided for by the Articles of War. Now, when I point out to him that capital cases are expressly excepted and that there was a capital offense committed at Brownsville, he says, as I understand him, changing his position somewhat, that because that is punishable by State law the President had no power to discharge.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am not changing my position at all. Every conceivable crime is provided for by the Articles of War. It is provided how, if a soldier shall be charged with an offense, he shall be tried in every case. He shall be tried by a court-martial, except only in capital cases, where he shall be turned over to the civil authorities and be tried by them. That is as much a provision for the trial of the man as though the provision were that he should be tried before a general court-martial. There is nothing different in principle. The Articles of War have carefully provided for every con-ceivable case, for that case to which the Senator calls my attention, as well as for all other cases.

Mr. President, all these provisions of the Articles of War are, therefore, I say, limitations upon the broad, unqualified power conferred by the fourth article. That is the contention I made in the first remarks that I offered here, and the contention I have been making ever since.

So it is about the regulations. The regulations are made by the President and promulgated by him through the Secretary of War. They are made for the government of the Army. But, Mr. President, they are not made by virtue of his power as Commander in Chief; they are made by virtue of the fact that Congress has authorized the President to make them by express statutory provision. That duty is intrusted to him; and when he makes regulations and promulgates them it is the duty of Congress to take notice, and the Supreme Court has held that if Congress does not take exception to the regulations that are thus promulgated they have the same force and effect as law. It is competent for us at any time to take exception. Therefore, it is, Mr. President, that the provision with respect to discharges without honor is another limitation upon the power conferred by the fourth article of war.

But, says the Senator from Wisconsin, the President who promulgates these Army regulations to-day may to-morrow, when occasion arises, override them with a new regulation. That is the effect of what I understood him to say. Mr. President, that is a rather startling legal proposition for a free and constitutionally governed people to accept. I have never heard of but one instance, in modern times, at any rate, of any supreme authority of the state undertaking to override in the afternoon what was law in the forenoon without legislative intervention, but simply by executive power. The official to whom I refer was the late Oom Paul, president of the Boer republic. I do not know whether the facts were as charged or not, but in the indictment against him was that charge that if the law did not suit him when he came to apply it to a case, he forthwith changed it, and then applied it in its changed form, making the law from day to day, if he saw fit, just what he wished to make it. Is it possible that we are to have that kind of lawmaking in this country? I take it not even the President would stand for that sort of a contention, much as he might like to make the law fit this particular case.

Mr. President, the President can not do it, for this reason: There is a limitation upon his power in that respect. Every one of the men discharged by this order was enlisted after the regulation to which I refer—the one hundred and forty-sixth regulation-was put into its present form, and the contract of each man is therefore that he submits to be governed according to the rules and Articles of War; according to the regulations and Articles of War-

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President— Mr. FORAKER. In a moment. So it was that in the form in which it now stands that regulation was written into the contract of every one of these 167 men who were discharged. It was a part of the contract; and, being a contract right, not even the President himself could change it. He may change the regulations, and thus affect all men enlisted afterwards, but he could not give it a retroactive effect, so as to enable him to discharge these men in violation of regulations existing when they

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.
Mr. MALLORY. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator from Ohio. If I understand his position aright, it is that wherever the Articles of War prescribe there shall be a court-martial for an offense the President is debarred from discharging a soldier when guilty of such offense?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.
Mr. MALLORY. How does the Senator account for the approving by himself of the action of the President in discharging some men who had been guilty of fraudulent enlistment and who had deserted, perhaps, without subjecting them to a court-martial? There are some 352 cases, including some of those of which, I understand, the Senator from Ohio approved.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I take great pleasure in reminding the Senator that I have spoken on that subject explicitly, and I have challenged the War Department, and I have challenged any Senator who wants to speak in opposition to what I am contending for, to bring forward a single case out of the 352 that are referred to where a discharge was not granted in effect as a favor instead of as a punishment. a number of illustrations. A man comes forward and he petitions to be discharged from the service. There are reasons why his officers may think he is of no value in the service, and they are willing to have him discharged. The case being laid before the President, and the man wanting it, the President discharges him. But now let me suggest to the Senator the reverse of that. If the President, without regard to the state of facts, can discharge without honor, he can discharge without any facts whatever. That is the ultimate result of the argument the Senator contends for, and if he can discharge three companies without any reason except that he so wills, he can discharge the whole Army simply because he wishes to do so. Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. If the President is required by law to subject any man who violates one of those articles to a court-martial, it does not lie in the province of the President to grant any favor or to permit a discharge simply because he chooses to oblige a transgressor. The Senator approved both of the cases to which I have referred, and yet fraudulent enlistment and desertion are punishable specifically by court-martial.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; but if the soldier, as I have heretofore said repeatedly in this debate, denies the charge that he was fraudulently enlisted or that he deserted, and stands upon his rights, the President has no power, except only to court-martial him, for such is the law. But if the soldier says, "Yes; I did make a misrepresentation; I am sorry for it; I want to get out, and I am willing to take a discharge without honor," then the President has power to give it.

President, the point is that a discharge without honor is limited necessarily, because of the construction that we must give to the other articles of war, to cases where a man is discharged, not as a criminal or because by Executive order he has been found guilty of a crime, but where he comes and makes no contention, but submits and accepts, and is willing to accept, and is usually glad to get, a discharge "without honor." It is a matter of favor and not of penalty.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. If there be in the 352 cases one different from what I have said, then let somebody produce it. Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to suggest to the Senator that the word "given" in the fourth article—providing that no dis-charge shall be "given"—exactly fits his own contention and confirms it.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. And absolutely makes it certain that that is the only method by which a discharge can be given. It is a discharge made not by order, as for a punishment, but given as a matter of grace.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that word. It does support the contention. But, Mr. President, if the word "given" were not there, but some other word, it would have the same general effect. Of necessity, we would have to conclude, if we gave effect to the other articles of war, that where a man is charged with crime and denies it and stands upon his rights, he has a right to trial, and there is no power lodged anywhere to say he is guilty and order him to be dismissed; there is no power lodged anywhere to indict a man by order, try a man by order, convict a man by order, and then punish him by order.

Mr. President, there is another limitation upon the power of the President, and that is the spirit of American institutions that runs through all our legislation and all our political relations—the spirit that every man somewhere and some time and in some manner shall have his day in court when charged with crime. That, Mr. President, has been the law of the world from the beginning of civilization.

I am reminded of the trial of Paul before Agrippa. member that Festus reported the case of Paul to Agrippa, and that he declined to punish him or to find him guilty of any offense until he had a chance to be heard. I read verses 14, 15, and 16 of the twenty-fifth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles:

14. And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the King, saying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix.

15. About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

16. To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have license to answer for himself concerning the crime laid against him.

That, Mr. President, has ever been the law of every civilized and every Christian country in all the history of the world. No man shall be convicted of crime until after he has been permitted to face his accusers and cross-examine the witnesses. Is it possible that we, in this twentieth century, with our boasted constitutional liberty, are behind the Romans of two thousand years ago? No; it is elementary, and when in the fifth amendment to the Constitution it was provided that life, liberty, or property should not be taken without due process of law, and then the Army and the Navy were excepted from that provision, the Congress, recognizing the incongruity of such a provision with the spirit of liberty and the nature of our institutions, provided that the enlisted man should have due process of law, should have a right to trial.

What is due process of law? Due process of law is nothing more than being heard and punished according to the law of the land, and so Congress made a law of the land for the enlisted man who had been put outside the provision of the fifth amendment to the Constitution. That law so made by Congress has Does any man need to be told that continued until this day. anything in conflict with the spirit of American liberty and American justice and American right is un-American? Shall a man who has served his country for twenty-six years, who has borne the flag of this nation in battle always to victory, who has an honorable record—as honorable as any man in the public service, from the President down to the lowest-be disgraced before the world, branded as a criminal, without being given a chance somewhere to say to an authority authorized to hear him, "I am not guilty; I have not committed this offense," and prove his contention if he can? If such is the law, it is a shame and a disgrace to the American people.

It was because of this spirit of our institutions that the Congress carefully so provided, and all the more carefully because enlisted men in the Army are under officers who have a certain measure of very autocratic power; under officers frequently far removed from courts of justice and from those to whom the enlisted men could appeal if their rights were being taken away from them. For such reasons has the Congress provided that every man in the Army who is charged with a crime shall have a right to be tried before a court-martial, shall have a right to come and present his defense, if he claims to have one.

All these men claim to have a defense. I do not know whether their defense is good or not. That remains to be seen. I am not going to be drawn into a discussion of the merits of this testimony, although by other Senators there has been much discussion of that character. I am confining myself to the great, broad question that applies to white men as well as to black men. I am not going to belittle and dwarf this question of constitutional power on the one side and constitutional right and liberty on the other by introducing the race problem or any other question that would belittle it. It is a great, broad, living question, and we should deal with it with a sense of that fact.

But the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] told us in an effort he was making to evade-I do not use that word in an offensive sense-the restrictions of the Articles of War as to trial and the regulations as to discharge without honor, he contended, I say, in order to escape the effects of them, as I understood him always-let that be understood-that no charges have been preferred against these men; that they do not stand charged with anything, in a technical sense. Of course he could not mean in any other. And he says further, "Neither are they so charged nor have they been punished." Let us see if they have not been both charged and punished. Who is it that arriving these mens before the world? The Investor of the country o raigns these men before the world? The Inspector-General of the Army, General Garlington, is one, Major Blocksom, an in-spector, is another, and the President of the United States and the Secretary of War speak to the same effect. What do they say? These are not indefinite men, indefinite individuals. They are the highest officials of the nation. They say to Congress—the President does and the Secretary does, and they cause the Army officials to say the same thing by transmitting their reports—that some of these men have committed murder, many of them have committed perjury, all of them possibly have committed misprision of felony by refusing to tell what the men say they do not know anything about. The President tells us of the savagery of these men, of the brutal crime they committed, of the murder they committed. He speaks of them in his last message as midnight assassins. All these terms are justifiable when the men are shown to be guilty and to the extent they are shown to be guilty, but I am not speaking of that. I am speaking of the question whether or not they are charged by anybody with any offense. Is not that a charge? Is not that an official charge? Is not that the worst possible form of charge that could be made against them?

And the punishment. It is not adequate, everybody agrees, for a murderer if he be found to have been a murderer to simply dismiss him from the Army without his extra pay or with his right to retire on pay taken away from him as a result of it. That is not punishment of an adequate character. But, as I said once before, while that is true, yet it is punishment of the severest character to men who may be innocent of all crime. I have not heard anybody contend that all the men in this battallon are guilty of an offense. I have heard it contended that from fifteen to twenty were guilty of shooting up the town, and that they were all murderers because murder was committed. To the extent that it may be established by testimony, that will be the result. It must be that they had accessories before the fact and accessories after the fact. If they did any such thing as charged, necessarily they had, and those who were accessories before and after the fact are equally guilty, we will assume, at least morally, whatever the local statute may say. That is the character of the charge that is made.

I have before me the President's message, the one he sent to Congress December 19, in which these men are arraigned in this language:

In short, the evidence proves conclusively that a number of the soldiers engaged in a deliberate and concerted attack, as cold blooded as it was cowardly; the purpose being to terrorize the community, and to kill or injure men, women, and children in their homes and beds or on the streets, and this at an hour of the night when concerted or effective resistance or defense was out of the question, and when detection by identification of the criminals in the United States uniform was well-nigh impossible. So much for the original crime, A blacker never stained the annals of our Army.

I ask that the remainder of the paragraph, as I have marked it, be incorporated by the Reporter in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

It has been supplemented by another, only less black, in the shape of a successful conspiracy of silence for the purpose of shielding those who took part in the original conspiracy of murder. These soldiers were not schoolboys on a frolic. They were full-grown men, in the uniform of the United States Army, armed with deadly weapons, sworn to uphoid the laws of the United States, and under every obligation of oath and honor not merely to refrain from criminality, but with the sturdiest rigor to hunt down criminality; and the crime they committed or connived at was murder. They perverted the power put into their hands to sustain the law into the most deadly violation of the law.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate unduly, so I shall hurry along.

It is said, "Now, what are you going to do if you have an investigation?" It will be time to cross the river when we get to it. I yesterday stated that one purpose of this investigation was to give these men the opportunity, if any of them can avail themselves of it, to show that they have no responsibility whatever for this crime, and that they have not committed the offense of withholding knowledge, for they have no knowledge. I do not know how many of them can show that they are without offense in that and in every other particular. But I am sure, from what I have been advised of, that many of them can; the great majority of them can. If so, it is our duty to establish that fact, to the end that the President may, as he has said he would do in such a contingency, act with favor in the reinstatement of these men and the restoration of them to all rights which they have improperly lost by reason of his order including innocent men.

That is true without regard to the evidence which has been sent here, taken recently by Mr. Purdy. I am not going to comment on that now. I have not read it all yet, but I have read most of it. But when I have read it all, at a later day and at a more appropriate time I shall have something to say about it. For the present I want to say with respect to it that it does For the present I want to say with respect to it that it does not relieve this case from the objections that I have been urg-ing against the procedure leading up to the discharge of these men, because this testimony was taken ex parte—taken by offi-cials who were sent there by the President to investigate and to secure testimony without these men themselves or through any representative having an opportunity to defend, to appear, to We do not in that way convict men of crime in this country, not even soldiers. The lowliest citizen, the humblest man, is entitled to his day in court, and that is true though he may be a soldier in the United States Army. His court will be a military court instead of a civil court. That is the only difference.

Now, I think we ought to have this investigation on the President's account, to the end that he, upon testimony properly taken, where everybody has a right to be heard, may be sustained and vindicated if the testimony shall have that effect; for the credit of the Army, without regard to what the result may be; for the sake of common decency, and to be in accord with the spirit of American institutions.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to interrupt him for a minute?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that all that evidence is confined to the issue whether these men committed that raid, and not whether there was any misprision of the crime.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is exactly right; and on that point General Garlington says he thinks probably there is a conspiracy of silence, but there is no evidence whatever to show it. That is almost his exact language, I believe. It is quite as strong, at any rate.

Now, I want to come to something else, and I desire to hurry I have been amazed at the feeling that breaks out in this country whenever something is done which involves the colored man, especially if it be some injustice or wrong to him. If my colleagues on the other side will allow me to say so, it is surprising to me, in connection with lynchings in the South and, for that matter, also in the North. It does not seem to be enough to put a man to death outside the law—without waiting for the law-but it must be done with brutality. He must be burned at the stake, as has been done in some instances, or the poor victim is put to some horrible terture in connection with his lynching, frequently something that would disgrace

Indian savages

Now, that spirit has been cropping out here to some extent. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] the other day, in speaking, told us what had happened at Athens, Ohio. I do not want to comment upon that except only to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of War did in that case what I think it was right and proper for him to do, notwithstanding the protests that were made against it. When he was informed that some soldiers had been engaged in the shooting up of the town of Athens; that they had shot a corporal of the provost guard and killed him and severely wounded a sergeant and two or three others, I believe, and that the men had been arrested and that their cases were to be brought before the grand jury, and that they would be put on trial for murder, the Secretary of War directed the Judge-Advocate-General to send one of his staff to Athens to defend those men, and the Attorney-General of the United States was importuned to have the district attorney for the southern district of Ohio, in which Athens was situated, to attend and care for and protect and look out for and defend the rights of these men. And the Judge-Advocate-General appeared and the district attorney, by his assistant, ap-

All that was done by the Government, and when General GROSVENOR, as it has been shown by the evidence put in the RECORD, wrote to the Secretary of War protesting against the Government intervening to defend murderers, as he charged these men with being, the Secretary of War said he justified his action on the ground that an enlisted man, when he gets into trouble of that kind, should be treated as in some sense a ward of the Government because of his helpless condition. The Government did everything in its power to see that they were protected. The testimony was marshaled to show their inno-cence in so far as it could be. The men were finally tried and some of them were convicted, and one of them is now in the penitentiary of Ohio.

Mr. President, that rule was not followed in this case. anybody can think of anybody more helpless than a discharged, discredited negro soldier in Brownsville, I would like to know who it would be.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply rise, in view of the statement of the Senator, to remind him that the assistant district attorney for the southern district of Texas was sent at the request of the Secretary of War to see that these men had a fair trial

Mr. FORAKER. If that be true, I stand corrected, and I am much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that This is the first time I have heard of it, and if there is anything of that nature in this record I would be obliged if the Senator would point it out. I have overlooked it if there is.

Mr. CULBERSON. The report of the assistant district attorney is in the record.

Mr. FORAKER. I have overlooked it.

Mr. CULBERSON. His name is A. C. Hamilton. Mr. FORAKER. Yes; since the Senator mentions the name, recall there is something of the kind in the record. Mr. CULBERSON. It was quite early.

Mr. FORAKER. Perhaps so; but what I am talking about is what is being done now. Men are being sent, a representative from the Department of Justice and a representative of the Army, to Brownsville, what for? To get testimony that would look to the defense of these men in any contingency? They claim they are innocent. They make a claim that the men at Athens could not and did not pretend to make. These men claim they are innocent and swear they are innocent, and because they have all sworn they are innocent, and because the testimony first sent to Congress seemed inadequate to justify the action that had been taken, officers of the Government are sent there to secure and send here testimony looking to their conviction. Their defense and testimony for them receive no consideration whatever.

Now, Mr. President, that is not all. They sent to us in the President's message what purports to be a history of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] in his speech the other day—and he must not take exception to the fact that I take exception to something that was said by one who is assisting, as he announced, in the trial of this case—the Senator took occasion to say that the record sent to the Senate by the President of the United States as an exhibit to his message shows that these discharged men are a set of brutal, murderous, cutthroats, or something like that. I can not quote his language exactly, but that is the effect of it. I know he used the word "cutthroats" and I know he used the word "brutal," and I know he used the word "murderous." How many other adjectives he employed I do not recall That is what he said. Other Senators have spoken to the same effect. Quite a number have told us that they were vicious, that they were brutal, that they ought to be called the "Bloody Twenty-fifth," and so forth, and so on.

Let me call the attention of Senators to the fact that not a single man of the 167 discharged had anything whatever to do with any one of the offenses recited in this record of the Twentyfifth-not one of them-nor did any one of the companies of this battalion have anything to do with any shooting affray in all the forty years this regiment has been in existence. Let me analyze this record. It is set out here with great particularity, and I call the attention of every Senator to it. In this record, at page 315, is given first an official account of the shooting affair at Sturgis City, Dak. I can not read it. It is not necessary. There was a shooting affray, denominated properly by that name. One man was shot and killed, and it was a murder, and there was no excuse for it, and I would not stand here to extenuate to the extent of one iota the crime committed by the men who did that shooting; and yet there were extenuating and provoking causes that led to it. But let it stand as murder committed by those men. But who were those men? They all belonged to Company H, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. Not one of them belonged to Company B, C, or D, and that happened in 1885, twenty-two years ago. Every man connected with that shooting long ago was mustered out of the service, some after they had been tried and convicted for that crime.

But, while I will not stop to read that, let me in justice to this much-abused regiment, read what Gen. Alfred H. Terry saw fit to say in his official report on that subject. At page 359 of Senate Document 155 there will be found his official report. He was the commanding officer. He said:

I have had much experience with colored troops, and I have always found them as well behaved and as amenable to discipline as any white troops that we have. The characteristic submissiveness of their race is manifested in the readiness with which they yield to military control.

They are much more temperate than our white troops, and crime and disorders resulting from intexication are comparatively rare among

Passing over a few paragraphs, he says, further:

Passing over a few paragraphs, he says, further:

I take it for granted that in the Territory of Dakota the keeping of houses of ill-fame is prohibited by law, but notwithstanding the law there are in the town two brothels which would appear to have been established for the express purpose of catering to the taste and pandering to the passions of the colored troops, for they are "stocked" with colored prostitutes—negresses and mulattoes.

They are, I am assured, places of the vilest character, and it was at one of them that the affray of September 19 occurred. Had no such place existed it is most improbable that any affray would have occurred, and if the people of Sturgis City suffer such places to exist they must. I submit, expect the natural result of their existence—frequent broils, and from time to time the commission of the most serious crimes. And I submit further that until the people of the town shall have suppressed these dens, which equally debauch the troops of the post and threaten their own safety, they will not be in a position to ask the Government to change its garrison.

Now, that is one. There was a shooting. There was a man

Now, that is one. There was a shooting. There was a man lled. I do not pretend to extenuate or to apologize for it.

Only as an act of justice I read what the commanding officer said about it, and every man knows that we never had in the United States service a more conservative, conscientious, and capable man to judge honestly than Alfred H. Terry, a majorgeneral of the volunteers during the civil war and a brigadiergeneral at the time when this shooting affray occurred.

Moreover, there was a board appointed in that case. Did the President of the United States, by order, discharge somebody because of that shooting? No; they convened a board of in-quiry and they investigated it. There was the same effort there to conceal as is charged here, but when the trial came on the guilty parties were discovered. The testimony established the guilt, and they were all brought to punishment.

What is the next case? One of these bloody shooting affrays, the only one that any one of the companies of this battalion had anything to do with. It happened at San Carlos, in Arizona. It was not a shooting scrape at all, but a case where some men of Company C got into a sort of fist fight with some of the Indians stationed at that agency, and the soldiers got the better of the Indians and beat them up pretty badly with clubs; but there was no shooting. Nobody was armed on either side. There was nothing in connection with that occurrence that has not occurred a hundred times in connection with white companies and white regiments. I pass that by as not worthy of any further comment.

Mr. SPOONER. The men were identified in that case and punished.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. And now the Senator suggests to my mind an important point. I said here the other day that if, out of the 170 men then belonging to this battalion stationed at Fort Brown, 16 to 20 of the number had organized a raid, had plotted a shooting up of the town, and then carried it out in the way indicated, of necessity they must have accessories before and accessories after the fact; and it seemed to me utterly impossible that a crime of such magnitude, with so many men engaged in it, could be carried out in the way indicated and they or some of them not be discovered by anybody.

But it is said the colored men were in a conspiracy and they would not discover them. It is conceded that the white offi-cers—the commissioned officers—were not in the plot. They were present. Immediately after the firing commenced they repaired to the barracks and saw the men formed in line, and stood by while the roll was called. It has been said that the roll was carelessly called. I do not think so. I know enough of what the facts are to believe that it was carefully called and every man was there, and that the roll was practically called before the firing ceased, and that the commissioned officers stood by the side of the orderlies who were calling the roll, and that they were on the alert, especially to see anybody who might be approaching from the city, from which point they thought they were being attacked. No commissioned officer saw anybody come and join the rolls. anybody come and join the ranks.

Does anyone contend that sixteen or twenty men who had been 300 yards, or whatever the distance may be, down in the town shooting up the town, in the state of excitement they would necessarily be under, could come after the firing rushing back to the garrison, pass around the barracks, join the companies, and form in line in front of the barracks and not be detected by the commissioned officers or by the noncommis-sioned officers who called the roll?

Mr. President, this may amount to nothing in the final result, but now it amounts to this: It is such an extraordinary thing that I was justified in saying, as I did the other day, that you may search the history of criminal jurisprudence in vain from the beginning of the world to this time to find anything like it successfully carried out with nobody to tell it, not a clew to be found to convict any one of the men. You will search in vain for anything like it. At Sturgis City and at San Carlos and all the other places where the conspirators killed some-body they undertook to conceal their crime, but in every in-stance the crime was detected. Witnesses were found. They were found because the men were guilty. "Murder will out" to-day as much as when that fact was first announced. But so much for that.

Now I come to another case, the third, the shooting at Winnemucca; and I want the attention of Senators, because I have a rather unpleasant duty to perform with respect to this alleged shooting. The resolutions of the Senate were sent to the War Department and to the President, calling for all the facts relating to these discharges and calling for the history of this regiment. In response we got, among other things, what purported to be a history of the shooting at Winnemucca. . The record of the shooting at Winnemucca, as shown by this record, consisted of a report made by S. W. Groesbeck, Judge-Advocate-General of the United States Army; a recommendation by William R. Shafter, major-general commanding, two or three short affidavits, and a very extended sensational newspaper account of the The upshot of it all, according to the report made by shooting. the Judge-Advocate-General and this newspaper account, is that not Companies B, C. and D, but Companies L and M, of the Twenty-fifth, with Company K, of the Twenty-fourth, were on their way to the Philippines. They stopped at this little place in Nevada, called Winnemucca, and the officers went from the train to get their suppers. It was about 7.30 in the evening. While they were getting their suppers a report was brought to them that there was a shooting affray occurring in a saloon. They immediately repaired to it, but found that all the men who had been at the saloon had returned to the train. The newspaper account goes on to tell how the men went into that saloon, a little place 20 by 20 feet, which had a bar, with tables and There could not have been very many men in it. They chairs. seemed like a good many perhaps. They went in to get some refreshments, and they got into some kind of a squabble, and one of them whipped out his revolver, as the newspaper says, and shot the bartender and seriously wounded him. The troops were immediately inspected. No guilty man could be found among them. No gun could be found that had been discharged and no revolver that had been discharged. The troops had to hurry on, although they were kept there some hours. In due time they went on board the transport at San Francisco; and when they were on the Pacific Ocean, without anybody to represent them, the Judge-Advocate-General who makes this report was sent to Winnemucca, and he there got an ex parte statement, such as had been published in the newspapers; and his report was made in accordance with that. General Shafter, reviewing that report, recommended that these companies be fined to the extent of $250, and there the record sent us stops

Well, I read it over and I thought I would like to know whether that fine was paid. Somehow or other it seemed to me that possibly something had been omitted, and so I wrote to the Secretary of War calling his attention to this state of the records, and inquiring whether or not there were any more correspondence or orders and documents of any kind on file in the War Department having reference to this shooting.

In answer to that in due time I received the following, inclosed in a letter from the Secretary of War, giving additional information in regard to that shooting. I ask that it may be printed in full in my remarks as a part of the same.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT. Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I inclose two letters from Mr. Bert Klucny, of Winnemucca. Nev., a constituent of mine, relative to a claim he and others have for depredations committed by some negro troops, en route to the Philippines, at Winnemucca. The letters will give you all the information I have regarding the matter. Will you kindly advise me whether such claims have ever been filed in your Department; and if so, what disposition has been made of them? Kindly return the letters with your reply, and greatly oblige,

Yours, respectfully,

Francis G. Newlands.

The Adjutant Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Sir: In compliance with instructions from your office, I have the honor to submit the following report relative to the affair at Winnemucca, Nev. The train bearing Companies L and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry, and K, Twenty-fourth Infantry, arrived at this town about dark June 29, 1899. The majority of the officers, myself included, proceeded to the nearest eating house for supper. During the meal a citizen entered the room and reported that the soldiers had wrecked a saloon and shot a man.

All the officers immediately left the room, and I proceeded at once to the cars occupied by Company L, Twenty-fifth Infantry, which company I commanded.

The men were in or about the cars, quiet and orderly; the street was filled with citizens, and more or less excitement prevailed. In a few minutes the commanding officer ordered me to form my company. It was formed outside the car, roll called, all were present, and the mewere then carefully inspected by several of the citizens, who claimed them, questioned the men, and gave all possible assistance to locate the guilty parties. Sergeant Smith, an old soldier with an excellent record, was recognized as having been in the saloon. He admitted it; stated that he went there immediately upon the arrival of the train, sat at a table, had some beer, paid for it, and returned to his car, and was in the car when the discharge of firearms took place, and that he had no knowledge of the affair. His statements were corroborated and he was believed. His revolver and ammunition were examined. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as issued. A private named Porter was also recognized as having been in the saloon. It was proved that he sat at the table with Sergeant Smith and that the been had was paid for. He also claimed to have left the saloon before the trouble and shooting began. Neither man could give any information on the subject. Twice again the company was formed outside the car and carefully inspected by the sheriff and myself; n been fired and all ammunition was as issued. Suddenly the search for the soldier who had fired the shot which had hit a citizen stopped and a new one begun for a soldier who was said to have stolen some four bottles of beer.

L said he was in the saloon at the time, had seen the man take the beer, and could recognize him. The company was again inspected by the sheriff, myself, and the said recruit. He could not identify the alleged thief. We were detained at Winnmucca some six hours. During the time men were quiet and orderly. I asked repeated questions of the various men, all disclaimed any knowledge or participation in the affair, and it was impossible to select any one as having been engaged in the same. I did not enter or go near the saloon in question and know nothing as to its condition at any time. As the commanding officer of Company L, Twenty-fifth Infanity, and being present at the time, it is only fair and just, both to myself and the men to reply to certain statements in the report of the judge-advocate, especially his "conclusions as to the ones," and myself were the men of the north and the report of the judge-advocate, especially his "conclusions as to the ones," and allowed to leave its coaches in a body, as might be inferred, page 4, said report. The companies were recruited to an unusual size, and it did not take may colored soldiers at about dark to give the impression that the streets of Winnemucca were crowded. Fewer still, that said saloon was crowded—a room 20 by 20, containing bar, table, and chairs. Company L was the first company to be inspected; when its inspection was over much surprise was evinced when it was learned that this was only one-third-of the soldiers in said saloon. When we reached Winnemucca the men had had their supper, the one should be added to the supper should not prevail that men of Company K, Twenty-fourth Infantry, were not allowed to leave the train at stations. I was present and civilians, that a sergent of this company was the only person found on the train wh found, it would not have been the first time that such a law had been found to have been broken.

The bullet extracted from the said Deiss was shown to officers in the car. There could be no possible doubt. It was not Government ammunition, neither was it fired from a Government revolver. Christopher Deiss was shot with a small-caliber revolver while standing inside the saloon near the bar. Why soliders armed with a Government revolver, caliber .38, were so carefully inspected to find the party who had fired this shot I did not understand. It certainly would not have been unreasonable to have inspected the bar and others connected therewith in the attempt to locate party who had fired the shot.

In conclusion, I have never believed that soldiers did the shoting. They had no motive. I have no doubt the bar was overtaxed, that the men were not being served fast enough and began helping themselves, and that then measures were taken to clear the saloon. I think it well understood that barrooms are, as a rule, supplied with firearms, within easy reach for cases of emergency. If any inspection was made of sald saloon, I did not hear of it.

The suddenness with which the attempt to locate the party who had fired the shot which might have killed the said Deiss was dropped, not to be again taken up, and a search begun for a soldier who was said to have stolen some four bottles of beer only tended to confirm my impressions and to infer that some of the citizens at least had their own doubts on the subject.

Very respectfully,

A. B. Shattuck,

A. B. SHATTUCK, Captain and Quartermaster, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

The Adjutant Twenty-Fifth Infantry, Fort Niobrara, Nebr

Sir: I have carefully investigated this case. There are only nineteen men in the company now who were in the company at that date; none of these were present at the disturbance, and their statements are all from hearsay. The first sergeant of the company, Wyatt Huffman, was then first sergeant of the company, and might be able to throw some light on the subject, but he is on furlough and will not return until after the middle of June.

I was not with the regiment at that time.

Very respectfully,

J. P. O'NEIL.

FORT NIOBRARA, NEBR., June 16, 1903.

The ADJUTANT, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

SIR: In compliance with seventh indorsement, I have the honor to submit the following statement regarding the disturbance at Winnemucca, Nev., June 29, 1899.

This affair happened so long ago that my memory is clear only as to certain prominent points, which are as follows:

About dark on the evening of June 29 the train with Companies I, and M, Twenty-fifth Infantry, en route to San Francisco, reached Winnemucca. I was at that time adjutant of the Second Battalion, Twenty-fifth Infantry. Shortly after the train stopped most, or may be all, of the officers went to a hotel a short distance from the station for supper. While we were eating a civilian came in and said that a soldier had shot a civilian in a saloon near the station. The officers at once left the hotel and went to the train; when we reached there all the enlisted men who had left the train had returned, and all was quiet.

I did not enter or examine the saloon, or see the man who had been shot.

shot.

The district attorney, with other officials of the town, came to the train, and every assistance was given them to identify, if possible, the soldier or soldiers who, they claimed, were involved in the shooting. The troops were turned out three or four times for their inspection, every soldier being present. Although several civilians claimed to be able to recognize the soldiers who were guilty, they were unable to do so.

The bullet extracted from the man who, it was claimed, was shot by a soldier proved on examination not to be a 28 caliber service bullet.

The revolvers in the possession of the men, upon inspection, showed no evidence of having been fired recently.

My opinion at the time was that, while there had been some sort of disturbance in the saloon, it was not proven that the shooting was done by a soldier, nor did the evidence we could gather and an examination of the bullet even indicate strongly that such was the case. This opinion I have had no reason to change.

To the best of my recollection the matter of guards and permitting men to leave cars at the stations was turned over to the company commanders and managed by them, subject to the approval of the battalion commander.

Very respectfully,

Samuel P. Lyon,
Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

SAMUEL P. LYON, Captain, Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Washington, August 19, 1993.

My Dear Sir: The Department duly received your letter of April 6 last, inclosing two communications from Mr. Bert Klucny relative to claims of himself and Chris. Delss for damages alleged to have been sustained at the hands of United States colored troops while passing through the town of Winnemucca, Nev., en route to the Philippines, and asking if the said claims have ever been filed in the War Department; and if so, what disposition has been made of them.

Replying thereto, I beg to inform you that no such claims are on file in the Department, and, after considering the data available in the case, it is not thought that anything can now be done by the Department toward granting compensation either to Mr. Klucny or to Mr. Delss for what damage they may have suffered.

The inclosures above referred to are returned herewith, as requested.

Very respectfully,

W. SANGER, Assistant Secretary of War.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, United States Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I call attention to the report by George B. Davis, Judge-Advocate-General, on this subject; also a report by Capt. A. B. Shattuck, quartermaster of the Twenty-fifth Infantry at the time, and also a report of Capt. Samuel P. Lyon, captain of one of the companies. I want to read some of this. All this was omitted, Mr. President, for some reason, when we were given an account of the shooting at Winnemucca. were given an account which showed that colored soldiers had done the shooting. Now, what does this say? Captain Shattuck in making a report on the subject, dated at Fort Niebrara, Nebr., April 30, 1903, says what I shall read. The regiment had gone to the Philippines and had returned when he was called upon for this report.

had gone to the Philippines and had returned when he was called upon for this report.

FORT NIOBRABA, NEBR., April 39, 1903.

Sir: In compliance with instructions from your office I have the honor to submit the following report relative to the affair at Winnemucca, Nev. The train bearing Companies L and M. Twenty-fifth Infantry, and K. Twenty-forth Infantry, arrived at this town about dark June 29, 1899. The majority of the officers, myself included, proceeded to the nearest eating house for supper. He admitted it, stated that he went there immediately upon the arrival of the train, sat at a table, had some beer, paid for it, and returned to his car, and was in the car when the discharge of firearms took place, and that he had no knowledge of the affair. His statements were corroborated, and he was believed. His revolver and ammunition was as issued. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as issued. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as issued. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as issued. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as issued. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as issued. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as issued. The revolver had not been fired and his ammunition was as a subject to the subject. Twice again the company was formed outside the car and carefully i were not allowed to leave the train at station. I was present and saw them.

All soldiers, so far as I observed, conducted themselves well on such occasions. It was a matter of talk in the officers' car, between officers and civilians, that a sergeant of this company was the only person found on the train whose revolver had been discharged, evidently some time before, said to have been at prairie dogs after leaving Fort Assimilione, and which explanation was, I believe, satisfactory. If the statements of the noncommissioned officers of said company are to receive such weight (p. 4, J. A.'s report) the statements of noncommissioned of the other companies present should receive equal weight. At the time and place I heard no statements made by the civilians which relieved from suspicion one company more than another.

The coaches occupied by Company L, Twenty-fifth Infantry, were in rear and nearly opposite said saloon. When the shooting began, it would have been the most natural thing for those men off the train to get on at the nearest point and this is probably just what they did do, and then proceeded to their proper cars.

I have read all that with care, because it is all responsive to

I have read all that with care, because it is all responsive to the charges that are made against these men in the Judge-Advocate-General's report, which has been sent to us as though a correct and undisputed account of what occurred.

Now, passing over a sentence and coming to the point, he points out how the man who was wounded had the bullet extracted from him, and says:

The bullet extracted from the said Deiss was shown to officers in the car. There could be no possible doubt. It was not Government ammunition, neither was it fired from a Government revolver. Christopher Deiss was shot with a small caliber revolver while standing inside the saloon near the bar.

So he goes on, Mr. President. I have read enough to show the nature of it. Captain Lyon sustains what Captain Shattuck says; every other officer who makes a report sustains him, and thus it is shown by this testimony that there is no reliance to be placed in the Judge-Advocate-General's report that was sent Therefore, so far as Winnemucca is concerned, there was no shooting by any member of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, let alone by any member of either Company B, Company C, or Company D, neither of which companies was there. It is not for me to say why this important testimony was withheld when we were asking for the history of these shooting affrays. These helpless wards of the Nation were put in the attitude of having undertaken to murder a man on whose premises they had gone, without at the same time giving us this conclusive testimony to show they had not done any such thing. I make no comment; it is not necessary.

I have shown that at Fort Sturgis, twenty-seven years ago, some men from Company H did shoot and kill a man in a raiding party. I have shown that at San Carlos some men of Company C got into an affray of some kind, without guns or deadly weapons, and had a fight, in which the negroes got the better of some Indians. I have shown that at Winnemucca, where it was undertaken by the records sent us to establish that they did some shooting, they did not do any shooting. I do not have to comment on it. It is not necessary. It speaks for itself.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the statement he made a little while ago as erroneous in regard to all the men having been engaged in these shooting scrapes having been punished. Nothing has ever been done with those who killed a negro woman at Fort Niobrara.

Mr. FORAKER. I am coming to that in a minute, to show you that they did not kill any negro woman at Fort Niobrara. Mr. TILLMAN. Then, in the name of common sense, what did the War Department mean by sending us all this stuff?

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I want to know. I will show you what it is. That is what I am here for. I will show you what was done at Fort Niobrara in a minute.

But next came a most deplorable shooting affray, that which occurred at Fort Bliss, at El Paso, Tex. There a member of Company A-not one of these three companies-a member of Company A of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was arrested and put in jail. His comrades wanted to bail him out. They would not accept bail. This is at page 352. His comrades went back to camp, 2 or 3 miles distant, and at midnight or later got away from the sergeant in charge of the gun racks the key, went to the gun racks and took out their guns, organized a raiding party of four or five men, marched back to the jail with axes and guns to liberate their comrade, and in the affray that resulted one of the soldiers was killed and one of the jailers was killed.

Now, that was a crime without any excuse at all in law. I am not here to extenuate it. But, Mr. President, General McKibben, known to most Senators as one of the most splendid officers in the Army, made a report upon that, in which he showed there was great provocation. I do not cite that for the purpose of extenuating the crime, but simply that justice may be done, and that these men, who for forty years have stood faithfully to the flag and the honor of their country, shall not, in addition to being denounced as guilty of this particular crime,

Now, I come to the last, Fort Niobrara; and what about Fort Niobrara? This regiment was stationed there. Company B was there along with some other companies of the regiment.
There was a place a mile and a half distant from the reservation where a drinking place was kept. About midnight some men fired into that place, wounded two people, one of them a colored soldier belonging to Company B, who was sitting there simply a guest in the establishment. Nobody but colored men went there. The country was full of cowboys. There is no testimony to this day who did it. The officer of the day in that case, on duty at the time, hearing the firing and getting a report that there had been an alleged shooting, at once posted extra pickets to detect anybody who might be returning to the camp, and had check roll call, and the guns inspected, and every soldier was there, and every man was there except only one white soldier from Company K of the Eleventh and two men out of the band.

The place that was fired upon was a place that was frequented not by white people, but only by the soldiers of this command, and if it be an absurdity to think, as Senators have forcibly said it is, that the people of Brownsville could be charged with shooting up themselves, was it not also an absurdity to say that members of this colored regiment would go down and in a wanton way shoot up their comrades who were there at that place of entertainment?

Now, that is all there is of this record. This bloody history, of which we have heard so much, consists of two shooting affrays, and only two, in which anybody was killed, one at El Paso—utterly inexcusable; I do not pretend to extenuate itand the other at Fort Sturgis, twenty-seven years ago, and in no one of these did any member of Company B or Company C or Company D take any part. The record of these companies, covering forty years, is without a blemish.

Mr. President, that is not all. I have here an official congratulatory order issued to the Twenty-fifth Regiment at the close of the Spanish-American war. I will ask permission to put it in the Record in full. It is embodied in a newspaper article giving the history of the Twenty-fifth Regiment. It is about a column in length. I ask that the whole article be incorporated in my remarks, including this official congratulatory order. I want to cite it simply to show that the order com-mences with a statement that for the first time in twenty-eight years the whole regiment had been assembled when the Spanish-American war commenced. For twenty-eight years they had been scattered over the country doing duty, a company here and another yonder, or a battalion here and another yonder, per-These units of organization had been as separate and distinct as though they were so many separate and distinct When the war came the whole regiment was brought together for the first time in that long period, and the record shows that no regiment that went to Cuba won more honor on the field of battle than did the Twenty-fifth Infantry, and no companies in the American Army have a clearer record or a more gallant and heroic record than Companies B, C, and D of that regiment. Not a man of either one of these companies, according to these reports, that are spoken of as a condemna-tion of the regiment had anything to do with any shooting affray. No one of them had anything to do with any disturbance of any kind except the few men of Company C who got into an alter-cation with some Indians, where there was no shooting at all, a thing that might happen with any white company and has happened hundreds of times with white companies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the paper will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FACED BULLETS LIKE HEROES—OFFICIAL STORY OF THE TWENTY-PIFTH UNITED STATES INFANTRY AT EL CANEY—COLORED REGULARS PROVED THEIR VALOR UNDER A MURDEROUS FIRE—WAS IN THE NEAREST INTRENCHMENT TO SANTIAGO WHEN THE SURRENDER OF THE CITY WAS

All the Army made history during the short Cuban war; but the colored regulars in three days practically revolutionized the sentiment of the country in regard to the colored soldier, and as a result more than 100 Afro-Americans are bearing commissions in the United States Army.

The entire colored contingent—the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry and the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry—did well. It has been said by one who knows: "Not a colored soldier disgraced himself on Cuban soil." Indeed, the converse of this is practically true. Every colored soldier honored himself.

Without desiring to take away one leaf or sprig from the laurels won by the other colored regiments, and with a full recognition of the valor of the entire Army, I invite attention to the following official story of the action of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry in the Cuban campaign:

campaign:

I may summarize in advance by saying that the Twenty-fifth was the first regiment to leave its home station, the first to go into camp, was a part of the first expedition to Cuba, and the second to land, and had the honor of digging the intrenchments nearest to the enemy's line. In physique and discipline it was so nearly perfect that only one man from its ranks died on Cuban soil from climatic disease and only two from diseases of any sort. The men are mostly large, many of them being six-footers and weighing, when in good condition, 200 pounds and over, and the standard of intelligence among them and the language used are about up to what obtains in the Army generally. In marksmanship, drill, and general military knowledge and skill they have attained a high degree of efficiency, and, as a whole, are of excellent character and temper.

high degree of efficiency, and, as a whole, are of excellent character and temper.

The present regimental commander is Lieut. Col. A. S. Daggett, a highly accomplished officer, who rose to the rank of colonel in the civil war and was brevetted brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of the Wilderness. He came to the command of the regiment in Tampa but a few weeks before it embarked on the transports for Cuban shores.

The story that I am now to present to the readers of the Herald is woven almost entirely from the official reports and orders of Colonel Daggett, who commanded the regiment most successfully through the fierce fight before Santiago. Anyone who saw the regiment as it passed the camp of the Second Massachusetts on its way to the present camp would have witnessed an open and cordial tribute to its valor. As these worn and dusty—and dusky—veterans swung by the cultivated, well-bred amateur warriors of Massachusetts the young heroes gave them such cheers and applause as soldiers seldom give. "They have a good feeling for us," said a sergeant of the Twenty-fifth to me. "They think you are soldiers," I remarked. "They know we are soldiers," he replied.

The Twenty-fifth, with all the other colored regiments, is known as a band of fighters.

The history of the campaign of the Twenty-fifth is succinctly and graphically told in the following general orders published near Santlago, August 11, 1898:

"Gathered from three different stations, many of you strangers to each other, you assembled as a regiment for the first time in more than twenty-eight years on May 7, 1898, at Tampa, Fla. There you endeavored to solidify and prepare yourselves, as far as the oppressive weather would permit, for the work that appeared to be before you. But who could have foretold the severity of that work? You endured the severe hardships of a long sea voyage, which no one who has not experienced it can appreciate.

"You then disembarked amid dangerous surroundings, and on landing were for the first time on hostile ground. You marched under a tropical sun, carrying blanket roll, three days' rations, and 100 rounds of ammunition, through rain and mud, part of the time at night, sleeping on the wet ground without shelter, living part of the time on scant rations, even of bacon, hard bread, and coffee, until, on July 1, you arrived at El Caney. Here you took the battle formation and advanced to the stone fort more like veteran troops than troops who had never been under fire.

"You seain marched day and night, balting only to dig four lines."

rations, even of bacon, hard bread, and coffee, until, on July 1, you arrived at El Caney. Here you took the battle formation and advanced to the stone fort more like veteran troops than troops who had never been under fire.

"You again marched day and night, halting only to dig four lines of intrenchments, the last being the nearest point to the enemy reached by any organization, when, still holding your rifles, within these intrenchments, notice was received that Santiago and the Spanish army had surrendered.

"But commendable as the record may be, the brightest hours of your lives were on the afternoon of July I. Formed in battle array, you advanced to the stone fort against volleys therefrom, and rifle pits in front, and against a gailing fire from blockhouses, the church tower, and the village on your left. You continued to advance skillfully and bravely, directed by the officers in immediate command, halting and delivering such a cool and well-directed fire that the enemy was compelled to wave the white flag in token of surrender.

"Seldom have troops been called upon to face a severer fire, and never have they acquitted themselves better.

"The regimental reserve was called upon to fare a severer sine and never have they acquitted themselves better.

"The regimental reserve was called upon to try its nerve by lying quiet under a galling fire without returning it, where men were killed and wounded. This is a test of nerve which the firing line can not realize, and requires the highest quality of bravery and endurance. You may well return to the United States proud of your eccomplishments, and if any ask what you have done, point him to El Caney."

The history of that part of the battle performed by the Twenty-fifth is further detailed by the regimental commander in his official reports to his superiors. These reports and the orders just quoted from constitute the whole official literature on the subject, and hence the present story may be regarded as both authentic and exhaustive.

According to Colonel Da

The battalion in this formation continued to advance from cover to cover until it reached a point within 50 yards of the fort. Here these companies opened so cool, steady, and sure a fire that a Spaniard could not show himself but he was immediately hit, and fifteen or twenty minutes before any other troops came up the enemy put out the white the left that it was impossible for one of our officers to cross to receive the surrender of the fort or for a Spanish officer to bring the flag to our lines.

At the end of about twenty minutes one company of the Twelfth Infantry, which had gotten round to a point where they were thoroughly screened from the fire of both the fort and the village, under protection of the fire of the Twenty-fifth, entered the fort and received the surrender, which the bullets of the Twenty-fifth had brought about. Two of our men—Butler, of H Company, and J. H. Jones, of I Company—entered the fort at the same time with the men of the Twelfth, and while an officer of that regiment received the white flag of surrender, these two men seized the Spanish standard. They were immediately ordered to give it up by an officer of the Twelfth and obeyed, but before doing so they each tore a piece from the flag. One of these pieces I have seen and examined, and the man who has it I have known for years, and I do not hesitate to accept his story. The fact, indeed, is so well attested that it is embodied in official reports.

The conduct of the regiment and the skill and courage of the commanding officer, as well as of the company officers, were such as to elicit highest praise. From the regiment four sergeants have been promoted to commissions, and Lieutenant-Colonel Daggett has received most flattering mention, the whole action of the regiment being regarded as especially brilliant.

T. G. STEWARD, Chaplain Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, one other thing. I said I was amazed at the spirit of ugliness toward these men which has cropped out. The shooting affray was in August last.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.
Mr. NEWLANDS. Before the Senator goes to a new subject I should like to refer to the Winnemucca incident. I have been absent from the Senate, and I am not familiar with this When the Senator alluded to the Winnemucca incident I sent for the record, and I find on page 340 a quotation from a newspaper article, to which the Senator referred, which may explain it. It is as follows:

It developed this morning that had an inspection been made of every man on the train and his belongings the right soldier who did the shooting would have been located. It is conclusive that a Government revolver was not used, but a pistol of .38 caliber that one of the colored soldiers had stolen from J. Isola's saloon at Carlin.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I went over that and said the newspaper article made statements which warranted the Judge-Advocate-General in making his report; but that it was an ex parte report, as to which the company had no representation at all; that the charges were not established in any manner, and the statements of Captain Lyon and Captain Shattuck and the other officers of this company show conclusively that no such thing as that occurred. The newspaper article the Senator refers to is, as I myself characterized it, bitterly hostile all the way through; it is sensational; it is a pretty good type of vellow journalism.

Mr. President, since this shooting there have appeared many charges—I spoke here one day and the next day telegrams were sent from El Reno about an attack being made on Captain Macklin, that he had been attacked by a discharged soldier of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. I saw in some quarters a statement to the effect that that was one of the first fruits of our undertaking to say a word in behalf of a hearing for these men. But that is of no consequence here. That is the story that went out. What is the truth about it? Everybody knows now that no discharged soldier of the Twenty-fifth Infantry had anything to do with it.

Only a few days later, however, the newspapers were filled with sensational accounts of how a discharged soldier from the Twenty-fifth Infantry had crowded a Mrs. Clifford off the street with rudeness and with brutality, and went on to tell how ugly and vicious and mean these men were, all in keeping with the character which the Senator from South Carolina conceives from reading this record they had acquired, but now everybody knows that story has been exploded. The man who undertook knows that story has been exploded. to pass Mrs. Clifford while crossing the street was a porter on a Pullman car, who was rushing into a lunch house to get a sandwich, and had hurried out in order that he might get back before train time. No incivility whatever was intended, and there was no clashing except that which was accidental.

Then two or three days later there was a sensational account of how another discharged soldier of the Twenty-fifth Infantry had gone into a Chinese laundry, wantonly fired on the Chinaman who was in charge, and had shot him up. But in a few days after there came a refutation of that to the effect that it was not a soldier at all, but that it was somebody in the employment of the railroad company who had rushed in there and had some kind of an altercation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. In regard to the shooting of Captain Macklin, thought the man who did it had been arrested.

Mr. FORAKER. A man has been arrested recently, but he is not a discharged soldier of any of these companies.

Mr. LODGE. He was a soldier of Company A.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand he was, but he has not yet been tried, and I do not know whether or not he is guilty. He says he is not guilty.

What I am talking about is the sensational account sent out. Everything that is done is attributed to these men, and at last we have a sensational account that there is a conspiracy among the discharged men to murder all the white officers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry because these soldiers had been dis-charged. Now, that has been exploded. Major Penrose says that there is no truth whatever in the statement that such testimony has been developed or that anybody has any such thought, so far as he is aware.

I mention all this, Mr. President, not for the purpose of engaging in a race controversy or discussing the race question, but only for the purpose of admonishing Senators that if we are to investigate this matter with a view to establishing the facts let us wait until the facts have been found. We are strong enough, and there is nobody concerned who is not brave enough, to have the truth known. If there is any class of people in this country to whom we should be just, to whose rights we should see to it that no injury is permitted, it is not only the soldier who is defending us, but it is especially the colored soldier, who is more helpless, possibly, before the law than anybody else.

The Senator from Wisconsin asked yesterday what else was the President to do but to discharge these men. could not, he said, try them, because there was no evidence. Mr. President, I have heard of that as a reason No evidence! many times for not trying men on charges of crime, but I never before heard of that as a reason why some other kind of punishment should be meted out to them. I read the other day from the language of the Supreme Court in the Milligan case, where the court say that to suspend or suppress or disregard the law upon the theory that there is some great exigency is always inexcusable and that it leads only to anarchy or despotism. That is the language of the Supreme Court.

I say, however, it is not the case, as I look at it, which the Senator presents. Assuming now, Mr. President, for the sake of argument, that the men of this battalion, to the number of sixteen or twenty, did do this shooting, does not every man know of necessity that the noncommissioned officers in charge of the quarters, that the noncommissioned officers in charge of the gun racks, that the sergeant on guard and the sentinel pacing up and down behind the wall would, of necessity, know who these men were? They would of necessity know, when the sixteen or twenty men marched out of quarters, whether they went out through the gate or jumped over the fence, and especially would they know whether these sixteen or twenty men commenced firing inside the fort, inside the walls, on the premises of the Government.

If it be conclusively established, as we are told it is, that from sixteen to twenty of those men did this shooting, then is it not of necessity also established that these men to whom I refer had guilty knowledge; that they were accessories before the fact, if they did not participate in it. In the nature of things it would be a human impossibility for those men to commence firing, some of them from the barracks, we are told, some of them outside the barracks from the premises inside the walls, and then jump over the wall, start down street, shoot up the town for ten or fifteen minutes, and then rush back and pass through the guard and everybody else without detection.

Mr. President, it appears that every man was in line when the roll was called; every man answered; and, not only that, but a line of guards was put behind the wall to intercept anybody who might come from the town, and all this in a very few minutes.

But I am not going to discuss that. I am only now saying enough to show that if it was desired to establish the guilt of these men, it was an easy matter, if they were, in fact, guilty, to do it by simply ordering a trial, by simply following the directions of the law, and that is what at first the authorities started out to do. The civil authorities arrested thirteen of these men, twelve of them soldiers and one an ex-soldier who had been discharged but a few days before. The men arrested were the sergeant of the guard and the men who constituted the guard, the sentinels, the men who were in charge of the quarters, the men who held the keys to the gun racks, the men who, of necessity, would have knowledge. If before a tribunal such as the law authorized when it provided that men subject to such charges should be tried by court-martial witnesses had been called, if there was any shooting done at all by anybody connected with the battalion, those were the very men who would have had a prima facie case against them upon circumstantial evidence of a character so strong that the President held it to be conclusive, and who would have been convicted, and the men who committed this great crime, if they committed it, would have been brought to punishment and a punishment adequate would have been inflicted.

But beyond suggesting that there was evidence to warrant the trial-far more evidence than many times is laid before a prosecuting attorney and a grand jury when an indictment is found charging a man with crime—beyond showing that there was that predicate for a trial, and that they were not allowed a trial, but were denied it; that by Executive order they were indicted, tried, convicted, and discharged without any one of them having a chance to be heard—I do not care to speak. That was, to my mind, under all the circumstances, without authority of law, or, if by authority of law, then a disgrace to the American people.

During the delivery of Mr. Foraker's speech, The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio will suspend a moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULITON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. Foraker's speech,

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I gave notice some time ago that I would to-day present resolutions commemorative of the life and character of my late colleague, Senator BATE. If agreeable to the Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to present them now.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I yield the floor to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me to make a motion?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.
Mr. FORAKER. I should like to get a vote on the resolution unless somebody wants to speak.

BLACKBURN. Mr. President, it will be remembered

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] has the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that when the Senate adjourns today it be to meet on Monday next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think it is due to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] that I should state what possibly he is himself reluctant to state, that he has given notice of a desire to address the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it not be equally convenient for the Senator from Maryland to speak on Monday next?

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I prefer to go on to-morrow if I shall not thereby interfere with any arrangements of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not hear the reply of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE],

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Maryland stated that he would prefer to speak to-morrow

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I withdraw the motion.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM B. BATE.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, some time ago I gave notice that to-day I should ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life and character of my late colleague, Hon. WILLIAM B. BATE. I send the resolutions to the desk, and ask that they may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions submitted by the senior Senator from Tennessee.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BATE, late a Senator from the State of Ten-

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Tennessee.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, it is with a feeling of peculiar tenderness and reverence that I approach the sad duty of I was born within a mile of General Bate's homestead, lived among his friends and neighbors, listened with rapt attention to stories of camp and conflict as they fell from the lips of the heroic veterans who were his followers and comrades in battle, and from my early boyhood was deeply imbued with the spirit of personal devotion to him that prevailed among the people of his native county. In later years circumstances brought us much together, and I became his personal friend and supporter in all his political contests. My personal knowledge of the man revealed inborn qualities which strengthened my love for him and held it to the last; and the affectionate relations that have existed and do exist between our families are among the most precious blessings of life.

Mr. President, if in youth one could be permitted to shape the end of his life he could not wish for it a happier termination than that which closed the mortal career of WILLIAM B. BATE.

Full of years, full of fame, and full of honors he closed a life crowned with domestic peace and happiness, the esteem and confidence of his people, and that conscientiousness of duty faithfully done, which more than all things else gives sweetness to life and takes bitterness from death. By the sternest code of honor he lived a life of rectitude. It is no exaggeration to say that neither to the right nor to the left, under whatever tempta-tion, throughout a long life, full of action, full of excitement, full of strivings and honorable ambitions, did he ever swerve by the breadth of a hair from the path of honor. In addition to all this, and higher and better than all this, the Christian's faith and hope were his; so that his peaceful death, met with a calm and quiet resignation, was a fitting close to such a life, a happy realization of the prophet's prayer, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." He died as one who knew that the gates of death were but the portals of immortal life.

WILLIAM B. BATE was born in the old blue-grass county of Sumner, a county still famed for the sterling character of its citizenship and the generous hospitality of its people. The world can not produce a nobler type of men and women than may there be found. They are worthy of the ancestry from whom they sprang. General Bate was the son of a Revolutionary soldier and came from the old pioneer stock who in the early history of the State invaded this region with ax and rifle to hew through the primeval forests a pathway for civilization. They were men of heroic heart and simple A faith in God that knew no doubts or questionings gave them the fortitude to dare the terrors of the wilderness. On the frontiers of civilization, struggling with wild beasts and with yet wilder men, they acquired the fundamental qualities that go to make the manners and the character of a gentlemanrespect for one's self and for others. General Bate was born near Old Bledsoes Lick and within sight of the old fort where the early settlers found protection while yet the white man had to make good his title to the land against his savage foe. Here he spent the years of his boyhood until-a fatherless lad-he determined to go forth alone to match himself against the world. He went first to Nashville and secured a place as clerk on a steamboat which plied between Nashville and New Orleans. The war with Mexico coming on, he enlisted in the latter city, joining a company of Louisianians, and went to Mexico. He served out his term of enlistment with the Louisiana troops and then joined a company from his own State which had arrived upon the scene of hostilities and was made first lieutenant. In this capacity he served to the end of the war.

After his return from Mexico he soon entered upon the study of law, graduating from the Cumberland Law School, at Leba-Tenn. He did not have to wait for clients, but at once achieved marked success in his profession, being elected prosecuting attorney for the district including the city of Nashville in the year 1854, just two years after he had been licensed as a practicing attorney. In 1856 he married Miss Julia Peete at Huntsville, Ala., the loving and faithful partner of his long and checkered life, who still survives him. It so happens that this day upon which we commemorate his life and services is the anniversary of the day of their happy union.

General Bate early developed a taste for politics, and as a member of the legislature and Presidential elector on the Breckinridge-Lane ticket he began his political career, a career which had already given promise of greatness when interrupted by the outbreak of the war of secession.

Tennessee left the Union reluctantly and with sorrow. She had voted down the first proposal to leave the Union by an immense majority. But when the secession movement grew to such strength that war became inevitable, and she had to decide between the alternative of uniting her forces with or against her sister States of the South, she chose to abide the fortunes of the Southern Confederacy. Looking calmly back from this peaceful time to that stormy period, I am proud that she dared and suffered with the South.

The martial, the military instinct in General Bate was strong, and his whole heart and soul was in the cause of the Neither then nor afterwards, to his dying day, did he ever question the justice of her cause or permit any man to do so in his presence without stern and emphatic rebuke. cause had in him a friend who was faithful unto death and beyond the grave.

He enlisted as a private in a company then forming at Gallatin, was made its captain, and later was elected colonel of the regiment. In his eagerness to give his services on the field he promptly took his regiment to Virginia and commanded it in the battle of Bull Run. As its term of enlistment was about to expire, so thoroughly had the rank and file become imbued with the spirit of their commander, when the proposal was made to them to enlist for the war the entire regiment stepped forward as one man. There was not one laggard in this regiment of Sumner County heroes.

There was another conspicuous illustration of the spirit that prevailed in this regiment. Because of the promptitude with which they had gone to the front, Colonel Bate had been permitted to select the army in which his regiment should serve, and he naturally selected the army of Tennessee. Upon the transfer being made, all the members of the regiment were given a sixty days' furlough. Before this furlough had expired Albert Sidney Johnston made the movement which brought on the battle of Shiloh, and at the call of their colonel the members of this regiment voluntarily abandoned the ease and comfort of home, tore up their unexpired furloughs, and hastened to report for duty. For many of them it meant death or mutilating wounds, for this regiment was early in the battle and in the "focal and foremost fire." In a desperate charge Colonel BATE rode in the very front of his regiment and cheered them toward the foe. While doing so he received a wound which shattered his leg, but he continued to lead his regiment onward until faintness from loss of blood caused the bridle reins to drop from his hands and until his horse was shot from under him. In that battle his brother and brother-in-law and a cousin were killed and another cousin severely wounded—five members of one family in one regiment weltering in their blood upon one battlefield.

Colonel Bate lay for a long time in peril of death from his terrible wound. His surgeons decided that amputation was necessary, but it was characteristic of the man that he overruled the opinion of the surgeons and decided to take the chance of recovery without the loss of his limb. His decision meant that he would take all the chances of death rather than become unserviceable to his country in its hour of peril. He slowly recovered from his wound and was indeed badly crippled throughout the war. He returned to his command on crutches as a brigadier-general.

He was so badly crippled that it was not believed that he would again be fit for duty in the field, and a movement sprang up to make him governor of the State to succeed Isham G. Harris, whose term was soon to expire. There is no doubt whatever that he could have been elected; but he promptly declared that he would accept no civil office, but would share all the perils of battle with his comrades unto the bitter end. He was afterwards twice wounded while yet so badly crippled from his former wound that he had to be lifted to his horse as he rode at the head of his command. He had three horses killed under him at Chickamauga, and everywhere and under all circumstances he exhibited that same spirit that won the name bestowed upon him in the official report of his division commander, General Stewart, at Chickamauga—"The indomitable." I shall not dwell upon the details of his military career. I need not do so-there are volumes of eulogy in the simple statement that he entered the army as a private soldier and left it as a major-general. From the hopeful beginning to the end of the sad but glorious chapter, when he surrendered the ragged, famished, battle-torn, heroic remnant of his command, it was the same story of a devotion that knew no weakness and a valor that knew no fear. Upon his tombstone, and upon that of every Tennessean who followed him, may be written without flattery the characterization of Bayard—"a knight without fear and without reproach."

When the war was over he returned to the practice of law, removing to the capital city of Nashville, and soon commanded an immense practice. He was especially successful in jury trials, and at the time when he became governor in 1882 his firm probably had the largest practice in the State.

He was elected governor at a time when the refunding of the State debt followed as a result of the settlement which was an issue in this campaign. An incident in connection with this shows the extreme punctiliousness of his sense of duty. The law required that the new bonds issued should be signed by the governor. When it was proposed to prepare a stamp by which the facsimile of his signature might be placed upon the bonds he insisted upon an exact compliance with the letter of the law and of undergoing the immense physical labor and writing the signature upon each with his own hand. In all his career this same nice and self-exacting sense of duty governed his public and his private conduct.

After his second term as governor came his election to the Senate. It was a battle of the Titans in which he then prevalled. Intellectual giants like ex-Governor Marks and ex-Congressman John F. House contended with him in friendly and chivalrous rivalry, and yielded him the palm without bitterness as to a victor worthy of their steel.

In politics he lived and died a Democrat—not simply in the sense that he supported the nominees of his party, but because he was a thorough believer in its great fundamental principles. Like the late Isham G. Harris he clung with tenacity to his party's earliest creed and felt a sense of resentment for every deviation from the Jeffersonian principle of a strict construction of the Constitution.

In his service here he was faithful, industrious, diligent, a close student of the business of the Senate, having a clear understanding of the questions of the day, and when he chose to do so he presented his views with great ability, learning, and power. A speech on the tariff question in the early years of his service showed him to be a profound student of national taxation, and his speech upon what, in our part of the country, was usually denominated the "force bill" was liberally quoted from one end of the land to the other.

But above all other qualities, he bore among his associates here a reputation for honor and integrity that was without a stain. No suspicion of an unworthy motive was ever imputed to any act of his. No man here or elsewhere ever felt one moment's doubt as to the absolute rectitude of his intentions.

It is a fact significant of the happy passing of old issues, of old passions and prejudices, that among the most devoted friends he had in this Chamber were those who wore the blue when he wore the gray, who fought under the Stars and Stripes when he fought under the stars and bars; with whom he contended for life and death in the awful shock of battle. There are no truer friends than those who have been honorable foes, and the handclasp that is made above the grave of kindred dead is never broken. Even as he loved and honored those who fought by his side he loved and honored those who confronted them. And while old associations, the memory of common sorrows and of common sufferings, bound him as with hooks of steel to his comrades in arms, the story of that great war was to him a lesson of American prowess and American valor, which, united under a common flag, could withstand the world in arms.

His intense devotion to the memory of the cause for which he had fought, and of the comrades who had died for that cause, might seem to the superficial inconsistent with heartfelt devotion to the Union; but you in this Chamber who fought on the other side, none of you ever questioned for one moment the loyalty to the Union of this battle-scarred old hero of the Confederacy. You loved and honored him for his very fidelity to those hallowed memories and hallowed graves. You, who like him, but on the opposing side, have passed through the furnace of war know that he who can lightly forget what was once the cause of his country, the cause for which its women prayed, and for which its sons had died, could not be loyal to any country or faithful to any flag. You knew that he brought to the service of the whole country as faithful a devotion to duty as when fighting for the cause of the Confederacy on the red edge of battle. The Confederacy had no braver knight than WILLIAM B. BATE when war was flagrant in the land; the Union has had no truer friend since the war clouds were lifted and the waiting sunlight came down to bless the land, which is the common hope, as it is the common heritage, of us all. His love for the Confederacy was but the faithfulness of memory to the noble dead-that lingering with uncovered head by the tomb of old comrades and fallen hopes which purifies and exalts the soul.

Mr. President, it is true that "peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." William B. Bate was one of those who came back from the war, surveyed the scene of red ruin and blank desolation that overspread his country, and then with hearts resolute and undismayed faced the awful problems of that awful time. All the heroism displayed through four blazing years of war pales into insignificance by the side of that story of patience, constancy, and fortitude which enabled a weaponless and uncaptained army of disfranchised citizens to win victory even from defeat.

In private life General Bate was simple, plain, devoid of artifice or ostentation. Unusually blessed in his domestic relations, he found his happiest hours around the family hearthstone and in the company of congenial friends; but in all the walks of life the same high courage and noble qualities which won him honor and fame in field, in forum, and in Senate were his. And when he came to meet the inevitable hour these qualities rose supreme and he blenched not when he stood face to face with the king of terrors. Over him the grave could win no victory and for him death had no sting. As in the ardor of his youthful prime he had faced death without a tremor, with all the courage of a soldier, so at the last he met death with all the fortitude of a Christian. At peace with his fellow-man, with his conscience, and his God, "he gave his honors to the world again, his blessed part to Heaven, and slept in peace."

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, we have halted on the forced march that is made necessary by the short and congested session of Congress, and we have called a truce to all dissension that we may pay tribute to the memory of one of our number whose name the Ruler of the Universe has stricken forever from the Senate roll and from the roll of life. The shadow of death marks the boundaries of man's common country. By the reconciling grave we are one.

WILLIAM BRIMAGE BATE was a soldler of his country before he became a man. He had just entered his fourth term of service in this body when he departed from us. Throughout his long and useful life he was an earnest and honest soldier of the common good.

At the close of his service he left behind him a clean, white record, which bears witness that through his life's ceaseless struggle he was always "present for duty," and that as God gave him to see that duty so he did it, whatever might befall.

He had passed considerably beyond the period of threescore years and ten before he died—indeed, he was in his eightieth year—but his strength had remained equal to his tasks; and it is consoling to reflect that it was not in the valley of helplessness that he left us nor by the process of slow decay.

No matter when death comes, so mighty is the change it is startling and sudden.

No matter what the premonitions may be, and no matter howsoever we steel our hearts to meet the inevitable, the blow that shivers the life of one beloved and honored must lacerate the sensibilities and pall upon the affections.

Although the shadow upon the dial marked the evening of his days, Senator Bate was here and took the oath of office for a new term on the 4th of March, 1905.

I had stood by his side when he entered the Senate in 1887, and again was with him when he was sworn in the last time.

Together we joined in the line of Senators that proceeded from this hall to witness the inauguration of President Roosevelt from the east front of the Capitol. As we passed out of the Chamber I said to him, "General, I have seen you sworn into the Senate for four times, and I hope that you may long live and that I may have the pleasure of seeing you sworn in again;" but it was not so written.

As we reached the throng pressing forward through the halls of the Capitol we became detached from each other and I never saw him more. A severe cold, contracted by the exposure to the piercing atmosphere of the inaugural occasion, brought on pneumonia, and soon the sad intelligence came that WILLIAM BRIMAGE BATE was no more.

He was born in the blue-grass region of Tennessee, in Sumner County, as his colleague has recounted, in the midst of the scenes of the old Indian wars, near Bledsoes Lick, which is now known as Castalian Springs, in a section that abounds with incidents of the encounters between the hardy pioneers and the stubborn tribes of Indians who stood in their pathway. He sprung from that yeoman stock which loves the land and fights for it, and, plastic of mind and heart, he was full of the traditions and legends which inspire manhood to high emprise. "Old Hickory" said, and he was of that region, that "the man who was born and reared among these people deserved but little credit for being a gentleman or a soldier, for he could not help it."

The blood of the pioneers of Virginia and North Carolina mingled in his veins. Tillage of the soil, the earliest and purest of avocations, was theirs. They held the simple faith of the Baptists, and they looked on life as a real earnest and solemn matter, to be met by the best that was in them,

When yet in his teens young BATE, with that spirit of adventure and desire to see the world which is apt to characterize the youth of our race, set out for New Orleans, having become a clerk on the steamer Saladin, plying between Nashville and that city.

The expansion of our race has never come from congestion at home. They have gone forth into all lands from that spirit of enterprise and love of romance and adventure which the Creator has implanted in their ambitious, strong, and aspiring blood.

The Mexican war was on, and, joining a Louisiana command, the boy Bate, as a private soldier, with his musket on his shoulder, marched with it to the relief of Zachary Taylor on the border of Mexico. This service ended, he became first lieutenant of Company I, Third Tennessee Volunteers, was selected as its adjutant, and with it served until the conclusion of the Mexican war.

From second clerk on a steamer and private in the ranks he rose by steady gradations to the foremost places in both peace and war. To glance at the positions in which he was placed by the confidence and trust of the people is as if to let the eye range over the rungs of the ascending ladder by which he climbed to eminence and renown. Private and lieutenant in the Mexican war, editor of the Tenth Legion, a Democratic journal, after the return to peace, and a member of the legislature, and then came his settling down to the study of the legal profession in 1850, when he entered a law school in Lebanon, Tenn., graduating in 1852.

Soon again he climbs upward. He became attorney-general for the judicial district which was composed of Sumner, Davidson, and Williamson counties, which include the city of Nashville, for six years. While holding this office he was nominated for Congress, but declined. In 1860 he was elector upon the Breckinridge ticket for the Presidency, but Tennessee stood slow and patient, as did my own State, upon the edge of war, and each of them gave their electoral vote to John Bell.

In 1861, the lightnings of war flashed from the cloud of long dissension. It was the rear guard fight about an institution which perplexed the nations of the earth for countless ages past. Again he took his place at the bottom of the ladder, enlisting as a private of volunteers. He was elected captain of the company which became Company I, of the Second Tennessee, and later was elected colonel of the regiment. Brigadier-general in 1862, major-general in 1863, corps commander of the remnant of a great command at the surrender, BATE made a name as a soldier, based upon facts which can never be confused or belittled, which places him in the front rank of just renown.

In the conflicts of 1862–1864 he was wounded, first at Shiloh, in 1862, then at Hoovers Gap, in 1863, and then again at Atlanta, in 1864; and as the rings in the bark of a tree mark the years of its growth, so the years of his service were marked with scars upon his person.

"Indomitable Bate" was the characterization of him by Gen. A. P. Stewart, after the bloody battle of Missionary Ridge, in which three horses were killed under him.

No hero of all that bloody strife more possessed the confidence of the soldiers whom he commanded and of the superior officers who commanded him.

The war records make enduring pedestal for the statue of his fame, and whether they were composed by a soldier upon one side or the other they are in the main the embodiment of the truth. If neither of the armies which opposed each other had other chroniclers and commentators than those who fought against them, their great heroic characters and their fame would be permanently enshrined.

Some day Tennessee will raise his own figure on that pedestal, and it will some time stand in bronze in his beloved Tennessee, where it will not only attest the valor and devotion of the past, but be an inspiration to the youth of the volunteer State, which will "keep the soldier firm and the statesman true."

I heard one of his captains, who was himself wounded at Shiloh, say that over the roll of the musketry could be heard the voice of Bate cheering on his soldiers. Presently one of his men said to him, "Colonel Bate must be down, for I hear his voice no more." So in truth it was; and soon near Shiloh Church lay five of his family near each other, three killed and two wounded, his brother, Capt. Humphrey Bate, amongst the dead, himself amongst the stricken.

But enough of war. Apart from the nobleness of sacrifice and the greatness of soul which the trials of war stimulated and brought forth, and, apart from the removal of the cause of strife, the best thing about the great conflict is that it is over and that it will come no more; but the brave and true of each side will be cherished as a people's legacy, adding luster to the American name.

When surrender came at Bentonville in 1865 Bate rode to the remnant of his old division, which stood in line, dismounted, hobbled on his crutches to his old brigade and regiment, and, when the order to stack arms was given for the last time, he stood amongst those with whom he had been a private soldier and from them departed as a private citizen once more. Napoleon taught that the officer must take his place with his soldiers in surrender, as in the battle. It needed no Napoleon to tell that to Bate. It is the instinct of such brave and honest spirits as was his.

Now again he was at the bottom of the ladder, and again his ascent began. For seventeen years he sedulously practiced his profession, and rose to high rank and large practice. In 1875 he came within one vote of being elected a Senator of the United States, and by the change of a single vote Andrew Johnson was chosen.

In 1876 he was an elector at large on the Tilden ticket, and for a second time he bore the Democratic banner on the Federal field. In 1882 he became governor of Tennessee and was a second time chosen. In 1887 he entered the United States Senate. His services here were diligent, constant, and unremitting. greater part of a Senator's work makes little noise and gets little notice. In the committee room and in council with col-leagues is worked out, for the most part, the legislation of the country. It is rare that a speech controls the action of this body. The wise suggestion at the proper time makes no record. The careful and precise study of details may become as potent as the underground wire that lights a city or that drives its engines and trains, but the eye gets no picture of it. But his services here were by no means confined to mere detail. He is regarded as practically the author of the Weather Bureau and the Signal Service in their present organization. He was the author of the bill which ended the supervision of elections by the Federal Government, and his hand was seen and his influence felt in many of the good works which emanated from the committees on which he served and have passed into legislation. Though not a frequent speaker, he possessed ability and eloquence which were exemplified on pertinent occasions.

Those who served with him for years in the Senate will never forget the great fight he made to prevent the removal of the Jackson statue from what is known as Lafayette square. His opposition to its removal was successful, although preparation had already been made and in part completed to take away the equestrian statue of Jackson and put it on the corner of the square, instead of letting it stay as the centerpiece. No corner for Jackson, but the chief place, said Bate. So on the center of the square in front of the White House Old Hickory still rides erect his prancing steed, and because he had a champion of the stuff whereof he—the hero of New Orleans—was made.

The combination of intelligence, sagacity, and courage, commingled with the many virtues that go to make up the gentleman, the soldier, and the good citizen, came together in force of character in William B. Bate and made him a foremost man. His heart was loyalty itself. He adhered to principles wherever they carried him. He would not compromise a creed nor give to expediency what belonged to conviction.

He respected the opinions of others and treated all with courtesy; and the courtesy which he freely bestowed he in turn

He seemed old fashioned in his strict adherence to the ideals of his teachings and his convictions, and the light and frivolous sometimes attributed to the stubbornness of his nature what was in truth only the clearness and tenacity of his faith.

He was a man of simplicity and devoid of ostentation. He never spoke just to be heard of men, but only to carry to them a message which went forth from his heart and mind. Many of his speeches were notable for their careful and well-considered views and for the clearness and power with which they were uttered

On festival and on memorial occasions, especially upon those that commemorated noble characters and great deeds, Senator Bate was frequently the welcome orator, and his addresses were marked by those truthful historical allusions, those worthy reflections, and those beauties of poesy and eloquence that gave instruction in the most attractive and pleasing garbs of expression.

I can not take my seat, Mr. President, without adverting to the happy domestic life of Senator Bate. Fifty-one years ago he married Miss Peete, of Huntsville, Ala. Their union was blessed with children—all daughters—two of whom survive. His home was not only his castle, it was his temple, and those nearest and dearest to him were his constant thought.

On one occasion, when on some public ceremonial a compliment was paid to Mrs. Bate, who had been his helpmate and companion for many years, the Senator recognized it and thus respected it:

I thank you-

He said to those who had paid this tribute to her he loved

I thank you for this compliment to my wife, and I challenge any man to have a better right to feel more kindly and lovingly to the beautiful and charming women of Alabama than I do. You will pardon the personality when I say that in the long ago—and it seems to me but yesterday—it was in the beautiful little city of Huntsville, Ala, nestling at the foot of Monte Sano, overlooking a valley that smiled with delight, that I was given, under a wreath of orange blossoms, one of the loveliest of all the sweet girl flowers that grew and bloomed in that refined and cultivated social garden. She has been for more than forty years my companion and comfort—through war and peace, through weal and woe, through good and evil fortune—and although she has gone into motherhood and grandmotherhood, still she is my cheerful companion and my faithful comforter. So I feel that I can challenge with impunity the right of any man who was not born under Alabama's segis and who does not live on Alabama soil to feel nearer and dearer to Alabama than I.

There is an ancient adage which says "every man is the child of his own works." So obviously was William Brimage Bate. He was a matter-of-fact man, and he built himself from the ground. He dreamed no dreams of frenzied fancy; he saw no visions; he owned no castles in Spain, and took no stock in Utopia. Nevertheless, the spirit of poesy and the charm of romance were in his heart, and there, too, was the fountain of that natural eloquence which flowed forth when the true spring was touched.

There was nothing dim and there was nothing doubtful about him. He stood foursquare to all the winds that blew. His people looked upon his works, and they saw that they were good. They felt the beat of his strong true heart and the warm grasp of his honest hand. They knew him, and their constancy was but the reflected image of his own constancy to them.

I had the honor to be among those who bore his body back to Nashville, and stood and saw it laid again in his native soil. The vast outpouring of the people was impressive. But nothing was more impressive than the gray line of his old Confederate comrades that followed his hearse and fired the last salute over his grave. Some of them were yet sturdy and strong, some wrinkled and haggard with life's accumulated burdens, some as gray haired as the coats they wore. But all of them were of one mind of approval and of one heart in the spirit of love for the dead hero who rode in their front in battle, and in their front at the last received the bolt of fate. There we laid him in the dust at the bottom of life's ladder. There he rests in the abiding honor and affection of the people of Tennessee. Nor will Tennessee alone remember him. He served the whole American people as a worthy Senator and as a patriotic citizen.

He who considers his history sees he not also another ladder rising in the vision of immortality, its foot resting on the earth, its summit disappearing from mortal ken in the heavens?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, while the thirteen colonies were struggling to secure their independence from Great Britain, there was a small band of determined and hardy frontiersmen of the Carolinas and Virginia who pressed westward over the spurs of the Allegheny Mountains into the valleys of the Cumberland, the Tennessee, and the Ohio, and wrested the same from the cruel, crafty, and indolent savages who roamed through the wilderness, a terror and a menace to the settlers on the These frontiersmen wrought their impress upon the revolutionary struggle, directly and at a most critical time, at King's Mountain, and indirectly by repressing to a large extent throughout the unequal struggle the bloody aggressions of the savage allies of Great Britain. But the greatest result of their task was this: That at the conclusion of the war they furnished the colonies the basis and ground for claiming and acquiring that fertile and vast expanse of country between the Alleghenies and the Mississippi River. And thus the heroic struggles of these brave men inured in the fullest sense to the great advantage and glory of the entire nation.

These men were preeminently, both intuitively and by training, a race of warriors and State builders. What they conquered and subdued with the rifle and the ax, they knew how to organize, maintain, and govern conformable to the principles of free government.

From the very loins of this race, as its best type and possessed of all the virile courage and vigor of it, came Senator Bate, our coworker and associate for many years in this body. He died in the seventy-ninth year of his age, at peace with all the world, after a most eventful and fruitful life such as falls to the lot of but few men. He was a veteran in the public service and had been a veteran in both war and peace. I can not enter into the details of his long life and varied career. Those who stand nearer to him than I are better qualified for this task. I can only give my impression of him as I saw him, heard him, and knew him.

He was one of the bravest men that ever lived. This he attested on many a bloody field of battle and in many a civic strife and controversy, but his bravery was of the higher order, a moral and intellectual bravery, based on principle and conviction, and not of the grosser kind, the mere bravery of the bully. He was always brave in the performance and execution of what he conceived to be his duty, of what he deemed right and just, never evading or shirking a burden or responsibility, never faltering, however great the odds. But he was a gladiator of the noblest type, scorning to take a mean or underhanded advantage of his adversaries, manly and forbearing at all times and under all circumstances. He had no patience for shams or mere glamor of any kind; he could always distinguish, in man or measure, the counterfeit, however much embellished, from the real and substantial. He had no tolerance for the former, but was always ready and swift to embrace the latter. Like all brave men of the higher type, he was gentle, kind, and sympathetic in all spheres and walks of life and in all the varied and trying affairs of life. That air of arrogant loftiness and supreme self-sufficiency, which tokens the vain, the blood or the purse proud man, was utterly foreign to his nature and make-up. He gauged men at their real measure and worth, and on that level he was always ready to meet them. never was a more modest man than he in military or civic life. What he wrought on the bloody fields of battle or in the realm of the civil service of his State and country he left others to tell and extol. He preferred to be measured by his deeds rather than by his words. Men of action are, as a rule, brief and modest in speech, and are content with results rather than

As a member of this body he was one of its most useful members, faithful in attendance, both in session and in committee. He never shirked, but was always ready to bear his full share of the drudgery of legislation—that drudgery so essential but often little noted by the public at large. He did not belong to that school of legislators who are content and feel that they have done their whole duty if they deliver one or two set speeches during the session. While he was not a prolific despeeches during the session. While he was not a prolific de-bater, yet he never abstained from discussing a measure of importance that he felt called upon to support or oppose, and his discussion was always instructive, clear, and to the merits. He never spoke for the mere sake of speaking-for mere oratorical display. He was always in earnest, and when he spoke he spoke to pass or defeat a measure. He never supported or opposed a measure for the mere purpose of courting popularity. His attitude was governed by what he conceived to be right and just in the premises. In other words, it was always a matter of principle with him.

His environment and training had been such that on all constitutional questions he belonged to the so-called "school of strict constructionists"-strict in measuring the rights of the Federal Government, but liberal in measuring the rights of the States. And in this he was the child of his age, his State, and his surroundings. Our system of government is such that from the very beginning it bred and evoked two schools of constitutional construction, the one tending to fortify the Federal and the other to fortify the State power. And whatever else may be said on the subject, all fair-minded men, I think, will concede that the one school is a valuable check and restraint upon the exuberance of the other, and that between the contentions of the two the people, who have given their power of attorney to the Federal Government for national and Federal purposes and to the State government for local and State purposes, will ultimately secure and maintain that equilibrium of double power and double purpose which is the mainspring and the glory of our wonderful Federal system.

Senator BATE died faithful and loyal to our flag and to the best interests of our country. Its welfare was foremost and uppermost in his love and affection. He was one of its brave, faithful, and trusty legislative sentinels, on duty when he passed away. His countersign in his last moments was "the Union now and forever." Tennessee never had a more honest, more faithful, and more zealous representative in the United States Senate, and we, his colleagues, had in him a Senator who was always on duty, always at the laboring oar. His task and his mission on earth is ended. He did not live in vain; he wrought much for the good of our country and for the cause of our common humanity. He was a Senator of the United States in the fullest sense of the term, and the recording angel will enter him as a brave, upright, and faithful man, and as a public servant who bore the burdens of life fearlessly and heroically

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, WILLIAM BRIMAGE BATE'S career was eventful. His strong personality gave evidence of conflict and victories. It was stamped in every lineament of his face and expressed itself in his every motion. He was not born to remain an idle spectator amidst stirring events nor to participate in them merely content with duties simply per-formed, but to be the controlling spirit and leader. As a boy he was on the Mississippi River, and caught inspiration from that mighty stream. The rough experience of life on that river has educated hardy, strong men, with strong intellects, indomitable will and courage, making a perfect type of true and vigorous manhood. Leaving this river, with its strong impressions upon him, he became the boy hero of the Mexican war. This experience carried him to the Tennessee legislature in young manhood, where he was distinguished. Hardly stopping for rest or recreation, he entered upon the practice of the law, mastered this intricate science, and soon became eminent, and was elected attorney-general of the Nashville district, in which office he served six years. During his incumbency of this office he was nominated for Congress, but declined this high honor. His entry into politics was brilliant, but was stopped for the moment by the civil war. But his activity did not cease.

With his experience in war and civil life and the high position he occupied, he would have been justified in demanding high military rank, but, having self-confidence and measuring his ability, he knew that opportunity alone was wanting for advancement. Therefore he entered the Confederate army as a private, but rapidly ascended to captain, colonel, brigadier and major general. He literally fought his way to supremacy. He was always to the front and three times dangerously wounded while in the lead. What a record for a soldier! nation would not be proud of such and crown him with all the honors it could bestow!

Here he could have rested, having achieved all the fame and glory to satisfy the most ambitious. But his ambition was associated with duty to his unfortunate countrymen. He still fought for their deliverance from an infamous, hell-born despotism and again became active in political life. His people appreciated his unselfish patriotism and the sacrifice made in their behalf, and twice placed him in the executive office of his State. He made a great governor, ranking among the best, and his efforts were untiring to reduce taxation and to give the people a clean and economical administration. He succeeded and was rewarded by a seat in this honorable body. His history here is well known, and laws enacted during his several terms in the Senate bear the impress of his genius. Those who served with him know his ability, the grandeur of his character, and the services he rendered to the nation.

Worst to be endured than all that he had yet encountered was the tyranny and fetters fastened upon him and his people after the cessation of hostilities between the States, the being buried while yet alive, to the sad condition of his people. fought and battled for right while thus fettered and buried. He used every energy of his being to cast aside the trammels and to burst from the cerements of that tomb and take his place in the van of his countrymen, struggling for liberty-aye, for life itself. He carried them on in accelerated progress, in improvement in government, and in material things, which prostrated to the dust the puny obstacles of legislative, judicial, and executive tyranny.

It can safely be asserted that no conditions such as followed the close of the civil war can ever be renewed in this country. Bad men, vicious men, can no longer obtain sway over a people ignorant and easily led by interested advisers acting for their own selfish ends. That terrible departure from justice which marked the period of reconstruction has taught a lesson that it is unsafe to depart from the sacred rule of civil polity not to bestow power where there is no effective and individual responsibility.

His great energy and ability when thus freed strove to defeat the cunning and sordid plots of monopolists. When he thus entered political life he was free, no longer the slave of a fanatical party, no longer at the mercy of designing and intriguing politicians who planned and plotted for the disfranchisement of honest and brave men of the South. He had attained that position, and on this vantage ground, after his entrance into the Senate, he struggled for honest government, a government not of promises, but of actual accomplishments. He rejoiced in the prospect of good government, in the progress of trade, of private and political virtue, and the attainment of national prosperity in the restoration of the people's rights. In peace he won laurels more imperishable than those which crowned him in His achievements here and his fame belong to the nation. He did well and nobly his appointed task in life, and he now rests from his labors and sleeps under the simple, but not inglorious epitaph commemorating "One in whom mankind lost a friend and no man got rid of an enemy.'

He had no irritability of temper and was not impatient of contradiction, but on subjects he had mastered and on which he held strong opinions he was tenacious. He comprehended all subjects of legislation and had the rare faculty of mastering all details and combining them with general views of the whole subject-matter, thus availing himself of all that speculation presents and experience affords to correct the results of general reasoning.

His orations were clear and logical, eloquent and classical: The first creditor of every people is the plow, and upon the furrows which it turns reposes the great mass of national wealth." Such sentences of classical inspiration are frequently met in his addresses. His physique was strong and vigorous, enabling him to endure the severest strains of mental labor. His faculties were strong and coordinate, enabling him to concentrate them with force and vigor to accomplish his purposes. With such physical, moral, and intellectual force he readily achieved the highest distinction as jurist, soldier, and states-To follow him in all his efforts in acquiring the highest honors would be to review the jurisprudence of his State and the history of the battles of two wars and the conflict for political mastery in Tennessee. In all this conflict and endeavor his was the master mind. He pressed forward to success and victory with character unsullied and not a voice raised in detrac-His achievements were in a State which in every crisis of her history developed great men, whether in the forum or in To meet and to successfully compete with such men great qualities in manhood and intellect were required.

His character was a grand one in its integrity, its honesty, and its purity. He had a lofty disdain for all that was low and mean. There was no shadow of fanaticism to cloud his character or to disturb his judgment. He was in public and in private life a person of the purest morals, and his indignation was aroused by profligacy or groveling baseness. His nature was kind and affectionate and true, and there was never a more steady or sincerer friend.

He had approached the evening of life. For him the sun was sinking beneath the horizon, and the shadows were gathering fast around him. They enveloped him in final embrace, it may be said, in this Chamber, and when the light went out it was amid the scenes of his labors and in the last discharge of duty.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Mr. President, to have been requested by the near friends of the late Senator Bate to say a few words on this occasion is a privilege and honor which I deeply appreciate.

It was my good fortune for several years before his demise to be seated next to him in this Chamber and to exchange with him the glad morning greetings which his kindly heart always We had frequent conversations and discussed freely the various pending questions of importance with which the occupied from time to time; and oftentimes, Senate was although not inclined to be communicative as to himself, I drew from him many very interesting reminiscences of his eventful life.

No member of this body was more punctual in attendance than he. Nothing but the most serious illness of himself or family prevented his presence here, and uniformly in time for the prayers of the Chaplain, for which he manifested the greatest reverence and respect. I am glad to acknowledge my deep sense of obligation and gratitude to him for wise counsel and advice always cheerfully given, and above all, for his kindly acts and words, which so deeply endeared me toward him.

The fatal illness which carried him away so suddenly was contracted on the platform at the east front of the Capitol, where he participated in the inaugural ceremonies of the President. violent was the attack that ended this noble life that outside of his family and intimate friends few people were aware of his illness until the sad news of his death was announced. I recall the sad incident where at my own home, at a formal dinner party at which he was to have been the guest of honor, while waiting for his arrival the first tidings of his serious illness came unexpectedly to all present and cast a gloom upon the festivities of the occasion.

We all recollect the sad and impressive funeral ceremonies which took place in this Chamber. The universal expressions of sorrow from all present denoted the confidence, respect, and love which dwelt in the minds and hearts of all who knew him. He was so unostentations that it required an intimate knowledge of the man to know and appreciate his noble impulses and sterling qualities. To him anything suggestive of insincerity, duplicity, or mendacity was abominable. Purity of thought and speech was characteristic of his daily intercourse with his He led the life of a Christian, in all respects cor fellow-men. rect and consistent, and in his social life he was most genial, companionable, and hospitable. He was never so happy as when surrounded by his family and intimate friends; he and his charming wife, whom all who know her respect and love, dispensed so royally the well-known hospitality of their home.

In the committees on which he served he was distinguished for prompt attendance and diligent study of all the questions presented for consideration and intelligent discussion of the His fearless defense and advocacy of what he conceived to be right, his unflinching integrity of purpose and action, were known to all with whom he came in contact. In his advocacy of any question and presentation of argument he was always clear and forceful. As minority leader in opposition to the bill pending for the joint statehood of Arizona and New Mexico he made a remarkable record, which clearly established his ability to cope with the most adroit masters of parliamentary practice. His speech in that memorable contest was a masterful effort. and its peroration, brilliant and patriotic, was accorded the highest acclamation and praise. The defeat of the measure, largely due to his able efforts, was one of the greatest triumphs in his political life.

In review of the wonderful achievements of the great character whose memory we revere and honor to-day we are carried back to the events embracing a period of nearly half a century, when he took an active part in the thrilling events of the civil war. This was not his first military experience. only a boy, acting as a clerk on a steamboat, he enlisted in a Louisiana company and served with distinction in the war with Mexico, where, for gallant service, he was promoted to a lieutenancy. Upon the close of the war he returned to Tennessee and embarked first in the field of journalism, then studied law and entered the political arena, and the day following the firing on Fort Sumter found him enlisting as a private in Company I, Second Tennessee Infantry. I leave to others more familiar with his life and more capable of eloquently describing his military career that interesting and delightful theme. His rapid rise and promotion for gallantry and bravery from a private to a major-generalship; the story of his almost constant engagement in battle throughout the entire period of the war; his frequent wounds and narrow escapes, having had three horses killed under him in one battle; his persistence in fighting when physically disabled; his reluctance to yield at last when the cause so dear to his heart was absolutely hopeless—all comprise a record of Spartan valor and heroism that is unsurpassed, if not unparalleled, in the world's most famous contests, and can not fail to elicit the most profound admiration of all who will read it.

The people of his State recognized his ability, his patriotism and devotion to their interests, and honored him twice with an election as chief executive of the State, and four times they honored him with election to the United States Senate. All these honors were richly deserved, and the State of Tennessee proudly and gratefully bestowed them in recognition of the splendid achievements and valorous service of her noble son; VILLIAM BRIMAGE BATE, the loyal citizen, the brilliant soldier, the honored statesman.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I dread to mar, as I know I shall by unstudied speech, the uniform beauty and appropriateness of the addresses which have been delivered here in tribute to the memory of Senator Bate. But I dread more, Mr. President, the inference which might be drawn from my silence that I am indifferent to the memory of one for whom I had profound respect and sincere friendship.

I served long with Senator Bate. I came to know him well and to greatly esteem him as the possessor of all the essential qualities of genuine manhood. I have heard more in detail today of his career than I had known. Nothing which has been day of his career than I had known as all all antry on fields of said here of his surpassing devotion and gallantry on fields of battle has surprised me. From my knowledge of him he could be the bare been better called by any other name than "The not have been better called by any other name than Indomitable BATE."

I never knew a man, Mr. President, with a finer sense of fealty to the demands of duty, great and small, than characterized Senator Bate. He was not only of exceptional physical courage, but of exceptional intrepidity of soul. Brusque sometimes, sturdy, strong fibered, educated in a school of life which develops strength of character and manhood, he pos-sessed with all his strength and firmness and bluntness not only courtesy—the courtesy of the gentleman of the old school, to use a phrase which means much, for there is no finer gentleman in the world than the gentleman of the old school—but he was withal a man of great tenderness, as are all manly men.

The bravest are the tenderest, The loving are the daring.

His sympathies were easily aroused, and no man resented more instantly and with greater spirit the perpetration of a wrong upon man, woman, or child than did he.

If I were to name the element in him which more than all things else impressed me, it was an ever-present sense of duty. It is impossible to conceive of the slightest conscious failure in the performance of any duty, public, private, or social, in Senator Bate's life.

Mr. President, he loved with inexpressible strength the Commonwealth of Tennessee and her people. He had been brought up in a school of thought and in an environment entirely different in many ways from that in which my youth and early manhood were cast. Not unnaturally he belonged to a school which construed the Constitution so as to enlarge the rights of the States and to minimize what I thought were the powers and rights of the General Government. He was not to be criticised by me for that, nor would he criticise me for that, for I never met a man more tolerant of honest differences of opinion, tolerant of weakness in friend and in foe, but tolerant never of meanness and littleness in anyone. He offered his life—and that is the most that any man can offer—many times for a cause in which he believed and in which I did not believe.

But, Mr. President, with all his strength of comradeship and of associations, with his firmness of conviction, apologizing for nothing, repenting of nothing, when he, standing at that desk, took the oath of a Senator, no man who ever has taken it and no man who ever will take it can take it with a stronger, holier purpose to serve in every way to his uttermost the Government of the United States than did he.

He was utterly indifferent to his own comfort, sometimes indifferent to his own health and safety, in the discharge of Senatorial duties relatively trifling, because they were duties, and he regarded no duty as trifling. He did not look, with all his splendid career behind him, upon the National Government from any standpoint of restriction in power other than that which he found and which many of us find in the Constitution, which he had sworn to support.

Mr. President, he stood for the rights of the States; he stood for the rights of the National Government. He stood for larger powers in the National Government than he would have done thirty years ago, as I now stand stronger for the rights of the States than I would have done thirty years ago. He knew that the National Government was created by the States; that every power which it possesses was surrendered by the States; that it possesses none except those which expressly or by implication were surrendered by the States, and that all the powers which the States did not surrender the States withheld and still possess.

He could not, without being a great man, Mr. President, have carved out for himself the career which he did in professional, in military, and in public life—a career which won him the love and admiration of his State and of the South and the unfeigned respect and regard of the people of the North. I have never allowed this aisle—nor do any of us in the discharge of public duty or in judgment of each other—to exist; and I heard the news of the illness and death of Senator BATE with the keenest sorrow.

Mr. President, this may be said of him, that when he breathed his last—and happily, he was spared a lingering illness—there followed him to his home in Tennessee the respect and affectionate regard of every member of the Senate, and the respect which all thoughtful people everywhere cherish for an honest, sincere, manly man, who had discharged to the full his duty in every relation of life.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in the Senate of the United States the true value of a man is soon ascertained. Not only is a member revealed to his associates, but often, I have no doubt, to himself. Many a Senator, I am sure, has here found that he possessed abilities and powers that he had only half recognized, and perhaps some of those qualities on which he had prided himself were found to be but weak tools for the work that had to be done here. Whatever there is in a man is here called into play, and he is judged through what he is shown to be, not through what his partial admirers may think he is. The character which is attributed to a Senator who has served a term, or nearly a term, represents the man himself as far as it is possible for associates to truthfully portray the character of those whom they know best.

Senator Bate was one who lost nothing by reason of the involuntary scrutiny to which all of us and all of our acts are here subjected. The noble qualities of mind and heart which were here shown compelled the most sincere respect; and the confidence which was reposed in his absolute honesty and unselfishness was strengthened as the years of his service increased in number. By his colleagues on both sides of this Chamber he was recognized as representing the very highest type of public man.

Senator Bate came from that part of our country where loyalty and personal honor are deservedly emphasized as the two highest virtues of man, public or private. Whatever views he might hold, whatever cause he might espouse, it was recognized that his position was taken as the result of impartial consideration and unselfish thought, and though others might not at all times agree with him, no one could raise a question as to his honesty, his conscientiousness, or his integrity of purpose.

His entire career is evidence of the simplicity and truth of his noble character. In two wars he exposed his life from the sense of highest duty to his people; and his many wounds received on the battlefield proved his energy and unshrinking courage in following the path to which that duty pointed.

Brave men in all parts of our country recognize and honor bravery wherever found, and to no one should such honor be more sincerely given than to Senator BATE.

Senator Bate was of that sturdy stock which carried the Revolutionary war to a victorious issue. There was inbred in him that quality of indomitable courage, that spirit of freedom, that determination to maintain at any cost whatever he believed to be right, which was the strength of the armies which fought under Washington and which won for us political liberty. It was this stock which gave to the people west of the Cumberland Mountains the characteristic virtues which they possess to-day. Senator Bate possessed them all in a marked degree; and they compelled him early to attain and in all his later life to maintain a leading position in the State which he made his home, whose people had so honored him again and again by electing him as their representative in the highest legislative body in the land.

His public spirit forced him into politics while he was yet young, and until his death he was more or less in public life. Fortunate is he who in so long and active a career can create such a record for unselfish devotion to the public welfare. For many years one of the most prominent and most trusted leaders of his party in Tennessee, he at last became governor, which office he administered for two terms to the lasting benefit of his State and with honor and credit to himself. From the governor's chair he came to the United States Senate, and here he found the opportunity to round out a most useful and honorable life. His honesty, courage, and ability were at once recognized, and he became one of the members of this body who had to be reckoned with on all important occasions. Vigilant and active, no matter of moment escaped him.

As chairman of the great Committee on Military Affairs he evinced a breadth of view and grasp of detail that showed him to be one of the most efficient of legislators. And on other important committees of which he was a member, his influence was felt as a force. In all public questions it was the greatest good to the greatest number at which he aimed, and to him we owe some of our most useful legislation. The Department of Agriculture, as at present constituted, is due principally to his efforts, and it was through him that the Weather Bureau was transferred from the War Department to the Department of Agriculture and divorced from the Signal Service, which has enabled its development to be effected until it has attained its present high state of efficiency. It was through his efforts that the so-called "force bill" was defeated, and in the debates on that measure, against which the whole strength of his manhood protested, Senator Bate delivered some of the strongest and most eloquent speeches ever heard in this Chamber. It was through him, also, that all laws providing for Federal supervision of elections were repealed, thus restoring to the people he loved so well the status from lack of which they had so long suffered. This great work was of incalculable benefit to our entire country, for through its means sectionalism was destroyed and the United States became at last and in fact one and indivisible. No service could be greater than

On an occasion similar to this Senator BATE said here, in reference to a deceased colleague:

In our civil war citizens of the same Commonwealth were impelled by that first and supreme necessity that is not chosen, but chooses; which is paramount to all deliberation and admits of no discussion and demands no evidence. They were forced into conflict by the operation of principles they did not originate and by circumstances over which they had no control. And now, since both sides, from their respective standpoints, believed they were in the right, let us on occasions like this, in this national forum, common in representation of all sections and all parties, bring wreaths to the "bivouac of the dead" without stopping to discuss the resolutions of '98 or the conditions which they created, or the wisdom or folly which inspired on the other side the spirit of fanaticism. Be our polities what they may, let us all honor the brave and heroic sons of all the States as models and exemplars of American character; and, since "grim-visaged war has smoothed his wrinkled front," let us honor those who were heroes in the strife with true American patriotism and pride.

We and the entire country can not only honor him who was a "hero in the strife" for his manliness, devotion, and heroism, but we can and do honor him with true American pride for the devotion and patriotism he has shown in this Chamber and for the example he has here set for all who love their country.

I was honored, Mr. President, by his personal friendship and received great benefit from his wise counsel. I owe him a debt of gratitude that can never be repaid. So, in this tribute to his memory, I may well say that he has left us a splendid legacy, and if we profit by his example we shall all be better men and better citizens of this now happy and united country.

Throughout his long life Senator Bate demonstrated that his ambition was the highest that can actuate man-an ambition to do his full duty as he understood it, not only to those immediately surrounding him, but to all mankind. In this no thought of self appeared, and personal advantage, position, or the acquisition of wealth had no place in his scheme of life. When he died he left no great fortune to his bereaved widow and his children, but he did leave them what is of far greater value-an untarnished reputation; and I am sure that the members of his family in Tennessee and California-for some of them reside there—will guard and cherish this priceless legacy. In his case it is most clearly shown that a good name is better than great riches; and that can be bequeathed to his descendants by every man who will accept the precepts and follow the example of General Bate, the soldier and the statesman. As has been so well said of another who died upon the field of duty, we can say in memory of our departed colleague and friend:

When a star is quenched on high,
For ages will its light
Still travel downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.
So when a good man dies,
For years beyond our ken
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the path of men.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States has paused to-day in the discharge of its high and responsible duties to the people of this great nation to pay fitting and deserved tribute to the memory and character of a distinguished son of Tennessee.

Mr. President, in this mercenary age, when the minds of men seem to be so deeply absorbed in the problem of how money may be gotten and riches acquired, it is a relief and a solace to be able to study the character and honor the memory of one who devoted a long life of unceasing labor and unwavering fidelity to the service of the people.

WILLIAM B. BATE, late a Senator of the United States, representing in this Chamber the State of Tennessee, was born October 7, 1826, in Sumner County of that State. He died in the city of Washington on March 9, 1905, thus lacking only a few months of baying reached the rine old are of fourseons years.

months of having reached the ripe old age of fourscore years. For more than half a century the name of William B. Bate has been familiar to every household in Tennessee, and in all his long and eventful career his influence has been potent for good. Few of the sons of Tennessee—and the State has been fruitful and rich in great men—have so universally commanded the respect and confidence of all the people as Senator Bate. Even his political enemies accorded him the just meed of praise due to the highest integrity, honesty of purpose, and purity of life. The people of Tennessee honored him as they have honored few of its citizens. He served the State long and faithfully. Once a member of the legislature, once attorney-general of his district, a soldier in the Mexican war, and again for four years a soldier in the civil war, twice Presidential elector, twice governor, and four times in succession elected to the Senate of the United States.

Every honor which the people of Tennessee had to bestow they freely gave to him, and his fidelity to each and every trust but proved that their confidence was not misplaced.

He died at his post of duty just as he was entering upon his fourth term in the Senate. Others may have served the State longer in some particular place; others may have made greater impress in certain fields of endeavor, but few have served the State in more ways and none with greater fidelity than Senator WILLIAM B. BATE.

He sprang from the body of the common people. Like so many others in the American Republic who have achieved fame and won renown, he had no noble ancestry to boast of, but he had that which in this land of equality of opportunity was far better—he had a sound body, robust intellect, the highest courage, rugged honesty, and a worthy ambition to serve his fellowmen

His birthplace was in the rich, beautiful, and fertile basin of middle Tennessee, and in sight of the old fort overlooking "Bledsoes Lick," famous in the early settlement of the State as the scene of many fierce and bloody encounters between the red men and the daring pioneers, who braved the dangers of an unexplored wilderness and the savage foe to carry the vanguard of civilization across the Cumberland Mountains on its westward course and plant it on the tributaries of the Mississippi River.

Senator Bate sprang from that sturdy stock of virtuous and liberty-loving people, whose restless and adventurous spirit led them to seek a home in the wilderness.

They came armed with the rifle, the ax, and the Bible, sustained by a brave and self-reliant manhood. They came to clear the forest, to plant the field, to build homes, and lay the foundations of orderly government. They came determined to carve out of the wilderness, by the strength of their own right arms and brave hearts, an abiding place and to erect for themselves and their posterity a commonwealth, in which there should be guaranteed to all, to high and low alike, freedom of the person, freedom of religion, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press.

They were brave, hardy, and adventurous, but they believed in individual freedom. They believed in themselves and they believed in God. They had the American genius for state making. They were prominent as commonwealth builders.

From such an ancestry Senator Bate inherited and early imbibed that toughness of moral fiber and strength of character which, through a long life of public service, no temptation could ever weaken or impair. He was not born with a silver spoon. He had the good fortune of having inherited honest poverty and of being forced, in his youth, to undergo those hardships and privations which are so conducive to the formation of a strong and manly character.

He had the further blessing of having been born and raised on a farm, that fruitful nursery of great men, and to its hardships and struggles can be attributed in no small degree that physical endurance, moral strength, and intellectual force which marked his after life.

For an American boy to have been born and reared on the farm, where, in field and forest and by river, he can study and commune with nature and have stimulated within him a profound reverence for the grandeur of the universe and the divinity of God, is a blessing. To be denied it is a distinct and positive loss.

From the farm, that cradle from which has come so many of the nation's strong and forceful men, he was early forced out into the great world to meet and compete with his fellow-

His father died when he was a youth of 15 years of age, and he was left without the help and guidance of his parental care.

His early training was thus left to his widowed mother, and so strong was the imprint of this noble Christian woman impressed upon him that when in after years he decided to openly attach himself to the church, with a sentiment that was as tender as it was beautiful he went back to the old home, sought out and joined the church in which his mother had lived and died, and was baptized in the same crystal stream in which, more than three-quarters of a century before, she had been baptized.

For a few years he continued to work on the farm and at intervals to attend the old field school, with its house built of logs, whose curriculum, though circumscribed by the limited learning of its stern preceptor, was generally enough to sow the seed of knowledge and virtue that in the fullness of time would ripen into strong and vigorous manhood and character.

But the ambitious spirit of this farmer boy chafed under its narrow limitations, and he longed for a wider field of enterprise and endeavor. His first employment after he left the farm and home to go out into the world to meet his fellows in the fierce struggles and competitions of life, in which he was destined to win success and honor and fame, was as a clerk on a steamboat then plying between Nashville and New Orleans. He was in the latter city when war broke out between the United States and Mexico over the young and struggling Republic of Texas. His chivalric soul was fired with the story of that self-exiled Tennessean, Gen. Sam Houston, who had so mysteriously resigned the high office of governor of Tennessee and left his native State to win immortal fame at San Jacinto and found a new republic in the far-distant southwest, and at the heroic devotion and unparalleled courage of another Tennessean, Davy Crockett, whose sacrificial blood at the Alamo was to water the patriotic seed that should grow and ripen into the Lone Star State of Texas.

Burning with a martial spirit, young Bate promptly enlisted in a Louisiana regiment, and was thus the first Tennessean to reach the seat of war on the Mexican border to reach the seat of war on the Mexican border.

He afterwards joined a Tennessee regiment and was made a lieutenant and participated with gallantry and distinction in most of the great battles of that war. He won merited distinction in war before he attained his majority.

At the close of the Mexican war he returned to his home in Sumner County, Tenn., and again began work upon the farm. He soon thereafter established a weekly paper at Gallatin, with the martial title of "The Tenth Legion." That paper was Democratic in politics, and was well and ably edited by its youthful proprietor.

Soon after attaining the age of 21 he became a candidate for the legislature from his native county, and after a spirited contest with older and better-known men he was elected and served the term with credit. In 1850 he determined to adopt the law as his profession. He thereupon sold his paper and entered the law school at Lebanon, Tenn., an institution widely known in the South, and from which many great lawyers of great ability and distinction and many statesmen of renown have graduated. He graduated in 1852, and at once began the prac-tice of law at Gallatin, in his native county. His success was rapid and marked.

In 1854 he was elected attorney-general of the judicial district in which Nashville, the capital of the State, was situated. He held that office for a full term of six years and declined a reelection which was offered him. He discharged the onerous and trying duties of the office with such marked ability and zeal that his reputation as a sound lawyer and vigorous advocate extended beyond his district and were recognized throughout the State.

In 1860 he was placed upon the Breckinridge and Lane electoral ticket and canvassed his district. By the ability and eloquence displayed in that canvass he came to be recognized by the Democratic party of the State as one of its most zealous and able advocates. With the election of Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency the clouds of civil war began to gather.

By education and training and environment Senator Bate was a strict constructionist of the Constitution. He was a firm believer in the doctrine that a sovereign State which had voluntarily entered into the Union had a right, when in its judgment the constitutional compact was broken, to peacefully withdraw from the Union.

To him the civil conflict came as the only means of settling what he regarded as a great and fundamental constitutional He had no doubts, no misgivings as to the correctness of his position. He believed in the sovereignty of the State and in its necessary resultant, the right of secession, with all his heart, and acting on that belief, and actuated by the purest motives, and moved by the highest and most unselfish devotion to duty and to country as he saw that duty, the day after the first gun of the great fratricidal struggle was fired at Sumter he enlisted as a private in the Confederate service.

He was rapidly promoted to captain and to colonel, and in May, 1861, marched at the head of his regiment to the seat of war in Virginia. He, with his regiment, participated in the battle of Bull Run, where he and his gallant men received their baptism of fire. In that first great battle of the civil war he displayed that dash and courage that marked his whole military career. In February, 1862, the time of enlistment of himself and his men having expired, he appealed with such fervor to their pride and patriotism and manhood that his entire regiment recallisted "for the war." His was the first regiment to display such devotion to the cause, and its example was inspiring to the whole army.

So much was this conduct of Colonel Bate and his regiment appreciated by the Confederate authorities at Richmond that they were given a sixty days' furlough, and Colonel Bate was allowed to choose the army with which he would thereafter serve. He selected the army of Tennessee, then in command of the gallant and gifted Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston. In the history of warfare there has seldom been exhibited a more unselfish and heroic devotion to a cause than was displayed by Colonel Bate and his regiment of gallant Tennesseans, when just preceding the great battle of Shiloh, at the call of their colonel, with unexpired furloughs still in their pockets, they met at the appointed place, re-formed, and moved forward to join the army in front on the eve of that noted battle, and were among the first to receive the fire of General Grant's legions at the opening of the battle of Shiloh.

On that memorable field of blood and carnage Colonel Bate had his horse killed under him and was himself severely wounded. In that fearful carnage his brother and two others of his kindred were killed, and still another wounded. So that out of one family there lay upon that bloody field near the old Shiloh Church five members, three dead and two wounded, a scene scarcely paralleled in the annals of warfare.

For gallantry at the battle of Shiloh Colonel Bate was commissioned by President Jefferson Davis brigadier-general.

From Shiloh to Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary

Ridge, north Georgia, around Atlanta, at Franklin and Nashville, in the many great battles fought by the Army of the Tennessee, General Bate was a conspicuous and distinguished figure, at his post of duty even when his unhealed wounds forced him to use his crutches. Always dashing, gallant, and courageous, he won from General Stewart the soubriquet of The Indomitable BATE.

Through all those four years of suffering and hardships, of dangers and defeats, General Bate never once faltered or wavered; never once lost faith in himself, the courage and fidelity of his men, nor the justness of his cause. He surrendered the shattered remnant of his division at Bentonville, N. C., only after it was known to all that the cause for which he had so gallantly fought and suffered was lost and further fighting was not only folly, but criminal mad-When the end came, and the Stars and Bars, which he had followed in victory and defeat with such unselfish devotion, was furled for the last time, with a spirit of frank and maily patriotism he accepted as final and conclusive every fair and legitimate result of the war. The issue had been submitted to the stern arbitrament of the sword; the decision had been against him. He accepted the result as a brave soldier and a true patriot should. He made no apologies for the past. cherished no animosities for the future.

Like hundreds and thousands of others who had worn the gray in that terrible conflict, he said, "Let the dead past bury Not forgetting the glories and the sacrifices of the past, they turned their faces to the future and laying hold of the new and difficult problems that were pressed upon them they have helped to build here a greater, a richer, and a freer republic in one than could have lived upon this continent if divided into two.

General Bate returned to his home poor, wounded, and limping. He found his State devastated, homes destroyed, industries paralyzed, the labor system on which the South's wealth had depended not only disorganized, but, as a system, utterly destroyed. The slave had been freed, but the black man remained, and with him a problem unparalleled in its difficulties. To reorganize his State and bring it again into harmony with the other States of the Union, to revive old industries and construct new ones, to build up the waste places, to readjust society, and to reorganize labor and adapt it to the new and changed conditions which had come as the war's inevitable consequence were problems which demanded the highest statesmanship and most patient conservatism.

General Bate saw and accepted the situation-the inevitable-and with the truest patriotism addressed himself to the just and peaceful solution of these large and difficult problems. He did his full duty as a citizen to bring peace and order out of chaos. He advised his comrades in arms to turn their faces to the future and to devote their energies to rebuilding their shattered fortunes.

After the surrender in 1865 General Bate resumed the practice of law at Nashville and continued in active and successful practice till 1882, when he was nominated and elected governor of Tennessee. He was again elected in 1884, and served his State in that high office for two full terms with marked distinction and ability. In 1887 he was elected to the United States Senate, where he continued to represent his State by successive elections till the day of his death. He had just entered upon his fourth term when he died. Of his services here I need not speak, as others who served with him and knew and appreciated his honesty and fidelity to duty have done so.

Senator Bate was no ordinary man. When we see him a poor, fatherless plowboy at 15, with meager educational advan-tages and no extraneous influences to aid him, by dint of his own laborious efforts and solid worth rise step by step until he became a major-general in the greatest war of modern times, the chief executive of his State, and an honored and respected member in the highest legislative council of the greatest nation of the world, we must confess that there was somewhere in the man some uplifting force that made him great and strong. Where lies the hidden spring, the secret power?

From long and, I confess, a not impartial study of Senator BATE as a man, citizen, soldier, and public official my firm belief is that the key to his character, the mainspring of his success in life, are to be found in his honesty and fidelity

Senator Bate was an absolutely honest man. He never owed any man a debt that he did not pay. He never took from any man a dollar that he did not believe was justly his. He was not only honest in the narrow commercial sense of fidelity to every financial obligation, but in the higher and broader rela-tions of life. In dealing with his fellow-men, in business, in politics, in every relation of life, he was always frank, straightforward, and honest.

His word was as good as his bond, with security. Direct, resolute, sometimes stern even to abruptness, he created enmities and was often maligned, but no man ever successfully maintained the charge that he failed to meet an obligation or to keep faith with any one of his fellow-men.

Careful, cautious, even slow to make up his mind and incur an obligation or to espouse a cause, when Senator Bate's word was once given he to whom it was given might go his way in peace, with absolute faith that that word would be made good at any sacrifice. Senator Bate's fidelity to duty was not less marked than his honesty in dealing and in purpose.

In every walk of life, from musket bearer to division commander, from steamboat clerk to governor's chair and Senator's seat, his fidelity to every trust was stern, unyielding, Spartan. From the path of duty as he saw it, from fidelity to those who trusted him, no threat or danger could drive him, no temptation could allure him. He stood always firm and uncompromising for the right, as his faith and his conscience pointed the way.

Faith in himself and the justness and purity of his motives and fidelity to obligations and to duty made him strong and forceful in the accomplishment of his purposes. He was as faithful to principle as to personal obligation. He deserted no cause which he had espoused. He compromised no principle in which he believed. Convinced that the States had a right, under the Constitution, to secede and that they had sufficient cause to justify the act, he unhesitatingly bared his bosom and risked his life and was ready to sacrifice his all for the maintenance of that principle. A Democrat and a strict constructionist of the Constitution on principle, no question of personal gain or popularity or of party exigency ever caused him to waver in his fidelity to that principle. He believed his construc-tion of the Constitution was right, and from it he never swerved. He never wavered in his fidelity to truth as he saw it, to duty as it was given to him to understand it, to the Constitution as he interpreted it.

He had faith in and a deep-seated love for our form of government. He had faith in the people and never doubted their capacity for self-government. He trusted the people. The people trusted him. There were others to whose brilliancy of speech or boldness of achievement the people may have corded a higher admiration, but there was none in whose fidelity to duty and honesty of purpose the masses of the people reposed a sublimer faith. Senator BATE was faithful to every No son of Tennessee ever bowed his head in shame because he was unfaithful to obligation or to duty.

While he was their servant the people went quietly to their fields, to their shops, to their several avocations, knowing that he who bore their high commission in the council of the nation was as faithful to duty as the needle to the pole, as pure in life as the translucent waters that flow through the verdant valleys, and as firm in character as the everlasting mountains of his native State. My father's friend, I can not remember the time when I did not know Senator BATE. I was taught to honor and respect him; his friendship and fidelity made me love him. I sought his counsel. I was guided by his wisdom. His last official act was to dictate and sign a letter to me on the day before his death. It was the last time he ever signed his name, and so firmly was his hand held in the grip of death his name, and so firmly was his hand field in the grip of death that the name is scarcely legible. It related to the disposition of the Confederate flags, ordered returned to the States by a resolution of Congress, about which, as governor, I had asked his advice—the old, tattered banners, only representing a lost cause, a sentiment, if you please; but to him, even in his hour of dissolution, it was the Cross of St. Andrew, under whose stainless folds he had charged to victory and to glory.

At the close of his address, Mr. FRAZIER said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: I ask for the adoption of the resolution I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee proposes a resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 18, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 17, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE HON. RUFUS E. LESTER.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, February 10, 1907, at the conclusion of the addresses on the life etc., of Hon. ROCKWOOD HOAR, shall be set apart for memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. RUFUS E. LESTER, late a Representative from the First Congressional district of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the order was agreed to.

SUBPORT AT BELLINGHAM, WASH.

Mr. NEEDHAM, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, reported as a privileged report the bill (H. R. 23114) extending to the subport of Bellingham, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the point of order as to whether this report is privileged or not. I am not at all certain that it is.

The SPEAKER. Does the bill make any charge upon the Treasury?

Mr. NEEDHAM. I think not.

The SPEAKER. Then it would go to the House Calendar. Mr. NEEDHAM. It has been the custom to present similar bills as privileged reports.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEAL O'DONNEL PARKS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 16169) granting a pension to Neal O'Donnel Parks. with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. Loudensla-GER, Mr. DRAPER, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama as conferees on the part of the House.

GEORGE A. TUCKER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 5041) granting an increase of pension to George A. Tucker, with a House amendment thereto disagreed to by the Senate, and a conference requested.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move that the House further insist on its amendment and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Loudenslager, Mr. Draper, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

BETTIE MAY VOSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 6833) granting an increase of pension to Bettie May Vose, with a House amendment thereto disagreed to by the Senate, and a conference requested.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move that the House further insist on its amendment and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Messrs. Loudenslager, Draper, and RICHARDSON of Alabama.

JAMES M. DARLING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8631) for the relief of James M. Darling with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24109) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railway Company to construct sundry bridges across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the Norfolk and Western Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate bridges and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at such points where the same forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky or the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Virginia, as the said company may deem suitable for the passage of its road over the said Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River in the States of West Virginia and Kentucky and in the States of West Virginia and Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if these are the same bills that we had up here two or three years ago?
Mr. HUGHES. Bills of the same nature.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. HUGHES. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hughes, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24103—the District of Columbia appropriation bill—with Mr. Mann in the chair.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, for the information of several of us who have something else to do, about how long he thinks this general debate will run?

Mr. GILLETT. I have no further requests, after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] concludes. I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] has promised half an hour.

Mr. BURLESON. Thirty-five minutes.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That will be all the general debate?
Mr. GILLETT. Beyond that I know of no further general debate.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to occupy so much time as has been allotted to me, as my voice is hardly in condition to say all that I wish to say. I may desire to insert some statistics or other matter that I shall not take time to read, and will therefore ask unanimous consent at this point to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask attention for a brief period this morning to a matter in which a great many good people all over this land are interested, namely, the welfare of those wards of the nation, the American Indians.

In the Indian appropriation bill as it passed this House at this session there was this paragraph:

For support and education at Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., for transportation of pupils to and from said school, and for general repairs and improvements, $163,000; for additional salary for superintendent in charge, $1,000; for employees' quarters, $5,000; in all, $169,000.

Now, it is known that in another body an attempt will be made either to strike out this appropriation entirely or to so amend the bill as to cut off, at a stated period, this Carlisle Indian As there may not be an opportunity when the bill comes back to this House for much discussion, I ask your patience for a few minutes this morning while I explain the origin, purpose, progress, and usefulness of the United States training school for Indians at Carlisle, Pa.

Away back in 1777, mostly by the labor of Hessians captured by Washington at the celebrated battle of Trenton, there were erected extensive barracks at Carlisle. By 1846 they had reached such proportions that they were capable of housing 2,000 men and caring for their horses. At that time the buildings were splendidly fitted up by Capt. E. V. Sumner, in command of the post, and largely devoted to the uses of a United States cavalry school until the civil war, when the troops at that point were drawn into active service.

At about the close of the civil war these barracks were used for the housing of Indian captives, in charge of Capt. R. H. Late in the seventies or early in the eighties there was conceived and carried into effect the idea of establishing and maintaining at that point a school for the industrial training of Indian boys and girls.

Captain Pratt (afterwards colonel and now retired as brigadier-general) was placed in command and proved himself the right man for the place. He was eminently successful. Upon his retirement he was succeeded, some two or three years ago, by Maj. W. A. Mercer, the present superintendent, with whom I am not personally so well acquainted, but who seems to maintain the high standard of the institution.

The progress of this Indian industrial school at Carlisle has been remarkable. It has become, and now is, the largest, the most celebrated, the most useful, and, proportionately, the least expensive of all our Indian schools. Those persons throughout the entire country most interested, and who have given the most studious thought and care to the welfare of the Indian. have watched with increasing pride and satisfaction the growth, progress, and increasingly useful career of this institution.

Separated from their tribal relations the Indian pupils have taken a greater interest in acquiring useful knowledge and have gained greater proficiency. The discipline of the institution is perfect, and the training there given them is of a plain and practical character, fitting them not only to be independent and make their own living, but to be useful to the communities in which they may ultimately find employment and make their homes.

The location of this school is ideal. The Government owns several hundred acres of land in the beautiful, fertile, and farfamed Cumberland Valley. The buildings are near, indeed within, the corporate limits of the peaceful, orderly, and attractive borough of Carlisle, and in the heart of as fine an agricultural region as there is in the country. The farmers thereabouts are sober, industrious, and thrifty people, setting good examples for the young Indians, many of whom are employed by them during the summer months, earning good wages in every variety of farm work. Although in the early days of the country the Indian depredations and outrages in that vicinity were almost without number, it has come to pass that the in-habitants look with extreme kindness upon these Indian boys and girls, and the sentiment toward them is of the very best.

The Government buildings are adequate for the care of 1,200 or 1,500 pupils. The sanitary conditions of the location and of the grounds and buildings are excellent. Within the past year a new auditorium has been completed, with a seating capacity of 1,200. It is plain in character, with a large stage equipped with the necessary fittings, electric lights, etc. There is also a new library and spacious, comfortable, well-lighted reading rooms in connection therewith. The Government has in late years spent very considerable sums in enlarging and putting all these buildings in the very best condition. There is a fine greenhouse and a large orchard and gardens. The pupils are practically trained in the culture of fruit and berries, plant propagation, the raising of vegetables, the care of all kinds of fruit trees, flowers, shrubbery, and decorative and foliage plants. The grounds are beautifully kept by the Indians themselves and are the subject of the pleased comment of thousands of people who visit them annually.

The greatest objection that I have ever heard urged to this school was that the "higher education" does not in the end prove beneficial to Indians. That objection I think comes from people who have not carefully considered the character of the training and education which is bestowed upon them at Carlisle. Perhaps I can not more concisely set forth the character of the education given to these pupils than is done in the reports of its superintendent made to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I wish to illustrate by the reading of this report the character of the "higher education" which is here given to the Indians. The superintendent says:

Industrial work along fourteen lines, under the immediate direction of Superintendent of Industries Thompson, was pursued regularly and energetically, with satisfactory results, considering the condition: but there was lacking equipment in some of the shops necessary to the atainment of desired results. However, the deficiencies are provided for, and another year the courses in carpentry, blacksmithing, and wagon making will be much improved, and additional work given in construction.

Class work and individual instruction was a superior of the construction.

making will be much improved, and additional work given in construction.

Class work and individual instruction were given in sewing, cooking, and laundry. The plan of assigning a number of girls to special duty in the kitchen for individual instruction was pursued with great success. Each girl was assigned a table which she was obliged to take care of, and for which she prepared and cooked food for ten, discretion being allowed somewhat as to variety and method of preparation, which induced friendly rivalry. Credit is reflected upon the girls' work by the fact that their tables were so much desired that it was found necessary to assign new tables weekly, to the end that all could in turn have the benefit of them.

In the sewing room and laundry older and well-instructed girls were put in charge of classes, thus giving responsibility, which increased and confirmed their knowledge.

The two large farms were conducted as in the past, and while good results were obtained, there is much room for improvement in methods of instruction and resulting products, in both of which better success is expected the coming year.

And again as follows:

And again as follows:

And again as follows:

Much attention was given to systematic physical exercises for both boys and girls, the good results of which are noticeable in the finely set-up appearance of both, the increased average good health, and apparent expressions of content and happiness. In athletics our track team won noted victories over large colleges and made excellent records; in baseball we did well, and our football eleven was most successful. As the students engaged in athletics, even the members of our teams, are required to keep up the schoolroom and industrial work, there are no bad results, but much that is of benefit to the individual and to the school in the pleasant diversion it lends to the regular work and most desirable and beneficial break in the monotony of school life which it provides, and all at no expense to the Government. In fact, the money received from two or three of the important games of football has maintained the athletics of the school, prepared field, built training cages, bought equipment, paid coaches, provided funds for the special instruction at summer schools and for the higher education of individuals which would otherwise have been impossible, and made it possible to meet without serious handicap in fests of strength, skill, and endurance their white brethren of the colleges with great credit and much benefit to themselves. For the first time Haskell and Carlisle met on the gridiron and in a most interesting game at the St. Louis Exposition. Carlisle was decidedly victorious.

The outing system as carried on for a number of years past was continued successfully. It is productive of the very best results and is one of the most valuable aids to the practical education and general upilifting of the Indian youth, and is made possible to the great extent in which it is conducted here only by the splendid Christian and industrial environment of the school.

Now I call your attention to this paragraph in his report for

Now I call your attention to this paragraph in his report for

The industrial work has been more thoroughly organized and more closely supervised, especially as to the several trades, with correspondingly increased results. Several new woodworking machines propelled by electric motors were installed in the carpenter shop nearly a year ago. Since that time all of the millwork for our new buildings, for our many improvements, and for our numerous repairs has been turned out from that shop; also the cases, in hard wood, for our new library, and a large amount of cabinetwork, besides tables, stands, chairs, etc. During the year about eighty-five sets of double harness and a number of wagonettes, wagons, buggles, and surreys have been made for western schools and agencies. That they were satisfactory was evidenced by several duplications of orders. The training in the several trades is thorough and practical. They include, for the boys, carpentry, blacksmithing, wagon making, painting, tinsmithing (especially roofing work), harness and shoe making, printing, baking, steam and pipe fitting, tailoring, plastering, masonry, and cement work, the last three named having been added during the past year; for the girls, sewing, laundry work, and practical housekeeping are thoroughly and systematically taught. All the uniform dresses and much of the other clothing, shirts for large and waists for small boys, as well as table and bed linen, towels, etc., for the school, are made in the girls sewing department. The tailor shop makes nearly all the uniform suits for the boys.

In all our industrial work special stress is placed on having our instructors instruct and make the pupils do the work, so that we are able to say our manufactured products are in fact the work of our boys and girls. Further than this, the plan is adopted whenever opportunity offers to place our most advanced and capable boys and girls in charge of classes. Thus individual power is developed beyond the point of mere training, so that many of our students are equipped for positions in the Indian Service or for the direction of hired labor on their own account.

Our two school farms, with a total area of about 300 acres, nearly all of which can be cultivated, have produced good crops and, with the exception of some potatoes for the mess and a small quantity of forage for the stock which had to be bought, have supplied an abundance of vegetables for the pupils and the subsistence required for our horses and our large dairy herd. The soil is, however, very much impover the fertility of the farms as speedily as possible, but to raise all the forage required at the school, even for an increased dairy herd which now comprise eighty-six head. The farms are conveniently located with refere

At this school, however, our outing system provides the most practical training possible for our boys in the conduct of a farm, the care of stock, etc., and for our girls in housekeeping and domestic economy. Under the system all our students spend two winters and at least two and in many cases three summers in one of the best rural homes in eastern Pennsylvania or New Jersey. During the past year the outing work has been carried on with the usual satisfactory results. The total number of students "out" during the year was 693, of whom 372 were boys and 321 girls.

To illustrate still further the practical ruters of the first the still first the still further the still first the still further the still further the still further the still first the still fi

To illustrate still further the practical nature of the "higher education" complained of, I read from the commencement address of the superintendent in 1906, as follows:

dress of the superintendent in 1906, as follows:

The industries taught are carpentry, blacksmithing, printing, tailoring, wagon making, carriage and house painting, calcimining, upholstering, tinsmithing, shoemaking, harness making, steam fitting, plumbing, farming, dairying, stock and boultry raising. The industrial department has been improved by adding bricklaying, stone masonry, cement work, lath and plastering, photography, and increased in possible efficiency, obtained by extending the work in nearly every branch, by adding machinery, and generally better systematizing the course in many industries. In photography splendid work is being done, and it is exceedingly interesting to many of the youth with artistic talent, besides being inordinately patronized, whereas a few years ago there was almost universal objection among the Indians, amounting in most cases to superstition, to having their photographs taken. I recall an event of but six years ago wherein I had much difficulty in saving a friend from being shot by an angry Indian whose pappoose he had snapped with a kodak. The incident would have been most laughable if it had not embodied such serious possibilities.

I will not consume time by further readings. I have suffi-

I will not consume time by further readings. ciently shown the branches in which young Indians are educated and made proficient at Carlisle. Now, Mr. Chairman, is it "higher education" or is it too high education to teach these young boys to make harness, to make horseshoes, to build wagons, to lay bricks, to become stone masons, to make tables and stands and chairs, to become tinners, carpenters, steam fitters, pipe fitters, and the like? Is it a useless and unnecessary sort of education to teach young Indians to shoe horses, to milk cows, to plow a straight furrow, to sow wheat, to mow, to reap, to husk corn, and perform all the other industries known to farm life? Is it undesirable that these Indian girls shall be taught to bake, to do laundry work, to do housework of all kinds, to make their own dresses, to make shirts for the boys, and generally to be qualified to make their own honest living?

It seems to me that this is the very best kind of "higher education" that could be bestowed upon these pupils-the best for them and best for the country-because it makes them self-sustaining, useful, and independent citizens.

Another objection urged is that it would be better to educate them upon the reservations among their own people. I doubt it. I do not believe it. I have high authority to the contrary. In a letter addressed to the National Educational Convention at Ocean Grove, N. J., in August, 1883, the then Secretary of the Interior, Hon. HENRY M. TELLER, said:

The agency schools are not regularly attended, and the children derive but little benefit therefrom.

That was a good while ago, and I doubt not that conditions are very much improved at the agency schools since then.

am making no attack upon them; I believe they are doing much good. But I do not believe they are doing as much good as the I have in my possession a letter from at Carlisle. a gentleman who has lived ten or fifteen years upon, or in the vicinity of, an Indian reservation, upon which there is a school. He tells me that he was never able to find an Indian who could do housework nor one who could do baking until he found one who had returned from the Carlisle School. says he has never known a pupil of an Indian reservation school who could bake. Is it detrimental higher education that an Indian girl or boy should know how to bake? At the Carlisle School a little Indian, rejoicing in the somewhat inappropriate name of Goliath Big Jim, bakes every day, or superintends the baking of, five barrels of flour into very good bread. All of the girls and many of the boys who graduate at Carlisle are proficient in that art.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not he does not think it an unnecessary expense to send Indians from one to two thousand miles, to a different climate, where it is much colder than the climate to which they are accustomed, and where they are more susceptible to fatal diseases, especially consumption and kindred diseases, together with the additional trouble of carrying them so far away from their homes, away from their people and their kindred? Does not the gentleman think it would be much better to have these schools near the reservations, whether they are on the reserva-tions or not, and should it not be the desire and intention of the Government to locate those schools in the neighborhood of the State or Territory where the Indians are situated, instead of expending so much money and sending them so many hundred miles away, as they do now, to a different part of the country, where they can not have the sympathy of their home people and of their families?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, those are perfectly proper and relevant questions, natural questions perhaps, and I am very glad to answer them. As to the matter of expense, experience and statistics show that, even including the transportation, they are cared for at less cost per capita at Carlisle than at any other Indian school in the United States. That is partly owing, perhaps, to the fact that there is a greater number there and partly to the fact that the Government owns in connection with the school a large and fertile farm, worked by the Indians, which furnishes a very considerable proportion of the provi-sions for their support. Now, experience also teaches, I think, that they do better at this school than they do at or near the reservations. Separated from their tribal relations they seem to take a greater interest in acquiring education and achieve greater proficiency. That they do have the sympathy of their home people and families is well known. It is also shown by the innumerable applications from Indian parents for the admission of other children.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry on that point?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is true that after the Indian leaves the school and returns to his natural environment, namely, the reservation, whether or not he is as well fitted to go again amongst his brethren as he would be if he was educated in his environment; that is, at home or near home?

Mr. OLMSTED. That also is a perfectly proper and relevant question, Mr. Chairman, and I think can be readily answered. In the first place, a great many of these Indians never do go back to the reservations. One argument which has been used against this school is that they will go back to the blanket. It may be that a few of them do, just as it is true that some pupils in our great universities fail to avail themselves to the Zullest extent of their opportunities and go back to idle, indolent, useless lives. But it is true only to a small degree of the pupils of the Carlisle school. Colonel Pratt, who was in charge of this school for many years, said two or three years ago in a speech at Wilmington, Del., that within 80 miles of that town there were over 200 Indian graduates, some of them domestics in white families, others doing carpentering, blacksmithing, and other work, and it is so to-day. There are graduates of that school working as telegraph operators and at innumerable trades and occupations. Thirty-four Carlisle Indians served in the Spanish-American war and made excellent soldiers. At least seven of them enlisted in the Navy. A few of them, after leaving the Indian school, have graduated at Dickinson Col-I am advised that at least one United States Senator has living with his family in Washington as cook or house worker at least one girl from Carlisle, and he has found two or three of them useful in his own home. He has reported that his family is well pleased with their proficiency and with their services.

The Carlisle pupils are employed in families and upon farms in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and Delaware. majority of them never do go back to the reservations. those who do go back are even better qualified to work among their relatives and friends and bring them up to the standard of independent living, which after all is what we ought most to desire in the education of the Indian.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows what the average period of time is for pupils at the Carlisle school?

Mr. OLMSTED. The full course is about five years.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And is it not true that as a rule pupils who go to Carlisle do not return to their homes until such time as they have graduated or left the school?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, they do not all graduate. I am unable to say about the extent to which they visit their homes during their school course. I know that very often their parents visit them. I know their parents are very much interested in this school, and it is a singular and pertinent fact about this school, Mr. Chairman, that it does not have to send out agents to secure pupils, but applications are made by the parents of the Indians to an extent beyond the capacity of the school. There are always applications for more pupils than the school can accommodate, showing that the Indians themselves take a great interest in this school.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have always supported the appropriations for the support of the Carlisle school, and I have done that because I believe in the education of the Indian up to a certain extent. I have some misgiving about the advisability of continuing indefinitely a school for Indians at Carlisle, away from their homes and the States where they reside, unless there is going to be some way to find employment for the pupils and graduates of that institution in the locality of the school rather than that they go back to the reservation. Now, everything that is taught at Carlisle that the genleman has enumerated is taught in every well regulated Government Indian school. We have in the West many schools that are known as nonreservation schools, yet they are adjacent or close to the reservation and practically are the same as the schools on the reservation, and everything that the gentleman has mentioned, I think, is taught in most of those schools, and they are taught along the industrial lines and the other lines that the gentleman has suggested. But I doubt, as I said, whether it is advisable to continue educating Indians at Carlisle unless it is with the intention that after they leave the school they will remain in the environment of their education rather than to return to the reservation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, there is not the slightest difficulty in finding employment for every graduate of the Carlisle Indian School within a hundred miles of the school itself. There is, indeed, a great demand for these pupils—greater than the school can supply-and if any one of them does go back to the West it is because of his own choice or the choice of his parents. Some of them do go back and enter the Indian Service of the Government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In order to give some light on the proposition which the gentleman has just stated, that there is a great demand in these various schools for Indian children, I will state that in the El Paso district, in my State, which I recently represented, they were so anxious to get children for these various Indian schools in the United States that they sent down there and took a lot of Mexican children. It is true that these Mexicans have some Indian blood in them, because it is a mongrel race. They procured thirty or forty of those students, prepared them for different schools in Oklahoma and Indian Territory, and they became dissatisfied. After they had been up there for a while, they applied to the Secretary of the Interior and to the school authorities to be relieved, so that they could go back home.

They refused them, and they then filed some kind of legal proceedings, setting up the fact that they were citizens of Texas and that we had free schools there and free school facilities, probably the best in the United States, and that these were not Indian children, and on the facts shown they were compelled to turn loose our Mexican citizens and send them back home. I want to suggest to the gentleman that it is a fact that these schools are now seeking students all over the United States, anyone with Indian blood in them, whether they are citizens of the United States or the State or Territory in which they are located, and counting them in the schools for the purpose of getting $167 a head per annum, to which these children are entitled. I think as soon as the parents of an Indian child become citizens of the United States that this Government should no longer be charged with educating that child, but that the States or Territories should have that child. The lands belonging to the Indians are being allotted to them very fast, and the decisions of the court and the law is that as soon as the lands are allotted to the Indians they become citizens of the United States; hence a citizen of the State or Territory in which they reside. Their children then are entitled to enter the public schools of that State or Territory, and they should be taken off of the United States. If that is done, in ten years or less time there will be no Indian children competent to send to Carlisle or to any of these large schools. I believe we are spending an immense amount of money now uselessly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, Mr. Chairman, the observations of my friend are hardly applicable to the case in hand or to the Carlisle School. There has never been any occasion for this school to send out agents to drum up pupils whose entrance would be of doubtful propriety; nor, indeed, to solicit pupils at all. It is unable to care for all the applicants it has, although the average attendance is about 1,000. The cost of keeping the pupils in this school, board and clothing, is only about $143 per capita, exclusive of transportation, which is much less than they are kept for in any other school.

When the time comes that there are no pupils who can be properly kept in school, then we may have to consider the abolition of all the schools. But that time has not come and is not even near at hand. We now have about ninety reservation Indian schools, boarding schools, and twenty-five nonreservation Indian boarding schools, not far removed from the reservation. The only one far distant is that at Carlisle. It was an experiment, but it has proved a wonderfully successful one, and it would be the height of folly to cut it down in the midst of its usefulness.

We have also, supported at Government expense, 146 day schools, and there are in course of construction nineteen new buildings to be used as day schools upon the reservations. In the ninety reservation schools there were in 1906 11,007 pupils In the twenty-five nonreservation schools there were 9,279 pupils enrolled, of which 1,025 were at Carlisle. In the day schools there were 4,476 pupils enrolled. All of these schools are, I have no doubt, doing good work. I do not desire to be understood as making any attack upon or criticism of any of them; but it is easily demonstrable that the school at Carlisle is doing more good and accomplishing a better and higher purpose than any of the others. It ought to be the last, instead of the first, to be abolished. We have also at Hampton a school where some Indians are educated, partly or wholly at Government expense. Then, at Philadelphia, we have the Lincoln Institution, where Indians are educated at the private expense of charitable and philanthropic persons who are interested generally in the Indian cause.

There are also upon or near the reservations some forty-five mission schools, maintained by Christian churches of various denominations, for the education and training of Indians. The Catholics have been and are particularly interested in such schools, and other churches are doing something in the same

Now, another branch of education taught at Carlisle is illustrated in the fact that these Indians have a band of sixty pieces. Is it detrimental or in any way objectionable higher education to teach an Indian to blow his own horn? That he certainly does blow it successfully was apparent when that band marched down Pennsylvania avenue in the grand procession incident to the inauguration of Theodore Roosevelt at the head of 400 Car-

Is it an objectionable higher education that these youths are taught discipline, soldierly bearing, and orderly conduct? Those cadets had no occasion to be humiliated in the presence of the military cadets of West Point or the naval cadets from Annapolis. The Indian boys suffered nothing by comparison. Their appearance elicited this favorable comment in a letter written to their commander by Hon. F. E. Leupp, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He said:

I wish you would say to the boys who took part in the inaugural parade that I was more than gratified—I was positively astonished—at their fine marching and soldierly appearance. Wherever I have gone in Washington since that day people have been talking about the Carlisle cadets, and I have been very proud of having them under my jurisdiction. I hope to be able to say something of this face to face when we meet at commencement.

The Secretary of the Interior was also so gratified that he wrote the commander, saying:

Wrote the commander, saying:

It gives me very great pleasure to congratulate you and through you the Carlisle boys, whose fine appearance, soldierly bearing, and excelent performance while participating in the inaugural procession here on Saturday last elicited great applause, especially from the President, the members of the Cabinet, and others who had the pleasure of witnessing them as they passed by the President's stand, and, I am informed also, all along the route of the procession that day.

Please thank your boys for me for this demonstration of their appreciation in part of the efforts the Government is making in behalf of their education.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that no organization participating in that day's procession received more plaudits than did the Indian cadets of the Carlisle School. The regiment was accompanied by six noted chiefs—Geronimo, American Horse, Hollow Horn Bear, Quanah Parker, Little Plume, and Buckskin Charley—who acted as aids to the commander, showing the interest that these noted chiefs and all Indians take in this school as well as the whites who watch its progress so closely.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard it stated, and believe it to be true, that no pupil of the Carlisle School, and no father of a pupil of the Carlisle School, has ever taken arms against the Government. It is a great agency of peace in more ways than one.

And now another branch of this higher education-and let me say here in reference to the suggestion of the gentleman who just interrupted me-in it they obtain a greater proficiency than is acquired by pupils in the reservation schools. While it is true that many of those branches are taught in the reservation schools and nonreservation schools near the reservations, the pupils have obtained greater proficiency at Carlisle for two reasons: First, they are farther separated from their families and friends, just as we send white boys away from home in order that they may better learn, giving their whole attention to study without the distractions of home surroundings, and may also learn independence; second, the course is five years, as against three years on the reservation schools.

Another branch of the higher education in which they are taught is football, baseball, and other athletics. It has come to pass in these latter days that the standing of a college or university is judged largely by the success of its football team. Measured by that test the Carlisle School not only excels all other Indian schools, but compares favorably with many of our large colleges and universities, and stands in a class with Harvard, which was able to score only six points against the Indian team in the past year's contest.

Mr. PAYNE. Would the gentleman advocate the creation of a school for the purpose of teaching football to these Indians?

Mr. OLMSTED. Why, no, Mr. Chairman; I would not advocate a Government school simply for the teaching of football to Indians; neither would I advocate the establishment or mainte-nance of great universities for the teaching of football to white boys. But I have never heard that it injured an Indian boy any more than a white boy to become athletic; and I will say to the gentleman from New York that these athletics do not cost the Government a cent. They are not paid for out of Government funds nor by private subscriptions. The Indian football team and the Indian baseball team are so proficient, so celebrated, and so popular throughout the country, and constitute such great attractions that wherever either team plays the admissions are large, and their share of the gate moneys a great deal more than pays the expense of the entire athletic system and training of the school.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course I asked the gentleman the question in pleasantry, and I supposed that when the gentleman spoke of their being taught football and baseball that he was also using pleasantry with reference to these boys.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, yes; I so understood my friend from New York. It is a good thing, and I took occasion to speak of it as showing how desirable as well as pleasant it is for these Indian boys and girls in the school to be trained in athletics, whereby they not only gain pleasant recreation, but are increased and preserved in health. I will add that the conduct of these young Indians at these great public gatherings for games is most exemplary, and may well excite the envy of many institutions for the education of white pupils.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is regarded, very justly, as an excellent lawyer, and I would like to have his legal opinion upon the question as to whether or not there is any legal obligation resting upon the Government to sustain schools for the Indians, or people who have Indian blood in their veins, after the parents of those children have become citizens of the United States?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, Mr. Chairman, that question has no application in this discussion. It is not alleged that it applies to the pupils in the Cariisle School, and that legal question would have no more application to this school than to any other school, either reservation or nonreservation. Indeed, it seems to have no application at all to Carlisle.

I do not suppose there is any legal obligation upon the Government to do anything for these Indians. There is not, so far as I am aware, any legal or constitutional obligation resting upon Congress to appropriate for the maintenance of any of these schools. It is rather in the nature of a moral obligation. There are no other people toward whom this Government stands in quite the relation that it stands toward the Indians, who once possessed and owned and occupied this entire land. Moreover, it is now a question not more as to the welfare of the Indians than as to the greatest good to the country in dealing with them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me to suggest, I am satisfied that four-fifths of the children in the Carlisle School are children of parents who are citizens of the United States, who have had their lands allotted to them, and who, hence, are citizens of the State or Territory where they reside, and should be in the State schools, and the State should provide for them, and not the General Government. What does the gentleman think about that?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, that is a question which, it seems to me, is profitless to discuss at this point. I am unable to follow up the financial or other status of the parents of these children. I do not know what ones have had lands allotted to them. I have never heard the allegation made before that any of their parents were citizens of the United States. I am satisfied the gentleman from Texas is entirely mistaken as to Carlisle. But if it were true of that school I am sure it is true of all the other schools, and therefore there is no argument arising from that fact to justify the striking down of this school and the maintenance of the others.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What I desired to direct the gentleman's attention to was the question whether he would be in favor of taking numbers of Indian children whose parents were citizens of the United States and of the States where they lived and putting them in the Carlisle School or any other school?

Mr. OLMSTED. When we take up the question of abolishing all these schools, that is a question which we may have to meet and discuss. But we shall first have to ascertain and determine whether any of the parents are citizens of any State.

Now, as to the coeducation of Indians and whites in the public schools. That has been tried to a certain extent near the reservations, with results thus set forth by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In his report for 1906 he says:

In many neighborhoods the whites object to the Indian pupils on the ground of their dirty habits, their diseases, and their morals.

He says the whites object to coeducation with the Indian pupils in the public schools because of their health, their habits, and their morals; that they are dirty, diseased, and immoral. That is the objection to their education in the public schools in the vicinity of the reservations. Now that is not true at Carlisle. The pupils there are kept clean and healthy, neat, tidy, and orderly. No complaint has ever come up from the citizens in the vicinity of the Carlisle School against these pupils on any one of the three grounds named. The Commissioner in the same report also shows that on and near the reservations there is race prejudice against the Indians, and mentions that it is "particularly obvious at Fort Totten, Hayward, Pala, San Jacinto, Seger, and Tulalip." There is no race prejudice against them in Pennsylvania.

Although in the early days of this country there were as many Indian depredations committed in and about Carlisle as in any other part of the country, it is now the fact that there is a most kindly and friendly and admiring sentiment among the industrious, intelligent, and thrifty farmers and all other people in that beautiful valley toward these wards of the nation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Has the gentleman any statistics as to the number of pupils in the Carlisle school who have been obliged to leave the school on account of tuberculosis?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no statistics upon that point. Tuberculosis, as is well known, is a disease to which Indians are more or less subject, no matter where they may be—North or South, East or West.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman mentioned Quanah Parker, who is chief of the Comanche tribe of Indians in Oklahoma. I will state to the gentleman that a son of Quanah Parker died in New Mexico, at Fort Stanton Reservation, about a year ago. His father brought him down where I lived, and I assisted in getting him transportation to that point. He was in the last stages of consumption, and he had just the year before that graduated at Carlisle.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is very likely. I know of two graduates from Yale who died of tuberculosis within sixty days.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman did not wait until I completed my statement. I know myself of numerous Indians in that reservation who had been sent to Hampton and Carlisle, in the North here, away from the plains country, where the climate is much more healthful than it is in the East for people of that kind, who have been accustomed to outdoor life, and many of them—I will not say a majority of them, but a great many of them—fall victims to tuberculosis. They are much more subject to it—take it more easily than white people do.

Mr. OLMSTED. I believe that to be true, but I deny that they are peculiarly subject to it or exposed to it at Carlisle, for that is not a part of the country in which that disease particularly abounds. It has a particularly healthy climate; fully as much so as the country in which the reservations are, for the most part, located.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It may be all right for Pennsyl-vanians, but not for Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will pardon me, I would like to state that last year I took up with the agent of each of the Indian reservations in my State, and there were several, to know something about the number of pupils that had gone from these reservations to the Carlisle School and to know something about how they had turned out. I found in one reservation that the larger part of them had died as a result of tuberculosis a short time after returning from school. I found also that a good many that had left were absolutely worthless, but, on the whole, I think there was a greater number that were thrifty than there were that were worthless. In one or two reservations, with few exceptions, they were all maintaining a living and taking care of themselves, and some of them were employed about the agency. One agency where I was, the issue clerk was a Carlisle graduate, and he was as bright and probably as efficient a clerk as any white man could have been. I simply state this in justice to the Carlisle School. I could have given statistics if I had known that this debate was coming up. If I have them in the city, I will give them to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think, on the whole, it was in favor of the education that they received at Carlisle.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have such testimony from so reliable a source.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will pardon me, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to know whether the Indians on the reservation, which the gentleman referred to, are not dying off from year to year, young Indians as well as the old, of tuberculosis?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Tuberculosis is prevalent to a great extent among the Sioux Indians on some reservations. I think on some reservations as high as 70 or 75 per cent are affected with tuberculosis. It is a subject that has attracted a good deal of attention of late, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the Indian appropriation bill that we passed last year, was authorized to examine into the subject and make a report to Congress, which he has not yet done. I understand that he expects before the adjournment of Congress to make a report with certain suggestions and recommendations. I do not know that the tubercular feature is a subject that enters into this question of the Carlisle school, except the fact that the confining of an Indian, who might be subject to tubercular trouble, would tend perhaps to develop the disease; but that would be true anywhere, although I think the climate where the Indians are generally located, especially in the Northwest, is more conducive to the health of the people who have tubercular affection than perhaps the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is unfortunately true, Mr. Chairman, that the Indians are, more than the white race, subject to the ravages of tuberculosis. I believe it is also true of the colored people in the South as well as in the North. But it is a mistake to suppose that the Indians at the Carlisle School are more subject to that disease than the Indians at any other school. I believe if the exact facts and real statistics could be elicited upon that point it would be found that there is less of that disease among the pupils at Carlisle than in any other school. The utmost care is taken in the admission of pupils not to receive any that are so afflicted, and their health is cared for scrupulously there. That is one advantage of the athletic training that they receive, the girls as well as the boys, and they are kept out of doors as much as possible. Many of them work out of doors all summer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman pardon me for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the gentleman passes away from the athletic feature I would like to ask him if he is able to state whether any Indians are retained in the school merely for the purpose of continuing them as members of various ath-

Mr. OLMSTED. I think I may safely say that they are not, except, perhaps, as instructors.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean retained as pupils some time after they would naturally finish at the school, because of their peculiar fitness for the different athletic games.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think not, Mr. Chairman. would not be permitted to play with a college or university team if there was any charge of that kind sustainable against

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps it is fair for me to say that the reason which prompts the question is this: Two years ago I spent some time at a place where the Carlisle Indian band was Seneca Indian who had been eight years at Carlisle. I asked him when he expected to finish, and he did not know. Apparently that young Indian from the State of New York was at the school merely to—

Mr. OLMSTED. Blow his horn?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No: to add to the efficiency of the band. My belief is that the school has done good work in Indian education. I desire to know whether the gentleman has any information that would enable him to state whether this, perhaps, would be an exceptional case or whether the school has not been made too attractive in some respects, so as to keep Indians there for purposes not most beneficial to them, but merely to add to the renown of the school with the people of the country.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that that can be true. If it were true to any extent, I should certainly have heard of it. I think the case mentioned by the gentleman is an isolated case. It is possible that that particular Seneca Indian was retained as a sort of instructor in the band. I do not know the particulars of that case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; he was not an instructor. He was an ordinary musician. I forget the particular instrument that he played, but not one that required any great proficiency or expertness.

Mr. DALE. Does the gentleman from New York know whether the school got an appropriation for that Indian? If it did not, then the gentleman's argument would have no force-if he was not counted in the number.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had some discussion about that, but I am unable to state definitely whether he was an Indian for whom the nation paid or whether he was there paying his own way; on that I am unable to state.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania would state to the House, if he has not already done so, how much is annually appropriated for the Carlisle School by the Government and how many Indians they have there in annual attendance?

Mr. OLMSTED. The intent is to maintain as nearly as pos-Sometimes it is a little over that number, and sometimes a little under, but the average is about 1,000. total enrollment in 1906 was 1,025. The appropriation in this bill for their maintenance, including transportation, is $163,000. It is less per capita than at the other schools. On the point suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], of course it is a very attractive feature of this school that it has this magnificent band and maintains this magnificent regiment of cadets. It is attractive to the Indians themselves, and probably in part accounts for the many applications for admission, mostly from full-blooded Indians. I believe the proportion of full bloods is greater at this school than at any other. But these features are also attractive to all white people who interested in the Indians. I noticed that the President of the United States eyed them with great pride and pleasure as they passed before him in review at the dedication of Pennsylvania's magnificent capitol building on the 4th of October They were on that occasion a most attractive feature of the parade in honor of the dedication of the handsomest State capitol in the United States.

There is another feature to which I wish to call the attention of the House. In the summer months these Indians are permitted to hire themselves out to farmers and others. They not only get healthful occupation on the farms and acquire in that way practical and valuable experience in farming, but they breathe in health with the pure air and drink it in with the pure water of that far-famed valley. They are taught also habits of frugality. I am told that one of the hardest things to teach an Indian is to save money. The Indian is always generous with his money and property. There is no such thing as a stingy Indian. But here they are taught to improve in that That they do improve and learn is manifest from the direction. fact that during the past summer-1906-the Indians at that school earned over $30,000 and have saved over $12,000, which they now have in banks and savings institutions.

The pupils at Carlisle use neither liquor nor tobacco. pline in this, as in other details, is very strict. The institution is, of course, nonsectarian. The ministers of the churches at Carlisle of all denominations are quite willing to take turns Their moral as well as their physical health preaching to them.

is carefully looked after.

It is not my desire to longer consume the time of the House. I merely wish to say that the people of this entire country have watched with interest, and I think with pride, the growth, the wonderful progress, and the increasing usefulness of this Carlisle Indian School. I trust that I may rely upon the support of this House, if need be, to prevent it from being singled out and stricken down at the height of its usefulness. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Campbell of Kansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7034. An act to incorporate the International Sunday School Association of America.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BURLESON. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINE].

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Chairman, contemplated legislation for the government of the District of Columbia has frequently, in one form or another, caused heated discussions on the floor of this Many pieces of this character of legislation are looked upon with suspicion when presented here. The District of Columbia government is peculiar and exceptional to itself. is no municipality or municipal district in the country that has adopted and maintained the form of government which now prevails in the District under the authority of Congress. In other municipalities throughout the country the lawmaking power is in councils or boards of aldermen elected by the people, and the executive powers are vested in the mayor of the city, also elected by the people.

All laws and legislation regulating the government of the city of Washington and the District of Columbia are enacted by Congress, and the government is administered by a board of three Commissioners appointed by the President of the United States.

Since the present form of government was established by Congressional action the city and District have made phenomenal progress and advancement. The boundaries of the city have been extended beyond the wildest anticipations, its public buildings and private edifices are of a character and magnitude of which any city must feel proud, and its beauty, its cosmopolitan characteristics, and attractiveness are constantly attracting the people from all parts of the United States-yea, of the whole

Another has said: Sixty years ago the city of Washington was the very modest capital of an inspiring Republic. To-day she is the fair capital of a great Republic; and sixty years from now the city of Washington will be the most ornate and the most beautiful capital of the greatest and most powerful nation of the world; it has a good start toward becoming the Paris of America.

The city is already metropolitan. Every citizen in this vast country claims it as his own, and, therefore, however distant we may be removed from her boundaries, however humble our station in life may be, and however much we may be devoted to the interest of our homes and constituencies, we all are attached and interested in the advancement, thrift, splendor, and greatness of this most beautiful capital of a nation to become the greatest and most powerful nation in the world.

Its wealth, importance, progress, and greatness may be exemplified by a few statistics. The total assessed valuation of Washington City on July 1, 1906, was fixed at $189,728,863, and of Washington County on said date, outside of the city limits, was fixed at $49,733,122; and the total assessed valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year of 1906 is $239,461,985. The total real estate taxes for the year 1906 are $3,591,929.78.

The assessed value of personal property in the District of Columbia for taxation purposes in 1877 was $15,429,873, and in 1906 it was estimated to be $27,000,000. In 1871 the valuation of real estate in the District for taxation purposes was $79,997, 454, and in 1906 it was assessed, as before stated, at $239,461,985.

Although it is the smallest political subdivision in the Union, the District of Columbia outranks twenty-five States and Territories in point of wealth. The wealth of the District in 1904 was $1,040,383,173, compared with $928,739,773 in 1900, an increase in four years of over $111,000,000, or a little over 12 per

The wealth of the District exceeds that of the following States and Territories: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Delaware, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, North Dakota, South Dakota, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, and Oregon.

It is nearly five times as great as the wealth of Nevada; three times the wealth of Wyoming, each of which has two Senators and one Representative; it is three times the wealth of Vermont or Idaho, twice that of New Hampshire or South Carolina, and two and one-half times as great as Florida or Utah. And the wealth of Georgia, Vermont, Tennessee, Colorado, Washington, and Louisiana are all in the same class.

In 1880 the population of the city of Washington was 177,624, and in 1890 it had increased to 230,382. In 1900 it had a population of 278,718, and to-day it is estimated to exceed 310,000 people. The aggregate of taxes, interest, and penalties collected for the year ending June 30, 1906, were $6,124,593.74, and, strange to say, in the administration of this Government in the District of Columbia, rich and populous and with diversified interests, the citizens and the inhabitants of the District have no voice, power, or authority in legislative matters

Has it ever occurred to you that it was of the highest importance that the people of the District of Columbia should have a Delegate or Delegates on the floor of this House to protect the interests of the District of Columbia and to advise and deliberate on District affairs with the Members of the House of Representatives, representing constituencies in the country at large?

With this in mind, that the people of the District of Columbia for a proper protection of their interests ought to have a Representative in Congress, I introduced during the early session of this Congress a bill (H. R. 20529) providing for the election of two Delegates in the District of Columbia, to represent the District in Congress, with power to debate, and vote on all questions and legislation affecting the District of Columbia, and that they be made members of the House District of Columbia

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. KLINE. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman why he recommends in his bill two Delegates from the District, when in fact it is the same as the Territories and much less in proportion than many of the districts of the country. My own district has over 400,000 people in it, and they have but one Representative in Congress.

Mr. KLINE. The reason is because the population or the approximate population of the District of Columbia is almost equivalent to two ratios. That is the reason why I selected two, but I will be satisfied with one if this bill can be passed.

Mr. GOULDEN. I wondered what your reasons were.
Mr. KLINE. It should have, at least, the same character of representation in the Federal Congress that is and has been for many years accorded to our Territories, and which the possessions of Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Alaska are now enjoying.

The Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress the exclusive legislative control in all cases whatsoever over the District of Columbia, but does not allow the inhabitants any vote for Presidential electors and other officers

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit another interruption? Do I understand you would give that Delegate, or Delegates, a full measure of representation, with a vote and voice upon the floor, or simply that of a Delegate representing

Mr. KLINE. The bill itself provides that such Delegates shall only have the right to vote and debate on questions in which the District of Columbia is interested, and have no right to debate or vote upon other questions of legislation.

Mr. KEIFER. You could not give this Delegate the right to participate as a Representative under the Constitution, could

Mr. KLINE. I think Congress could grant that power. Mr. GOULDEN. I am afraid not. I think it would be a violation of the Constitution.

Mr. KLINE. I am not prepared at this time to answer this constitutional question. Upon reflection it may be that the gentlemen are correct in their contention.

By an act of Congress approved February 21, 1871, all the territory included within the limits of the District was erected into a government by the name of the District of Columbia, which became constituted by said act a body corporate, with the usual powers for municipal purposes. Said act abolished the old and established a new form of government for the District, and provided for a Territorial form of government, with governor, legislature, and a Delegate to Congress.

Previous to the act of 1871 the legislative power had been exercised directly by Congress, in which, however, the people had no representation, but upon the establishment of a torial form of government by that act, the right of electing a Delegate to Congress with the same privileges as Delegates of other Territories was granted.

Early in June, 1874, Congress passed an act abolishing the form of government intended to be established by the act of 1871, and to replace the old order, temporarily providing a government by three Commissioners, and made provision for the preparation of a permanent form of government; and in June, 1878, an act was passed which lodged the affairs of the District in the hands of a board of three Commissioners—two civilians appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and an engineer officer detailed from the Army. All the numerous sub-ordinates are appointed by the Commissioners. The affairs of the District are now managed and governed, and for twenty-seven years have been managed and governed, by the provisions and directions of the act of 1878.

Congress, under said act, pays half the taxes and the sal-aries of all officers appointed by the President, and all others are paid by the District of Columbia.

It is or may be generally admitted that for the District of Columbia (if self and popular government is to be denied them) the present form of government is as good and satisfactory as can be secured by human minds; but, on the contrary, I also believe that there are many good citizens who likewise believe and contend that for apparent reasons and for the benefit of the District it should have representation in the House of Representatives.

Representation as contemplated by said bill would certainly be conducive to a great amount of good, as well as aid to the District of Columbia Committee in the House, and Members of the House of Representatives, when District legislation is under consideration.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit another interruption?

Mr. KLINE. Certainly.
Mr. GOULDEN. What has your observation taught you as to the conduct of the government of the District of Columbia since this reorganization as compared with that when they had direct representation and had the right to vote and the right to govern themselves?

Mr. KLINE. I find that the progress of the District has been phenomenal, and it has and had a good government, but I believe that the people of the District of Columbia, like the States and the Territories, should have representation.

Mr. GOULDEN. I agree with you in the main on that propo-

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he found in the investigation of this subject any particular desire on the part of the citizens of the city of Washington themselves to have this representation that the gentleman's bill calls

Mr. KLINE. I have. I am in receipt of numerous letters, memorials, and communications, and I am told the citizens have held meetings in the city of Washington indorsing this measure and the provisions of this bill. My judgment is that the subject should be referred to a vote of the people of the District of Columbia for adjustment, whether or not they desire representation in Congress and self-government.

Before preparing this bill I did not consult with anyone interested in the administration of the affairs of the District of Columbia; I did not obtain the advice or encouragement of any Member of Congress, nor did I then have in mind many of the potent and cogent reasons why such legislation should be enacted which have since been brought to my mind and attention. It was simply my own conviction, actuated by personal experience acquired during my brief membership as a member of the District Committee.

I may have no adherents in this thought and may be unable to convince anyone of the soundness and propriety of such legislation and proposed invasion of existing conditions and methods of procedure. I know, however, that there are some Members on the floor of the House who have advocated and would support proper measures that would give the District a system of self-government, and I also have become cognizant that many good, reputable, and influential citizens in the District are seriously and earnestly in favor of legislation such as I have proposed, or on lines of a similar import. I have, therefore, without any pretense of eloquence, rhetoric, or felicity of diction, but in a plain and simple manner, attempted to give my individual reasons for the introduction of said bill and why it should be enacted into law.

It seems to me that such a proposition is clearly just and proper and reasonable and that argument should not be necessary to convince the legislator of the propriety of such legislation. We all recognize that those vested with power and authority are jealous of their rights and jurisdiction and frequently resent and discourage a disturbance of the same, and therefore it may be that those in authority may not even permit a fair and unbiased consideration of the subject. The District Commissioners, who are vitally and materially interested in such legislation, have reported against the bill. I am not actuated by any selfish motives. It is not a sectional question with those who may be called upon to solve and determine the same; it is only a subject which intends to be fair and just to a people who assist in bearing the burdens of the Government, who now and hitherto have had no voice or representation in the conduct and management of their own municipal and local affairs.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit another question? The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the Commissioners have reported adversely to the bill.

Mr. KLINE. They have.

Mr. GOULDEN. May I be allowed to ask if there have been hearings upon the matter and a full discussion had before the committee?

Mr. KLINE. The subject has not been formally presented to The committee had other business, which enthe committee. gaged its attention in the past, and it has had no time to investigate and consider this bill, except the matter was referred to the District Commissioners, and they reported against it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Without a hearing?

Mr. KLINE. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Do you consider it fair that the Commissioners should have decided so important a matter to the people of the District without giving them an opportunity to be heard on the subject?

Mr. KLINE. No; I do not.

Our national independence was achieved on the issue of "no taxation without representation;" and if it be true that this Government is a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," it is difficult to understand why the 350,000 citizens now living in the District, or that may hereafter establish their residence here, and its increased population, should be deprived of all voice and representation in their Government. If they were not taxed and in other respects not required to support and defend the Government, then I could see some reason why they should not be represented; but such is not the As citizens, the people of the District of Columbia are subjected to the same burdens as other citizens, and they have performed their whole duty as fully, freely, and patriotically as those of any other part of the country.

The people of the District have from the foundation of the Government contributed their full proportion for its support, both in peace and war. In the war with Spain the District furnished twice as many volunteers, in proportion to population, as any State in the Union. It contributes by taxation one-half of the cost of its local government. It contributes to the payment of internal-revenue tax an enormous item in aid of the payment of the expenses of our Government, and I am told that in 1891 the District paid over four times per capita as much as fifteen States and five Territories, including Alaska, and paid in nearly that proportion ever since. With all these burdens and contributions it is denied representation. It is the only place in these United States where citizens have no voice in the selection of the men designated to rule them or in the disposition of the taxes they are compelled to pay.

By making a search into our early history it is made ap-parent that it was never contemplated by the founders of our Government that the citizens of the District should become or be made political nonentities. It was never their intention that the inhabitants of the District of Columbia should be deprived of all voice in their own government.

Before the adoption of the Constitution Madison made the statement in the Federalist that "a municipal legislature for local purposes, derived from their own suffrages, will of course be allowed them." It was apparently the idea and expecta-tion of the legislators in early years that the people of the District should have representation, as is shown by the following from the debates in Congress in 1803. Mr. Hughes, of South Carolina, speaking of the District, said: "He looked forward to the period when the inhabitants, from their number and riches, would be entitled to a representative on this floor. And with respect to their local concerns, when they grow more numerous and wealthy there would be no difficulty in giving them a Territorial legislature." And Mr. Randolph, speaking on this subject, said: "Domestic slavery is of all others the most oppressive, and political slavery, which has been well defined to be that state in which any community is divested of the power of self-government and regulated by law to which its assent is not required and may not be given. This species government is an experiment how far freemen can be reconciled to live without rights, an experiment dangerous to the liberties of these States."

In the Forty-first Congress, page 645, Hon. Samuel J. Randall, from Pennsylvania, an honored member of this body for more than a score of years and one of its illustrious Speakers, said: "I am inclined to believe, judging from the rules of common sense, that this is correct, especially in view of the citation from Judge Story, which clearly establishes the right of Congress to delegate the legislative power in reference to this District. * * * Nothing can be feared, in my judgment, from delegating this power to the people."

I think I am correct in saying that every national capital of Europe has its own local government, and London has half as many members in Parliament as it has in its council.

Abraham Lincoln said: "Allow all the governed an equal voice in the government; that, and that only, is self-government;" and Representative Cox, of Ohio, once said: "The citizens of Washington have an inalienable right to the freest, the most popular form of municipal government. to give them less will be to be false to the most fundamental principles of American liberty.'

If the proposed bill should be passed the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress over the District would remain exactly the same as it is now. The only effect would be to give the citizens of the District of Columbia a voice in the District government, the same as other citizens, through their respective Representatives. Ought not the people in the District have the same privilege? If not, why not?

Years ago, when the population was small and its interests were limited and not much diversified, the importance and necessity for representation was not so apparent. But to-day, with its wealth, interests, and population exceeding and surpassing many of the States of the Union, I see many obvious reasons why her people should have representation in Congress. population of the District is within a small fraction sufficient to entitle them to two Representatives in the House. It is greater than a dozen of our States, and the amount of taxes paid is larger than is raised by some of the States for State purposes, and yet those States have two Senators and a Representative, and several two Representatives.

Whilst every member of the House District of Columbia Committee is and has been performing the duty assigned to him with fidelity and ability, with the information at hand of the importance and necessity of the character of legislation presented, yet no one will pretend that any member of the committee is as efficient and as well equipped to engage in this work as if he were a resident of the District. We are all acquainted or expect to be acquainted with the legislation needed by our immediate constituencies; we have a personal interest in such legislation, and we make every reasonable effort to secure that in which our several constituencies are interested. If we did not there would soon be a rebellion at home, and the home papers would be filled with columns of censure, reprimand, and criticism, with an invitation to retire from public life and make room for a more worthy successor.

Living hundreds and thousands of miles away from the District and seat to which legislation enacted is to apply, it is not human or reasonable to think that as much attention, study, and consideration would be given to such legislation as to that which affects our several constituencies or the entire country.

The District Committee is composed of eighteen members, none of whom resides more contiguously to the District than the Philadelphia member, who lives distant 140 miles, and all the other members live in remote communities in all parts of the country, east of the Missouri River. It can not be said that any of said members are as intimately acquainted with the topography, highways, business interests, trade, inhabitants, and the needs of the District as those who live in the District, and fitted to be or become a Delegate in the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia. We are all interested in making Washington the most beautiful, most attractive, and best-governed capital city in the world.

We all must acknowledge that subjects have been under consideration in committee and this House when there was an absence of proper information, and no one present to furnish the requisite facts in order to legislate intelligently.

True, the privilege is granted to receive information from the District Commissioners, or call witnesses or parties interested, but by such facilities the knowledge is not obtained that could be acquired by and from Delegates representing the District of Columbia, who would, by the bill introduced, secure membership in the District of Columbia Committee and the right of debate on the floor of this House, and thereby enlighten its membership on subjects wherewith they may have no fa-

My judgment is that this bill, or one of similar import, should pass, and if enacted into law it would be beneficial to the progressive and healthy interests of the District and its inhabitants, as well as a great aid to secure prompt, intelligent, and needed legislation for the government of the District of Columbia. Mr. HUNT. Have I permission to interrogate the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. GOULDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri the time he desires.

Mr. HUNT. I would like to know if in the course of your remarks you referred to the fact there was at one time a form of self-government conferred upon the District?

Mr. KLINE. I did

Mr. HUNT. To what circumstances do you attribute its discontinuance or the present mode of government in the District? Mr. KLINE. I referred to it in my remarks. When the form of government was changed-

Mr. HUNT. And the reason for it?
Mr. KLINE. I do not think I assigned any reasons for it, but as a fact the government was changed in 1871 and thus continued until 1874, and in 1878 a bill was passed by which the government of the District was vested in the hands of three Commissioners appointed by the President. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reference to a matter of considerable importance to my district, the Eighteenth New York, but before doing so I wish to state that I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINE] regarding local self-government of the District of Columbia. I heartily indorse what he has so ably and so eloquently said upon that subject, and I hope that the District Committee may find time at an early date to take up this Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in so eloquently said upon that subject, and I nope that the District Committee may find time at an early date to take up this important question and give to the people of the District of Columbia that to which, in my judgment, they are entitled, namely, self-government. [Applause.]

The bill under discussion appropriating so large a sum for the District of Columbia is of importance to the nation. The difficulty seems to be to make the revenues of the Government equal the demands made on Congress by the people. It requires the greatest care on the part of the various committees of this House and of the Senate to accomplish this desirable and necessary result, to save the credit of the country

In the last session a bill was brought in from the Committee Public Buildings and Grounds appropriating some sixteen millions for the use of post-offices, courts, and other necessary Government buildings throughout the country.

The Borough of the Bronx, with its population of 350,000, all in my district, needs a public building, especially for the proper handling of its mails. While the borough is a part of the old city of New York, it lies from 10 to 15 miles from the general post-office of that city. Its growth has been phenomenal. In 1890 the population was 85,000; in 1900 the population (United States census) was 200,507; in 1905 the population (State census) was 272,000; in 1907 the population (police census) was 350,000; estimated in 1910 the population will be 500,000.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York permit an interruption?

Mr. GOULDEN. Certainly. Mr. HUNT. To what influences is this great increase due, and what was the population of the whole district in 1900, at the time of the apportionment?

Mr. GOULDEN. Answering the last part of the gentleman's query first, I would say that the population in 1900, in round figures, was 240,000. The rapid increase since then is due to the improved transit facilities, the opening, regulating, grading, and paving of many miles of streets, the building of sewers, beautifying the 4,000 acres of magnificent public parks, the healthfulness and beauty of this section; to the fact, largely, that we have had a splendid local government, presided over by that able and distinguished citizen, the Hon. Louis F. Haffen, the borough president; and last, but not least, that the people are a public-spirited body of citizens, second to none in the country. Applause.]

I desire to say that this does not include all of the Eighteenth district. We have a population of 50,000 south of the Harlem River on the island of Manhattan and in the borough of the same name, which belongs to and is a part of my district.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Have you a branch office there now?
Mr. GOULDEN. We have no branch office—simply substations. Mr. Chairman, I shall later ask unanimous consent to include a letter from the postmaster of New York City, with the full statistics accompanying it, regarding this particular section of the great and growing city of New York.

Now, Mr. Chairman

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the gentleman just one more question?

Mr. GOULDEN. Certainly. Mr. SHEPPARD. I want to say, as a member of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, that the gentleman from New York has been most tireless in presenting the claims of the Bronx post-office building to the committee, as well as to its individual members.

Mr. GOULDEN. I thank the gentleman from Texas, who, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, knows whereof he speaks, and I hope I will always have his active support in that committee in this needed appropriation for the Borough of the Bronx.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman certainly did have my support, and he shall continue to have it in the future.

Mr. GOULDEN. I heartily thank the gentleman from Texas in behalf of my district.

It is now the eleventh city in the Union. Its assessed valuation of real estate for taxable purposes is over $400,000,000. The new buildings erected in 1906 approximated $30,000,000.

This great and growing borough, one of the five great subdivisions of the city of New York, demands a public building, espe-commission consisting of the Postmaster-General, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, Senator Scott, and of the House of Representatives Congressman Bartholdt, were named at the close of the last session of Congress as a commission to investigate the postal facilities of Manhattan and the Bronx, with the view of recommending the necessary action to give the required relief.

This committee are expected to visit the boroughs named and investigate the whole subject and report to the Sixtieth Cou-gress in December next.

I desire permission to include in my remarks on this subject a letter and statistics from Postmaster William R. Willcox, of New York City, one of the ablest and most efficient officials in the Government service, given at my request last month.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter and data referred to are as follows:

Office of the Postmaster, New York, N. Y., December 29, 1906.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
New York, N. Y., December 29, 1996.

Hon. J. A. Goulden,
180 Broadway, New York.

My Dear Congressman: I am in receipt of your letter of December 27, in which you express to me the conclusion that the Bronx Borough has outgrown its postal facilities, and that you are desirous of ascertaining what recommendations have been made and what our views are concerning the service in that particular part of the city.

The matter of postal facilities for the Bronx has been carefully studied by me since I have been in office, and I have from time to time made various recommendations concerning increased accommodations for that part of the city, many of which are still before the Department, not having been acted upon. It is true that the Department during the past year has, at my solicitation, provided two additional postal stations in this section and furnished an additional force of carriers for duty there, all of which has helped matters considerably; but nevertheless there is still much room for further improvement, and I have no hesitation in saying that the demands for better service are within reason and entirely just, considering the enormous interests involved. A very large portion of the Bronx has reached a point when it must be considered as equally important in every way as that part of the city locally known as Manhattan Island, and the problem must be reckoned with accordingly. A review of certain thoroughly reliable statistics will prove the correctness of the above assertion and show you that this office fully appreciates the marvelous growth of the Bronx in population, in buildings, and in assessed valuation:

Total areaacr	es	27.	000
Population:
1890			085
1900		200,
1904		295,
1905		335,	000
1906		360,	000
Assessed valuation:
1890	$44,
1900	146.	508.	491
1904	275,
1905	291.	533.	218
1906	405,	497.	493

1906 494 buildings, at a cost of $6,503,979.

In 1904, 944 buildings, at a cost of $16,172,200, and in 1905, 2,214 buildings, at a cost of $37,500,445. The new buildings erected in 1906 will represent a value of at least $40,000,000, chiefly for homes for that great class of the population who find the cost of living in Manhattan Borough too burdensome to carry. Thousands of this class are flocking into the city from all over the country, and the closest possible estimate shows an annual increase in population of 35,000 in the Bronx. It may be interesting to note that the total assessed valuation in that borough within the past ten years is greater than the combined valuation of the populous counties of Broome, Chenango, and Dutchess, in this State. The average cost of a building in the Bronx is $15,000, as compared with $6,500 in Brooklyn and $4,000 in Queens. The Bronx has a population of between 350,000 and 400,000, and as a separate municipality it would rank about the eighth largest city in the United States.

My object in referring to the foregoing is not for the purpose of giving you information regarding the growth of your own borough, but more to assure you that this particular district, which is served from this office, has been made the subject of careful study. A further reason is that I wish you to thoroughly appreciate the difficulties experienced here in endeavoring to satisfy the constant and unquestionably reasonable demands for better postal service which are being made upon us. It needs no extensive argument to show that unless the postal service shall keep apace with the tremendous forward movement, it will require a vast expenditure at no distant date to place the service on an equal footing with other residential sections of the city.

I am sending you annexed to this letter a statement of the exact service now performed at the various stations throughout the city, and also a statement showing to what extent. I believe the service should be immediately improved. The cal

Three additional carriers for delivery and collection service on the regular Fox street district, where the last collection begins at 6.10 p. m., and letters mailed after that trip begins (6.10), due at Fox street station at 8.25 p. m., remain in boxes until the following morning, when they reach the station at 6.15 on the early collection made on the district. It will be noticed from the collection schedule that under present conditions letters deposited in certain boxes shortly after 7 a. m. do not reach the station until 12.50 p. m., and letters deposited in certain boxes shortly after 6.10 p. m. do not reach the station until 12.50 p. m., and the station until 6.15 the following morning.

The collections should be increased to eight daily, except on the Hunts Point section.

The advisability of transferring that portion of Tremont district, locally known as "West Farms," to the Fox street station is apparent. That section is now served by two carriers from the Tremont station, who should be transferred to Fox street station. It includes all that territory on the north side of Wilkins avenue to Crotona Park east to Southern boulevard, to One hundred and eighty-second street, to the Bronx River, to Long Island Sound.

The West Farms section receives three deliveries daily, beginning at 7.15 a.m., 11 a. m., and 3.30 p. m. An additional fourth delivery trip should be made, beginning about 5.15 p. m., and the other deliveries should be begin at 3.30 p. m. Five additional carriers. "Fordham" proper now enjoys four deliveries dr.lly, whereas that portion of the district known as "Bedford Park" has but three deliveries. The service in the latter section should be increased to the same standard as Fordham. The first delivery of mail on the Bedford Park section is not completed at the present time until 9.50 a. m., which results in frequent complaints and protests from residents. It is proposed to complete the first trip by 9.15. It is also recommended that an independent collection service be established on the entire Fordham district, with eight collections daily, the first beginning at 6 a. m. and the last at 8 p. m. Under present conditions letters deposited in certain boxes in the Bedford Park section shortly after 7.30 a. m. do not reach the station until 3 p. m., and they can not therefore be delivered in the lower part of the city until the first regular delivery on the following morning. Again, if the letters are deposited in certain boxes after 4.30 p. m., they can not reach the station until 6.30 a. m. following morning. During the past six months eighty-two two and three family houses have been erected and occupied, and at the present time eighty-seven two-family houses are in course of construction; six three-family houses and two apartment houses—one eight and the other sixteen families. At least twelve additional street letter boxes should also be erected at prominent points in that section.

It is further recommended that mails to and from the Fordham station be carried on the elevated railroad instead of on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad—Harlem division—as at present, with an hourly interchange of mails from Tremont station, T. Fox street, R

Four additional carriers for collection and deliveries.

The first delivery now made in the village of Westchester is not completed until 10.35 a. m. It is proposed to complete the trip at 10 o'clock. The last delivery begins at 4 p. m. and is completed at 5.05 p. m. It is proposed to make this trip at a later hour, 4.45 p. m. At present a very important mail arrives from Station L at 4.28, and, of course, can not be sent out until the following morning. By changing the hour of departure of last trip to 4.45 p. m., as suggested, it would assure delivery on same night of the mail received at 4.28.

Unionport, Van Nest, Bronxdale, and Morris Park sections have but two deliveries daily, one beginning at 7.35 a. m. and the other at 2.45 p. m. An additional trip should be made at 1.45 p. m. and the present 2.45 trip should be changed to 4.45. The advantages of this proposed change are that residents of the above-named sections would receive their first delivery is not completed until 10.55. The mails now reaching Westchester at 3.15 and 4.28 p. m. could both be delivered in these sections on the same night by carriers leaving station at 4.45 p. m. This would also permit of a later collection service over the same territories. At present carrier begins collecting on his last delivery trip at 2.45 p. m., whereas under the proposed schedule collections would begin at 4.45, when carriers would start out on their last delivery.

There have been thirty-five two-family houses erected and occupied in Westchester village during the past year, and ten similar structures will be ready for occupancy on or about January 1 next. In the Unionport, Van Nest, Bronxdale, and Morris Park sections a total of 341 two-family houses have been erected and occupied since January 1, 1906, and 65 similar structures will be ready by Ja

Mr. GOULDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, a perusal of the figures clearly establish the urgent necessity for immediate action on the part of the Post-Office Department and of Congress.

The complaints of inadequate and unsatisfactory service are

The complaints of inadequate and unsatisfactory service are very numerous and exceedingly embarrassing to Postmaster Willcox and to the Representative in Congress from that district. A new, centrally located building, with largely increased carrier and clerical force, is urgently demanded by the people. These facts are respectfully commended to the Postmaster-General and to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Country of Public Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the remarks submitted by me on yesterday, I desire the privilege of extending them in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. If there is no further time for general debate requested, I will ask that the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For assessor's office: For assessor, $3,500, and $500 additional as chairman of the excise and personal tax boards; two assistant assessors, at $2,000 each; two clerks, at $1,400 each; clerk, arrears division, $1,400; four clerks, at $1,200 each; draftsman, $1,200; four clerks, at $1,000; two clerks, at $900 each; license clerk, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each; inspector of licenses, $1,200; assistant inspector of licenses, $1,200; assistant inspector of licenses, $1,000; messenger, $600; three assistant assessors, at $3,000 each; clerk to board of assistant assessors, $1,500; messenger and driver, for board of assistant assessors, $600; temporary clerk hire, $500; in all, $43,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to find out if there has been any reduction in the force of the assessor's office in this bill as compared with the

Mr. GILLETT. No; there has not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has there been any increase?

Mr. GILLETT. No; it is exactly the same.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can the gentleman tell me how many taxpayers there are in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I can not say that offhand. Mr. JOHNSON. I have made a calculation here I have made a calculation here, and I find they have employed about eighty-odd men to assess the property and collect the taxes in the District of Columbia. And, with the gentleman's permission, I want to state now what I stated when a similar bill was last year before Congress, namely, that in the county in which I live there are 18,000 taxpayers, and one man assesses the property for all those taxpayers and makes up the books and turns them over to the county treas-Now, I wanted to find out, if it was possible, what these forty-odd men in the assessor's office were doing.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I remember the gen-Mr. GILLETT. tleman's inquiry of last year. I went personally and inquired as to the necessity of it. It has so happened that the person who was chief assessor last year has resigned meanwhile, and is a person whom I know personally and have great confidence I inquired if there was not an opportunity for a reduction of force without the Government service suffering, and he said that there was not, and he thought it was a hard-worked force and was essential for the proper performance of the duties of the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The typographical error on page 4, line 22—the word "assessor"—will be corrected by the Clerk to read "assessors." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to say to the gentleman that I have been very much impressed with the zealous efforts of this subcommittee in making up not only this bill, but the bill that preceded it, but it seems to me that we ought to have some information here about how many taxpayers there are and why it takes forty men to assess the property.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I can give the gentleman the exact duties which were performed by these different men. They were required to be reported to us, and they are here in the report of the hearings of this year, which the gentleman may possibly have found.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I have not.

Mr. GILLETT. They are on page 288 of the hearings.

I am sorry I overlooked it, because that is Mr. JOHNSON. some information I wanted to obtain.

It is the exact information the gentleman re-Mr. GILLETT. ferred to and was incited by his suggestion of last year.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the amendment. I just wanted to know what these people were doing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I want to find out from the gentleman in charge of this bill what the excise board does. Are they the people who grant the licenses to sell whisky and intoxicating liquors in the Dis-

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; they are to grant all kinds of licenses that are granted in the District.

Mr. JOHNSON. How many licenses are granted in the city of Washington each year?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I can not carry these figures in my head, and the gentleman would hardly expect me to do that. But we have them in the hearings of last year.

Mr. JOHNSON. I see that you have an excise board, a chief license clerk, and an assistant license clerk, etc.

Mr. GILLETT. No; there is one chief clerk and two other clerks.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not in that paragraph, but in another paragraph I find chief license clerk and assistant license clerk and all these other clerks. I withdraw the amendment. asked for information. That is what I am trying to get. I only

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment on page 9, lines 23 and 24, by striking out the words "seven hundred and twenty" and inserting in lieu thereof "nine hundred;" so as to make the paragraph read: "index clerk and typewriter, $900."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "seven hundred and enty" and insert in lieu thereof "nine hundred."

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this proposed increase, as I understand, was recommended by the District Commissioners, or at least by the superior officer of this index clerk. I am informed that it was made because in the judgment of those making it the amount of the work performed, as well as the excellent manner in which it has been performed, fully justify the small increase asked. There are those employed in this same building whose duties are no more onerous who are to-day drawing larger salaries. I also understand that there are a number of clerks in the District building who have entered the office long since this clerk did, and at less salaries, who are now drawing $1,000 a year. I happen to know, Mr. Chairman, that the lady who occupies this position, who has for years discharged its duties most faithfully and most conscientiously, and whose superiors believe is entitled to a promotion and increase of salary because of the amount and character of the work she performs, is the great-granddaughter of Francis Scott Key, the author of the Star-Spangled Banner. That fact should appeal to this House, I think. I ask, how-ever, that this increase be made, because in the first place it has been recommended by the department, recommended by the official who best knows what the duties of the position are and how well they are performed. It is a fact, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the work of this position has increased at least 40 per cent during the five years that this lady has occupied it, and yet she has never been given any promotion or increase of salary notwithstanding that the department has recommended it. The increase asked is very small-only $180 a year-and I trust that the gentleman in charge of this bill will not, under the circumstances, oppose so just and moderate a request. The case is, in my opinion, an exceptionally meritori-

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it is one of the unpleasant functions of the chairman of one of these subcommittees to be obliged to deny many requests he would be glad to grant. Of course many of us would like to give more money to the granddaughter of her grandfather; but, after all, that is hardly a ground upon which a Committee on Appropriations would be expected by the House to act. If we did, there is no knowing where this appropriation bill would end. We looked at this case upon its merits. There was, as stated, a recommendation for an increase by her superior, but there are many clerks in this bill whose salaries would be increased if we granted the recommendation of their superiors. We did not think from investigation that her duties entitled her to a raise of salary; and although a number of Members spoke to us on the sentimental side of it, we did not think it our Cuty to yield to that; and, therefore, acting as we supposed the House would expect and wish us to, we declined to increase the amount. I trust the amendment will not succeed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 18.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill regarding some things which appear in this quite lengthy paragraph and which have been read several times. In quite a number of instances there are repetitions of the same thing. To call the gentleman's attention specifically to one item only, as an illustration of a good many others, I see that rodmen, for instance, are repeated a great many times in the paragraph and in different places of the bill. I should like to know why it is that these different employees are not included together in one bunch instead of being divided up into divisions and repeated so many times in the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the same inquiry suggested itself to me when I first had to do with the bill, and there are two reasons for it. One is that there are different branches of the service which employ rodmen, and those are kept distinct. Another reason is that we are anxious to keep track, as far as possible, of additions that are made from year to year, so that we can compare the growth of the service. For that reason, instead of adding them, or instead of saying five rodmen instead of four, we put the additional man on at the foot of the section, in order to show that it was an addition to the previous year. These two reasons actuated the committee and always have, and although I will admit that it makes a clumsy and bungling section, yet for the advantage of the service and ease of reference to its growth, it has been thought better to keep them in that way.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be easier to keep track of these increases if they were all put in one paragraph or one line, or one bunch, if you want to call it that, instead of putting them in different places in the same paragraph?

It seems to me it would be much easier to know whether there had been changes included in the bill more than in preceding bills, if we simply increased the number. It would be easier to compare with former legislation, than it would be by doing it as it is done here, putting it on another page. seems to me also that the committee ought to state in their bill where they are classified, as the gentleman says they are, on account of different departments, just what departments the particular men are engaged or employed in.

Mr. GILLETT. I think myself that would be wise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that appears from reading the paragraph.

Mr. GILLETT. I think if the gentleman will study the bill (it does require some study) he will see that, for instance, on page 8

Mr. NORRIS. What line?

Mr. GILLETT. In line 14 there is an engineer of highways. Then under that come the rodmen who are employed in his

Mr. NORRIS. Are we to understand that the rodmen that come in with the engineer of highways as rodmen are in fact under the engineer of highways?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. Now, for instance, on page 9 there is a superintendent of sewers.

Mr. NORRIS. In what line? Mr. GILLETT. Line 13. Then below that there are three Those are in the sewer department. In fact, I think that explains all the repetitions in this paragraph. I think what I said about keeping track of additions does not apply to this paragraph. I think the reason they are repeated here is because there are different branches of the engineer's office highways, sewers, bridges—all of whom employ rodmen.
Mr. FITZGERALD. And streets.

Mr. NORRIS. If I am not mistaken, the words "inspector of sewers," or at least "assistant inspector of sewers," appear several times in this paragraph, do they not?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think so.
Mr. NORRIS. I was thinking I saw the words "inspector of sewers" on different pages.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think so. Now, on page 11 you will see some more rodmen.

Mr. NORRIS. Take the phrase "inspector of asphalt," on page 11, line 2.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. Does not that appear several times?

Mr. GILLETT. I think not

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is an inspector and an assistant inspector. The inspector is on page 9 and the assistant inspector on page 11.

That is where the difference comes in. The Mr. NORRIS. inspector is provided for on page 9 and the assistant inspector is not provided for until you get to page 11.

Mr. GILLETT. No. Mr. NORRIS. In between those provisions are a great many other things that have nothing to do with that subject. seems to me that the assistant inspector ought to follow the inspector if you expect us to understand that a rodman must always follow the chief who precedes him.

GILLETT. I think that is a fair suggestion, but of course it has grown up by the assistant inspector being added some years after the inspector. I do not see any reason why he should not have followed directly the inspector.

The Clerk read as follows:

Special assessment office: For special assessment clerk, $1,700; yen clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $900 each; and one clerk, seven clerks, at $1,20 $750; in all, $12,650.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I have read what the gentleman called my attention to relative to duties of the assessor's office. I had not had an opportunity to read all the evidence before the bill came up, but am glad the gentleman called this particular evidence to my attention. I want to say that I think the work ought to be definitely known. The excuse given for so many people being in this office is that they have many duties outside of that of assessing property. I think that in order that Congress may know what it is doing in appropriating this money the duties of this officer and his force should be more carefully designated.

That brings me to another question. We have here an as-sessor's office, we have an excise board, and we have a personal tax board. In addition to that the sundry civil bill carries appropriation for about eleven men who are engaged in some one of these departments. Now, on page 12 we come to another assessing board, the "special assessment board." I want to find out what they do.

Mr. GILLETT. They have no connection, although the title would indicate that they have, with the assessor's office which the gentleman is speaking of. The special assessment board is for assessment of damages; when a man wants a sidewalk, for instance, changed the expense is assessed and the expense of changing the sidewalk or the cutting down of a street or improvements of that kind is assessed upon all the property benefited. This does not relate to taxes at all, and I think is not at all connected with the assessor's office.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am asking the gentleman for information. Do I understand that these clerks who are in the office—seven clerks at $1,200 each, two clerks at $900 each, and one clerk at $750—assess damages?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They compute the assessment levied on property for sewers, curbing, pavement, and the like.
Mr. JOHNSON. But who makes the assessment—who does the assessing? Evidently the clerks do not do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; they do do it. Where property owners petition for a new paving, or where there are to be sewers laid, the cost of that is estimated by the engineer's office, and that cost is distributed over a certain area. These clerks, according to fixed rules, estimate the amount of each particular piece of property within that area, and it is assessed for that portion of the cost of the work.

Mr. JOHNSON. The engineer does the work in the field?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is all office work.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to know who goes out and does the work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trouble is not with the committee that reports this bill. This committee merely reports appropriation for service of men who are provided for in the general laws and the title to these offices are fixed in the bills passed as general legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand that. I am not complaining about this committee; I am trying to find out what these people

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is as accurate a statement as can be made; that they compute the proportionate share of the assessment of work of that character-paving, sewers, curbing, and the like-on each piece of property within a particular area.

Mr. JOHNSON. The property only contributes a part of the expenses, does it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In some instances, and in some instances

Mr. JOHNSON. These calculations are made by the engineer, and what you call in this bill the "special board" does the

Mr. FITZGERALD. The engineer's office estimates the cost of the work, and this office distributes that cost in the form of assessment on the different pieces of property included in that

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor's office: For surveyor, $3,000; assistant surveyor, $1,800; clerk, $1,500; two assistant engineers, at $1,500 each; computer, $1,200; record clerk, $1,050; inspector, $975; draftsman, $975; clerk, $975; draftsman, $900; assistant computer, $25; two rodmen, at $25 each; three chainmen, at $700 each; two chainmen, at $650 each; clerk, $675; charwoman, $104; in all, $22,029.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was impressed somewhat by some of the criticisms made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Johnson] in relation to the apparent distribution of officials provided for in a sort of promiscuous manner through this bill. It would seem to me now that the surveyor's office could properly and economically be combined with the engineer's office. Without knowing the reasons for it, I am impressed with the notion that we have too many offices. Each officer, the head of each municipal subdivision, must be supplied with his staff of clerks and his Each officer, the head of each municipal messengers and his charwomen. The engineer's office is provided with clerks, chief clerks, draftsmen, rodmen, and chainmen, and the surveyor's office is provided with its messengers and its draftsmen and its rodmen and its chainmen, and the probability is that these chainmen and rodmen and draftsmen may not be engaged all the time. If there be not work enough in the engineer's office for the force there, they will probably be idle, and if there be not work enough in this surveyor's office for the force provided for that office, they may be idle part of the time. It has seemed to me that the draftsmen could do the work for both offices indiscriminately, and the rodmen and the chainmen and the messengers might do the same thing, and they might logically be included in the same office, under the same general control. It occurs to me that expense might be saved by doing it. It may be that I do not understand the situation." It may be that they are all included in the same office and under the same general control and management now. If they are, the surveyor's work or the en-gineering work may be done by the detailing of rodmen or chainmen from the general force promiscuously under the engineer or the surveyor, as the case may be. The service of the chainmen or the rodmen, whether working for the engineer or the surveyor, in the popular understanding of this term, is just the same; there is no difference; but I have wondered why these officers are provided for in this separate manner. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts who has charge of the bill if it is practicable to combine them and possibly save something, or if they are already combined?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the principle which the gentleman enunciates, but of course the gentleman will understand that it is beyond the power of this committee to make the change he suggests, and therefore we have never considered it, because this surveyor's office is a statutory office and we can not change it. Perhaps I should stop there, inasmuch as we have no jurisdiction. But there is also this distinction: Whatever general principle would apply in this particular case I do not know, because, as I say, it is not our function or province, and we have not therefore considered it; but there is this distinction between the engineer's and the surveyor's office, that in the surveyor's office all the work is paid by fees and reverts back into the Treasury, because private parties are the ones for whom the work is done, whereas, of course, in the engineer's office it does not. That makes quite a distinction between the two offices, but whether that is sufficient to justify it I do not know. It is a special statutory office and we can not therefore combine them.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If, therefore, there should not be revenue enough from the fees to pay the officers in the surveyor's office, of course they would have to be paid out of the public

Certainly; we pay them first.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a resource of the city, and the Government appropriates and pays absolutely these assistants.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I wondered if a provision could not be incorporated in the bill to appropriate for the rodmen for the engineer's office alone, enough to do the work for the two, and draftsmen and chainmen, and provide that they shall also be subject to detail to do work in the surveyor's office as well as the engineer's office whenever it may be necessary. It seems to me that it is very unbusinesslike to cut up the work in this fashion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe that it would be possible to provide for a certain number of messengers and have them detailed in the House and in the Senate as the service would require?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My judgment is that these two offices should be combined into one and occupy the same quarters and have the same general messengers that may be detailed for any division or for service in any division in the general office, and the chainmen and the rodmen and the draftsmen subject to the same kind of service and detail; but if there are independent establishments, if they are separated—and that is the criticism that I make, that it is unnecessarily expensive to have the business conducted in that way, that it would be much more economical and businesslike for the two offices to be combined into one, so that one set of messengers, with perhaps a few additions, and one set of draftsmen, with probably one or two more than one office has now, and one set of chainmen, and one set of rodmen might do the work for both branches.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fact is that chainmen and rodmen in all of these offices have all of the work they can possibly These divisions into these different offices are simply for the purpose of facilitating the work and of keeping better track of it. It would be utterly impossible for one man to supervise all of this work, and it is divided according to its nature into separate bureaus.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Bureaus of engineering work.

Mr. GILLETT. There is one other suggestion I would make to the gentleman. This is not our province, but belongs to the District of Columbia Committee, but I will say this: This surveyor is a bonded officer, and he is responsible for any mistakes of the subordinates. He recently had to pay quite a large sum for one, and therefore he would claim that he would want his own subordinates and absolute control over them if he is responsible for their mistakes. It seems to me, in this particular case, it would be a good answer, although we can not do it anyway.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not see any reason why the surveyor should be responsible for the mistakes of his subalterns and the engineer not.

Mr. GILLETT. That is the way the law makes it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The difficulty doubtless is in the law, but I do not believe any business man charged with conducting the affairs of a city on business principles would have the work segregated or divided up in any such fashion as this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. I think this work naturally must be divided into those different divisions. For instance, the sewer department requires an engineering force, which is constantly engaged in planning sewers and fixing grades for sewers. Another force is continually employed on the streets; another force in connection with bridges; and these forces do their work much more efficiently by being confined continuously to the particular character of work than if they were continuously shifted from one branch to another.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I agree with the gentleman in that respect, but in my opinion it would be better to put this whole business into the engineering department, and where messengers, draftsmen, chainmen, and rodmen are provided for they may do work under either branch of the service, but they may be provided for generally for the department, but the department may have its divisions and have men who are peculiarly suited or adapted to the work along particular lines, just the same as Departments of the Government have one general control, and save in expenses in the line of messengers, draftsmen, chainmen, rodmen, etc.
Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman would not save anything. For instance, the engineer office has a great many divi-It has a sewer department, it has a bridge department, it has a street department, it has a county-road department, all under a commissioner.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, ought not the surveyor's work to be a department in the engineer's division?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not necessarily.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is a branch of engineering and it involves a good deal of the same kind of work the engineer has do in other branches of municipal activity. is that the surveyor's office ought to be a department in the engineer bureau of municipal administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That question should be determined in the framing of the organic act of the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Free public library: For librarian, $3,000; assistant librarian, $1,200; children's librarian, $1,000; reference librarian, $1,000; assistant, $900; four assistants, at $720 each; four assistants, at $600 each; three assistants, at $540 each; copyist, $480; cataloguer, $900; cataloguer, $720; cataloguer, $600; three temporary cataloguers, $480; each stendants, at $480 each; colyenter, $720; one assistant, $480; five attendants, at $360 each; collator, $360; two messengers, at $360 each; ten pages, at $360 each; collator, $360; two messengers, at $360 each; ten pages, at $360 each; two janitors, at $480 each, one of whom shall act as a night watchman; engineer, $900; fireman, $720; workman, $480; two cloakroom attendants, at $360 each; six charwomen, at $180 each; in all, $33,280.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to this appropriation for the purchase of books. It seems to me that for the purchase of books for the public library of the city of Washington an appropriation of $7,500 is very small. Here is a library the expense of which is forty or fifty thousand dollars a year.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman will recognize this is an increase over the appropriations which have been made for a number of years. The appropriation was $5,000, and last year we raised it to $7,500, and we have continued the same this

Mr PERKINS. The entire expense of running the library is $50,000, is it not?

Mr. GILLETT. I can not tell you exactly. Oh, no; it is about $30,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I think not. The first appropriation is $33,000; then there is $1,700, and then there is a lot of other expenses, amounting altogether very close to $50,000, apart from books.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, yes; down below.
Mr. PERKINS. The entire appropriation is about $50,000, and 15 per cent for books seems a pretty small amount.

You mean including this? Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

The gentleman means the amount for books, Mr. GILLETT. in proportion to amount for running the library, is small?

Mr. PERKINS. Seven thousand five hundred dollars of an entire expense of $55,000 seems small.

Mr. GILLETT. They have got, of course, a large amount of Mr. GILLETT. They have got, of course, a large amount of books on hand. The running expenses, of course, should be compared with that and not with what we buy each year.

Mr. PERKINS. That is true. Is this sum regarded as satisfactory by the people in charge of the library?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I think the library would like very much more, and of course we should all like a great deal more. You have got to draw the line somewhere, however, and the question is where you will draw it. We drew it at $7,500.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman think that in a very rich city of 300,000 people, where the entire budget is-what is the entire budget for the city?

Mr. GILLETT. Ten millions of dollars. Mr. PERKINS. Ten millions of dollars. Ten millions of dollars. Does not the gentleman think that $7,500 for books is a very small amount?

Mr. GILLETT. I am inclined to think it is rather small, but, as I say, we have got to draw the line somewhere, and I think that is a reasonable amount. It is more than we gave for a number of years. The library is pretty well supplied with books, and it is very useful.

Mr. PERKINS. But out of this they have to buy the current magazines and papers, do they not?

Mr. GILLETT.

Yes.

That must take a very large part of it. Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. FERKINS.

Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. PERKINS.

Do they have all of the magazines?

Mr. GILLETT.

I do not know whether or not they buy all of the magazines.

But certainly it is a very small portion of it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we have, in addition to this, the Congressional Library, to which the public has access.

Mr. PERKINS. That is not a circulating library.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then we have, in addition to this, circulating libraries in the high schools, where the magazines can be obtained, or large numbers of them. We have, in addition to this, libraries in many of the Departments. when the gentleman limits it to $7,500 to a city of 300,000 it is hardly a fair statement.

Mr. PERKINS. But the libraries in the Departments are of no value to the public.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Only as those who read them are a part of the public.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but those are special libraries. It does seem to me that a proper supply of books is quite as valuable as a proper supply of gas or electricity or other articles, and the amount allowed is a small sum on a very large budget.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much does the gentleman believe should be spent a year for books?

Mr. PERKINS. I am not familiar with the library, but I know enough to know that $7,500 does not go very far in buying books and magazines.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, they spent about $14,000 for that purpose last year. This appropriation is augmented by the use of what is known as "fine" money that has accumulated by charging for withholding books beyond a certain length of time, and this year there will be available, instead of $7,500, ten or twelve thousand dollars.

Mr. PERKINS. If the appropriation is $17,000 instead of $7,500, that is very much better.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not really that, but there is each year a sum in addition to the appropriation available for this use.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that an allowance for a great city like this of $15,000 for the purchase of books is certainly moderate. If from another source enough money is obtained to moderate. make it $15,000, that makes the appropriation better than it appears on the face of it. While I commend economy, I do not think the committee should be too economical in reference to furnishing profitable literature for the use of the citizens of the city.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I take it that the gentleman would be inclined to criticise the committee if it merely accepted the recommendations of those who have charge of the public library and appropriated all they asked.

Mr. PERKINS. That depends entirely upon whether the committee thought their recommendations were right. The recommendation may be a just one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, speaking for myself and the other members of the committee, the committee appropriated all that they thought advisable to appropriate under the particular circumstances at this particular time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the construction of fountains, lamp-posts, and other structures on the plaza in front of the new union railroad station, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $50,000, said sum to be expended under the provisions of existing law regarding the elimination of grade crossings and appropriations made therefor: Provided, That the total cost to the United States and the District of Columbia shall not exceed $100,000: And provided further, That the Washington Terminal Company, its successors or assigns, shall defray the cost of so much of these constructions as lie within the limits of its present property north of Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, who certainly exercised commendable prudence in reference to the purchase of books, how this $150,000 is to be expended. I see a large part of it is for fountains and lamp-posts. That sounds high on the face of it.

Mr. GILLETT. It is for the decoration of the new plaza to the Union Station. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is to be expended in all, part of it for putting up fountains, etc. It is a very large tract of land, consisting of a number of acres.

Mr. PERKINS. How is that $150,000 to be spent? What work is to be done?

Mr. GILLETT. We were shown the projected plans, although they have not yet been finally determined upon by the architects of the Union Station.

Mr. PERKINS. How much of it for fountains?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know.

How much for lamp-posts? Mr. PERKINS.

I can not tell—a small proportion. Of course Mr. GILLETT. the gentleman understands the plaza is a very large expanse of ground, and it has to be made ornamental and in keeping with the Union Station. We were told that $150,000 was necessary to put it in proper shape.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman think that is a pretty large expenditure for ornamenting the ground about a railroad station?

Mr. GILLETT. It did not strike us so.
Mr. PERKINS. I do not think I am quite educated up to the gentleman's views on that point,

Mr. GILLETT. It is part of a general plan. That is not new, but is part of the general project that has been in progress for years to complete a union station at the junction of the rail-

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Opening alleys and minor streets: For opening, widening, and extending alleys and minor streets in the District of Columbia, under the provisions of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, $50,000, to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and this sum, together with any balance of appropriations heretofore made for said purpose, shall be available for use in opening, widening, extending, and straightening alleys and minor streets under the provisions of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia; said appropriation to be reimbursed by payment of assessments for benefits to be made under the provisions of said Code; and the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized to employ, for such time as may be necessary, an assistant to the corporation counsel, at a compensation of $150 per month, payable from said appropriation, whose duty it shall be to institute and conduct proceedings for the condemnations necessary to be taken in opening, widening, extending, and straightening alleys and minor streets; and the clause contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act, approved June 27, 1906, requiring that the compensation of an assistant to the corporation counsel, provided for in the appropriation for opening alleys and minor streets, shall be included in the costs and expenses of the proceedings instituted for the condemnations necessary to be taken for the opening, widening, extending, and straightening alleys and minor streets and shall be assessed against lands benefited by reason of such opening, extension, widening, and straightening, as provided in section 1608 of said Code of Law, is hereby repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against this paragraph, which is new legislation. I do not know whether it ought to be made or not, but will ask the gentleman for an explanation of it.

Mr. GILLETT. I recognize that it is subject to the point of

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order or make the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON. I reserve the point of order. Mr. GILLETT. I think the gentleman on an explanation will withdraw his point or order, because this committee have not intended to put anything in the bill subject to a point of order which we did not think would meet the entire concurrence of the House. Besides this clause there are some minor matters, but they are all of too slight importance for a special bill and are for the advantage of good administration. This was put in for this reason. The law at present provides that the expenses of the assistant to the corporation counsel shall be assessed against the improvement. When the assessment is made his expenses go in as a part of the assessment. Then there is very apt to be an appeal from the decisions. If that is so there can be no further assessment for his expenses, and so there is nobody left to try the case. He would not get any compensation for trying it, for the assessment has already been made and can not be changed. Of course somebody ought to try it who knows about the facts, and there is nobody else whose function it is to do so; and the result is another person has to study the case up in the corporation counsel's office and argue the case on appeal. We did not see any method to obviate that if we still kept the law that the assistant should be paid out of the assessment. We concluded that the salary of $150 a month for work on opening streets and alleys, etc., really a public purpose, one that the city might very well be called upon to pay for its own advantage; and we concluded inasmuch as this difficulty had arisen out of the method in which the assistant corporation counsel was paid the best way was to repeal the law, and instead of assessing it, pay him $150 a month out of the city treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $121,400.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill upon what basis or theory these authorizations of im-

Mr. GILLETT. The recommendations were made to us by the Commissioners, of certain streets which needed improve-We personally went and inspected each street, and we made the appropriations according to what we thought were the relative merits of the different streets.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has it not been the custom heretofore to authorize the Commissioners to make a report as to these streets that, in their judgment, ought to be improved, and appropriations were then made, authorizing them to select those that they regarded as most essential from that list?

Mr. GILLETT. I think the gentleman is confusing the streets in the city, as it is called, that is within Florida avenue, and what are called the county roads. There used to be that distinction, although now there is no reason for it, because the territory beyond Florida avenue is just as much a part of the city in many directions as that inside. The old habit still continues, although the reason has ceased, of making a recommendation for the streets in the city in the way the gentleman suggests, by schedule, and making recommendations for those streets which we are now considering, the county roads, by name; and this committee, as I say, visited all the streets and passed upon them according to their merits.

amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs streets, avenues, and alleys: For current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys, including resurfacing and repairs to concrete pavements with the same or other not inferior material, $300,000; and this appropriation shall be available for repairing the pavements of street railways when necessary; the amounts thus expended shall be collected from such railroad company as provided by section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation for the fiscal year in which they are collected.

Mr. HEPBRIEN Mr. Chairman I move to amound time 15 on

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 15, on page 27, by striking out "three" and inserting "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 15, page 27, strike out "three" and insert "five;" so that it will read "five hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that there is any provision in this bill that affects more the comfort and convenience of the people of this city than this provision. There is no good reason that I know of why the streets of this city should not be in perfect condition, or as nearly perfect as it is possible for streets to be. Yet I think there is no one who will insist for a moment that they are in that condition. Very many of them are in a deplorable condition. It ought not to be so, and would not be so if appropriations were ample and if they were properly expended. You can scarcely find in this whole city, with its more than a hundred miles of paved streets, a continuous half mile that furnishes a proper and comfortable roadbed for a drive. The streets are out of repair. I do not know of one in the city, and I am familiar with a good many of them, that any competent judge would say was in a proper condition of repair. Whether it comes from the unduly rapid deterioration of the streets, growing out of the fact of improper material being used and improper inspection, the fact remains that the streets are not as they should be. Somebody is re-sponsible for it. This responsibility either rests upon those who should make ample appropriations, or it rests upon those who ought properly to use the appropriations that are made. One of the two must be the truth, because the proof of the condition of the streets is presented to the observation of every man who They ought to be better. rides over them.

Now, I am told by the gentleman who has this bill in charge that the committee have recommended the full estimate. that is true, then the responsibility rests upon the Commissioners of this city, and they are the ones who ought to be held up to public reprobation for the condition of the streets. one want to record my reprobation now against the condition of the streets. You can not find, even upon Pennsylvania avenue, the street that ought to be the most beautiful and perfect highway in the United States, or the world, a half dozen rods over which you can ride without dodging the chuck holes that are in it and ought not to be in it. What I say about that street is equally true with reference to almost every other street in this city. I would be glad if this House in some way or other would express its ideas upon this condition, and bring these gentlemen who are responsible to a realizing sense of the inefficient manner in which they discharge grave public duties.

Mr. Chairman, this condition can not exist from a want of funds. It may be that we do not collect enough, but there is within the limits of this city, subject to appraisement and taxa-tion, an ample aggregate of wealth to furnish abundant means to carry on every one of these improvements. That suggests, perhaps, the thought that in some way or other this possibility of raising ample funds is not properly utilized. I have heard I have heard complaints many and many a time of the undervaluation of the property of the people of the town for taxable purposes. property of the United States (if we may say that in the contribution of 50 per cent we are paying taxes on it) certainly pays its full share. But not so with the great bulk of property of private ownership. Some days ago I saw in one of the newspapers of this city a statement of recent sales of property. In some of them the sums for which the property was sold were given. I recognize the fact that probably that is not the most reliable way to ascertain values.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be Is there objection? extended ten minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I say, Mr. Chairman, that that is not the The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro formal most reliable possible source, perhaps, for information. I can conceive it possible that a real-estate man might somewhat exaggerate that which he had done in the line of his business. Real-estate men often have peculiar qualities. I am not sure but that there must be a marked departure from the equipment of the ordinary man in order to fit one for the higher ranks in this particular vocation. I have sometimes thought that the real-estate man must have an exuberant fancy, a robust imagination, and he must have his moral nature somewhat depleted of those qualities that would rank higher in church estimation. [Laughter.] He must have great activity, he must vocabulary of remarkable character, and must have great adjectival speech. He must also have a wonderful capacity for inexactitude in his statements. But, notwithstanding that, I have thought this matter of sufficient importance to make a list of those sales in which the price was given, and send that paper to the assessing force of this city and ask them to set opposite to each tract the assessments of that particular tract.

The assessor was exceedingly courteous to me. He has complied with my request, and I have here some statements. I do not care to name the salesmen; I do not care to name the persons that are named in this paper. But I find in what I have here as item No. 1 a particular piece of property said by those salesmen to have been sold for $315,000. The assessment on that property for 1905 and 1906 was $103,439, less than one-third of its alleged value.

Another piece said to have been sold for $350,000 was assessed at $94,000 and a fraction. Another piece said to have been sold at $190,000 was assessed at $67,000. said to have been sold at $275,000 was assessed at $75,000 and a fraction. Another, sold at $300,000, was assessed at $92,000. One, sold at $50,000, was assessed at $19,000. One sold at $45,000 was assessed at $26,000. Another, sold at $100,000, was assessed at nearly $30,000. And so the list goes on until you reach the less valuable property. I find one said to have been sold at $10,000 assessed at $11,846. Another, sold at $6,250, was assessed at $4,140. One sold at $6,375 was assessed at $4,270. One sold at $6,000 was assessed at $5,589. One sold at $10,000 was assessed at $5,589, and so on, showing that in the more valuable property, that which runs up into the hundred thousands, or approaching one hundred thousand, a wonderful discrepancy in the valuation at which it is said this property was sold and that fixed by the assessors of this District.

Now, it is right that I should say here that the assessor who has been so courteous to me says in many instances he believes the statement of sale is an exaggeration; that as matter of fact the property has not been sold for these sums. That is a question of veracity between these gentlemen, and, as I am not the arbiter, I have nothing to say about it.

I am using these statements on the supposition that reputable men, engaged in a reputable business in this city, would not in the mere attempt at braggadocio, or in the advertisement of their capacity to do business, mislead or make misstatements to the public in a newspaper in regard to the valuation that they must know would be contradicted by a superior knowledge, or an equal knowledge, that is possessed by a great many

And it is further right that I should say here, in justice to the assessors, that in the statement they make to me they show that in assessments that are now in process of making for the future there is a great increase in value; that in some instances the valuation that they have used, or are about to use, exceed by nearly 100 per cent that that was made by them for the years

Where there are these great discrepancies, discrepancies between the statement of sales and the assessments as given to us for the years last passed, there is room for doubt as to whether we have the best system here, and where there is such wonderful discrepancy between the assessments of last year and those of next year or this year there is further food for reflection.

Mr. Chairman, I want again to get back to the subject about which I began to speak. I do hope that this House will do something in the way of ameliorating the condition that we find existing here relative to these streets. It is not because we have not the money; certainly it is not because we might not have the money if proper assessments are made. Therefore I ask the House to vote this amendment, and to put into the hands of the proper authorities such a sum that they can not in future hide behind the claim of parsimony upon the part of Congress. Give them such sums as will enable them beyond all peradventure to do their duty. I ought to have said in my criticism that I have made with regard to these gentlemen that perhaps it is possible for them to say that they would have done better if they could, that the streets would have been repaired if they had the means, and that the comfort of the people of this city who have to use these streets might have been conserved if it had not been for an unwholesome desire on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to make an extraordinary record.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, with the greater part of what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] has said I have no controversy. I agree with him heartily that we ought to have a larger income from our taxes. I would go further than he. think we not only fail to get by assessment what we ought to have, but that our system of taxation is inadequate, and that real estate, at least, is not taxed nearly as much as it should be, compared with taxation in other cities. But that, of course, something that is not within the jurisdiction of this committee, and therefore is not anything with which we can deal

Coming to the point which the gentleman makes of increasing this appropriation from $300,000 to $500,000 for streets, I will not undertake to defend the streets of Washington or the expenditures in that line of the Commissioners, who have charge of them; but I think there can be no question that the gentleman has very much exaggerated their condition. He says there is not half a mile of good continuous pavement in the city.

I took occasion last spring, when I was first appointed on this committee, to go over nearly all the streets of the city, and there is many a stretch of half a mile of beautiful, practically perfect pavement. But I will agree with him that there are a great many stretches of wretched pavement which ought to be completed; and, by the way, Pennsylvania avenue, to which he refers, is to be half of it completed under the appropriation of this year and half of it under the appropriation of next year. So that is already provided for without any increase. Last year when this committee took up this question of streets we recognized the danger and the defects which the gentleman speaks of. Up to that time the largest sum which had ever been appropriated for streets was $200,000. We gave them last year $300,000, the full amount of their estimate, and this year again we have given them the full sum of $300,000, again the full sum for which they have asked.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. GILLETT. Yes.
Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman, when he makes reference to the estimate of the Commission, believe that that was the sum they ought to have had, in their judgment, or that that was the sum that they thought could possibly be corkscrewed from the committee?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, that is a matter of speculation. The gentleman can guess the intent of the Commissioners as well as I can. I can not speak as to that, but we did last year give them half as much again as they had ever been given by Con-gress before that, and we have given them this year the same full amount of $300,000. I believe that the amount of $300,000, which has been given this year, and $300,000, which we are giving next year, will go very far toward putting the streets in as good condition as we could reasonably demand; that that is an ample annual amount to keep them up; that if we had had in the past that sum they would not now be subject to the just criticism that has been made of them. We thought we were giving them an ample sum when we gave half as much more as ever had been given before, and it seems to me it is sufficient and proper, and I hope the amendment of the gentleman will not be adopted. Whether the Commissioners can economically spend as much as that I do not know. They have never suggested that they could use a larger sum than we appropriated last year and than they asked for this year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I can scarcely understand how it has been possible for the condition of things that has existed in this city to have been maintained under an economic and intelligent expenditure of so large a sum of money upon the streets of Washington. Year after year this complaint has been made, possibly not with the same emphasis that has been used by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Herburn]. Year after year we are assured that money enough is now being appropriated for the purpose of putting the streets in some sort of respectable condition, and yet year after year we find exactly the same condition of things, and, indeed, this year growing worse than last

Where the money goes to I am sure I do not know. That it is liberally appropriated the gentleman from Massachusetts says, and I have no doubt he is right about that, but what becomes of it? Where does it go? Now, you may start from the southeast front of the Capitol and pursue your way to Fourteenth street by any one of the streets, and you find exactly the same condition everywhere that is described by the gentleman from Iowa. How is this money expended? Does the Committee on District Expenditures here understand how that money is expended? Inspecting the streets is not going to do any good. I take it these Commissioners inspect the streets, but nothing comes of their inspection except the sad condition we have here now in the great streets of this city. The street upon which every visitor from our own country and every visitor from foreign countries travels and looks about him is a disgrace. common villages of the country-a village with five, six, eight, or ten thousand people-have better streets and sounder streets and safer streets than has the city of Washington.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the the gentleman from Wisconsin? Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Ohio is familiar with District matters, and I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Is there any committee of Congress in either House or any officer of the Government which audits any account of the District Commissioners or makes a specific re-

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I can not answer that question. I never have served on the District Committee of the I do not know of any place where any such reports

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it the gentleman's understanding of the situation that Congress makes appropriations of millions of dollars toward the government of this District, and that money is expended, and this expenditure is not audited by any committee of Congress or examined into or reported about to Congress's

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think I can safely say it is not audited by any committee of Congress. I imagine, as a matter of course, the subcommittee of the great Committee on Appropriations looks into the expenditures made by the District Commissioners, but to what extent they audit the accounts in the true meaning of that term I can not say.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman think, as a public man of wide experience, that there ought to be the closest and most critical examination by somebody of the accounts?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Most certainly there ought to be; and if it is done at some other bureau of the Government, if it is done by the Auditor of the Treasury, then this committee certainly ought to have the benefit of the action of the Auditor of the At any rate I think there ought to be some better system of the expenditure of this money, because I do not believe it goes to the right direction economically. I do not intimate that there is anything wrong about it except inefficiency and incompetency, but I should like to see the Commission of the District of Columbia made up of thorough business men, men of experience in the expenditure of money. We have what is called an Engineer Commissioner. Well, we all know that you may have an engineer trained to the details of his profession, and he may have not the slightest knowledge of business transactions whatever. I do not say that the present member is such. A man may be a splendid newspaper or magazine writer and be an admirable citizen of the country, and yet be totally incapable of administering the affairs of a District like this; and then a man may be a genial, pleasant, speech-making gentleman, enter-taining the people of the country, and not know how to build and maintain an alleyway between two houses, and I would like to see some system of these expenditures that would show on the streets. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, much that has been said about the conditions of the streets of this city is true, but there is one thing that should be stated in connection with the criticism that goes far to explain the wretched condition in which some of the pavements have fallen. In the lists of streets which were to be repaired, submitted by the Commissioners, it appeared that out of fourteen streets the pavements of five were laid between 1872 and 1880, six between 1880 and 1890, and three between 1890 and 1895. In another list of streets of sixty-seven the pavements in twenty-two of those streets were laid between 1870 and 1880; the pavements in thirty-eight were laid between 1880 and 1890, and the pavements in seven between 1890 and 1895. No pavement has been laid for a shorter period than eleven years. From my knowledge of the paving of streets gained from my own locality, I know that at one time in laying asphalt pavement it was customary for the contractors to give a guaranty of ten years.

Of recent years the streets have been laid with a guaranty of five years. The fact is, that in the city of Washington a great number of pavements have been laid at least fifteen years, and many of them as long as thirty years. The result is that to-day the pavements deteriorate very rapidly. As the chairman of the committee has stated, both in this bill and in the bill for the current year the committee gave all that the Commissioners asked for this purpose. My recollection is that the Engineer Commissioner stated that they could use more than the $300,000, but they asked $300,000 because that was a sum that could be economically and advantageously used during the year; and they did not ask more for this purpose, perhaps, because they desired large appropriations for some other purposes. The streets of the city will continue in somewhat of a deplorable condition unless, for many years to come at least, equally large appropriations are made as are made in this bill. As these pavements get older they require more repairs. Last year it was suggested that the money that was being expended in patching Pennsylvania avenue was not economically expended, and as a result of that suggestion the entire avenue is to be resurfaced at a cost of $115,000.

I am inclined to sympathize with the position of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn]. I believe that the streets of this city should be kept in as good condition as possible. tlemen will recollect that in the last session there was before the House a bill to compel the use of larger tires upon some of the heavy vehicles in the District. That bill was not enacted into law, but it was pressed upon the request of the Commissioners because they said that by reason of the excessive heat in the District at certain times of the year the pavements became so soft that the narrow tires used by the vehicles carrying excessive weights badly cut the pavements. I am not in favor of an extravagant administration in the District, but I do believe that sufficient money should be given to economically administer the government, and at the same time to make this city the most attractive city in the entire country. I feel as does my colleague on the committee, that the committee has done everything that it could by making a searching inquiry of the Commissioners regarding the condition of the streets and giving every dollar they ask for that purpose both this year and the last.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York

[Mr. Fitzgerald] has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I note that on pages 25 and 26 of the bill, in providing for the paying of certain streets, the width of the street is fixed. I would like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill whether the widths fixed in these several clauses is the established widths of the streets, or whether or not the widths that are stated in this bill refix the widths of the streets.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to have the gentleman repeat the question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I just asked whether or not the widths fixed in the several sections, on pages 25 and 26 of the bill, are widths as fixed some time heretofore, or whether or not these widths are fixed by this bill, establishing new widths of the streets?

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman think that it would be well first to dispose of the amendment before the House, when I will be pleased to answer the question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I took it up because we were on the question of street discussions generally, and did not know the nature of the amendment, not having been in my seat at the time the amendment was made.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman will wait until the amendment is disposed of, then I will be glad to answer his question. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn].

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there is much of truth in what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] says in regard to the condition of the streets, and yet I hope that the amendment offered by him will not prevail. The condition in which the streets are found at this time has been well explained by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], but that is not all. The committee has allowed all the money, unless you revise the bill at other points, which the revenues will allow this year.

The gentleman asks why the streets are in their present condition with so much revenue, and what has been done with the money. It is known by gentlemen of the House that during these recent years there has been built the Connecticut Avenue Bridge, involving an expenditure of a million of dollars in round numbers; that there has been laid a very expensive and complete system of sewers and a sewage-disposal plant, involving a very large outlay; that there has been put in an expensive filtra-tion plant of very great value to all the residents of the city. These are some of what may be termed "extraordinary ex-They have eaten up a large part of the current revenues of the city, and for the time being the streets have, in part at least, been neglected. But as the projects named have been completed, or are approaching completion, you will observe that the appropriation for the improvement of the streets has been increased 100 per cent over that given in previous years.

There is no reason why that per cent of improvement, so far as past appropriations are concerned, should not be continued and possibly advanced upon.

But I would ask the gentleman from Iowa to take note of this: Under a law enacted by Congress the city has to pay between now and the 1st of July, five years hence, $3,100,000 of debt already incurred. The money was borrowed from the Government, and under a law of Congress it must be returned to the Government out of the current revenues on or before July 1, 1912. Now, if we appropriate this $200,000 and go on at that rate in this bill, not only will we not be able the ensuing year to pay one dollar of that $3,000,000, but we will leave the District with an additional debt for current expenses. this reason, not that the streets do not need it, but that the revenues will not allow this great additional expenditure, do I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The gentleman from Iowa is right, as it seems to me, in this, that the revenues derived from this city of 300,000 people are not in proportion to the wealth, real and personal, of the city. There lies the difficulty. The Government is doing its part. No one questions that. It is a question as to whether or not the city is doing its full duty. But that does not need the condition in the instance that the gentleman from Iowa has in mind. That waits another year; but in the meantime-and I want to state it again-we have given twice as much as we have given for some years and all that the Commissioners asked for the improvement of the streets the coming year.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will indulge me a moment, there are two objections raised by members of the committee to the adoption of the amendment that I have offered. One is that the Commissioners do not ask for more. Why the Commissioners did not ask for more I do not know, for I am satisfied that the Commissioners must have known of the conditions that exist, and the gentleman from New York told us that the one who speaks authoritatively upon questions of this kind said that they could use economically and properly a larger sum than that which they had asked for.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that is the basis of measurement that the committee ought to have adopted in fixing the minimum of this appropriation. That is what they should have had. I do not know what their experiences have been heretofore when they asked for an increase. I do not know what discouragements they have met when they have asked for more money. I do not know what fears they may have had of rebuff and of criticism on the part of members of the committee that might deter them, perhaps, from asking for that sum that they could judiciously use in remedying an evil that they must see, must know, must recognize—that is, the horrid condition of the Now, Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that that is an argument against the propriety—yea, necessity—of making this proper appropriation. If the evil exists—and no man doubts it if it can be remedied, if the Engineer Commissioner says that he could properly expend the sum, then why not furnish them the means with which they can restore the streets to such a condition that they will not be a byword and a sneer and a reproach to the decent appearance of the city.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HEPBURN.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield.
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Under the gentleman's line of argument you could run this bill up to $15,000,000 precisely. You could have a million dollars for public school buildings, if you granted—simply to illustrate—all that was asked or all that they said they could properly use.

Mr. HEPBURN. I believed I was yielding to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, I beg your pardon. I wanted to make myself clear to you.

Mr. HEPBURN. You always do; but I would rather you would do it in your own time.

Mr. Chairman, I think that disposes of one objection-that they have not asked for more. The other objection is that if this appropriation should be increased the debt due to the Government of the United States in five years will not be paid. To my mind, Mr. Chairman, that is a consideration scarcely worthy of attention. What difference does it make to the United States whether the sums advanced are returned to the Treasury of the United States in 1912 or 1920. Not a whit; nothing in comparison with the reproach that is brought upon the Congress of the United States where it is held responsible for the condition of the streets of this city.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman-Mr. HEPBURN. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Do you not think that the District ought to keep faith with the Government?

Mr. HEPRURN. The District ought to keep faith with the Government, but there is no difficulty in our enlarging this time for payment, so that the District in 1920 can pay this debt and still keep faith. And it is suggested to me that probit might be wise policy for us to do this and a broader justice to the District, because the increased value ascertained by the assessors will more than pay this sum in the time that have suggested.

So, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is an argument of such cogency as ought to influence the committee, and I hope that the members of the committee, out of pride in the work that they have done-this is undoubtedly a magnificent bill in its general scope; they have put great labor upon it; they have brought a measure here that meets with but very little criticism-I hope that in their pride of authorship or creation they will not stand against this wholesome expenditure of money. There is nothing that we can do that will give the visitor to this city a better and greater appreciation of what it is than this very appropriation.

[The time of Mr. Hepburn having expired, by unanimous consent, at his request, it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. HEPBURN. We are talking about and are looking forward to a time when this will be the most beautiful capital in I am one of those who are perfectly willing to make the world the needful appropriations to bring about the realization of this I want this city to be the most beautiful of all I believe that the people whom I represent have that desire. I have never had one of them come to this city who has not been pleased to know that he had an interest in the city, which is so beautiful, even with the defects that still exist; but I do think that while we have this dream of beauty, while we are looking forward in the anticipation that our children at least will see it all, we who live in this day ought to have some of the comforts that ought to be given to us, and, while these expectations in architecture and in landscape gardening may be realized, that we, in the everyday affair of decent streets, may have what this generation are entitled to.

Gentlemen have spoken about the rapidity with which streets deteriorate and have told us about the age of the pavement in some of the streets. I think that if the surfacing of the streets of this city had been properly done it would serve its purpose for much longer periods. I think there is something radically wrong about the inspection that is being had at times when streets are being built and repaired. There is a little stretch of asphalt pavement in this city, right west of the Treasury Department, which is subjected to as great and severe use, perhaps, as that of any street in this city. It is the favorite passageway for heavily loaded teams. My recollection is that that pavemen was laid in 1889, yet it is in better condition to-day than any other street that I know of. It was well built, while the surfacing of Pennsylvania avenue, that occurred late in the fall of 1892, has for ten years been a disgrace to the city. It was not well built, notwithstanding the army of inspectors that we have. And right here I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill how large the inspecting force is. It seems to be so scattered through the bill that I have not been able to ascertain the number.

I remember a few years ago the inspectors were grouped together, and then it was possible for us to see what an army of observers there were, and what a multitude of men there were in the city who must know of the infamous condition of these streets. I wondered then and I wonder now, if their number has been retained at that great maximum of a few years ago, how it is that the Commissioners can sleep comfortably in their beds when the people over whom they rule are suffering the discomforts that they do, the inconvenience that they do, the outrage that they do whenever they ride over half a mile of any of the streets of this city.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, there is an important matter which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations desires to bring before the House for immediate action, and therefore I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman will let us have a vote on this. It will only take a moment to Mr. GILLETT. I want to say a word before we vote. The matter to which I refer is a bill that we want to get over to the Senate at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24103—the District appropriation bill-and had come to no resolution thereon.

RELIEF OF CITIZENS OF THE ISLAND OF JAMAICA.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24478) for the relief of citizens of the island of Jamaica. A bill (H. R. 244/8) for the relief of citizens of the island of Jamaica. Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is au-thorized to use and distribute among the suffering and destitute peo-ple of the island of Jamaica such provisions, clothing, medicines, and other necessary articles belonging to the subsistence and other stores of the naval establishment as may be necessary for the purpose of suc-coring the people who are in peril and threatened with starvation on said island in consequence of the recent earthquake and attending con-flagration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have just been advised by the Secretary of the Navy that the conditions at Kingston, Jamaica, are far worse than reported. The Department has a wireless message to that effect from one of the battle ships that arrived there this morning. The supply ship Celtic is at Guantanamo, only a short distance from Kingston. the intention of the President to direct that that ship go to Kingston for the purpose of distributing the supplies it has on board among the suffering people, and it is for the purpose of giving authority to do that that this bill is offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to ask the gentleman what is the limitation on the power of the President to use these supplies?

Mr. TAWNEY. So much as is deemed to be necessary for the immediate relief of the people of that island. I will say that there was a similar resolution or bill passed at the time of the terrible catastrophe at Martinique. In that case there was no limitation at all. I inserted in this resolution "so much as may be necessary for temporary immediate relief of the people of the island."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall the language of the other resolutions. My recollection is that some of them designated a specific amount which should be at the disposal of the President

Mr. TAWNEY. In that case there was a specific amount of In this case it is proposed now to use only the supplies on the supply ship Celtic, which is at Guantanamo, about 125 miles distant from Kingston. It is only to furnish those supplies that this authority is asked.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is the purpose of the resolution to simply allow the supplies on that ship to be distributed?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the purpose.

Mr. MANN. It is not expected that the Department will go beyond that?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not, and the Department does not ask for authority to do any more than to use the supplies on the supply ship Celtic, which will go to Kingston as soon as it can get there for the purpose of relieving the temporary distress that prevails there at this time. I am informed that the Government of Great Britain does not even know the extent of the suffering or the conditions that prevail there at this ime.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say that I have no objection to affording this relief, but it seemed to me that there should be some limitation on the power to use the resources of the Government for this purpose. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota to say that it is distinctly understood that only the specific supplies mentioned by him will be utilized for this pur-

Mr. TAWNEY. The amount they propose to use is covered by the amount of supplies that is on this one ship.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Tawney, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES B. MULFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3357) granting an honorable discharge to James B. Mulford, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged bill, H. R. 21197, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, by extending the provisions of the first section thereof to the port of Brunswick, Ga.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, A. D. 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the port of Brunswick, Ga.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time: was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Brantley, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say one word more upon this question of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn]. The gentleman suggests that the District Commissioners might not have asked for more because they were afraid they would not get it. If there is one thing which you can anticipate of them, it is that they will not be afraid to ask whatever they want, and I do not think the fear that they would not get it can have restrained them. There are about a million and a half dollars of projects that they have asked for which they have not received in this bill, but this is the one clause where I certainly did not think we should be asked by amendment to give more than we have. This is one provision where we gave all that was asked and all that we thought could be wisely and judiciously expended, compared with other appropriations in the bill, to make the bill come up to the needs of the District. The streets of Washington, I think, to-day compare favorably with the streets of any other city, although they could, of course, be very much improved, and we are improving them; yet they are kept up now much better than in most cities. We do not expect streets are going to be perfect all the time. It is impossible that every year we are going to have every street in this whole city a smooth and perfect pavement.

This year under the appropriations already made Pennsylvinia which is the propriation of the property of the prop vania avenue, which is the main subject of criticism, which advertises more than any other the bad condition of the streets, is going to be repayed. That will be done on the two present appropriations, and all that it is necessary to do, it seems to That will be done on the two present me, is to keep improving the other streets with our enlarged appropriation. As I said before, this committee last year allowed an appropriation half as much again as large as had ever been allowed before. This year again we gave $300,000, half as much again as had ever been done before, and when once such a pace is set the committee keeps on. So if we should suddenly jump up to $500,000, which the gentleman asks, $200,000 over the $300,000 that we now have, that would set the pace for the future. It is going to be hard to cut it down again. We gave the same this year as we did last year, and I believe that with the $300,000 a year the city will soon be in excellent condition, quite as good as it ought to be, compared with the other pressing expenses that come upon us. The streets are not used by all the people. Probably only 10 per cent drive and ride on the streets. There are other large and crying needs which ought to be met. We have to meet the needs of the city—all its different needs—in such proportion as the committee can. We can not have any department perfect, and it seems to me that $300,000 which we have given, more than ever before until last year, and as much as is asked, is ample to keep the city in a fair condition-better condition than any other city—and is as much proportionately to other deserving projects as we ought to give to those who ride in carriages and automobiles, and is all that this House ought now to grant.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Hepburn) there were—ayes 50, noes 35.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered.

Mr. GILLETT and Mr. HEPBURN were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46,

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Operation of the Anacostia River bridge: For salaries of employees, lighting, miscellaneous supplies, and expenses of every kind necessary to the operation and maintenance of the bridge: Provided, That the time within which said bridge shall be reconstructed is extended to July 1, 1908, $2,800.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the clause on page 28, beginning with the word "Provided," on lines 19, 20, and 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning on line 19, page 28, with the word "Provided," strike out the remainder of said line, and also strike out lines 20 and 21.

Mr. GILLETT. That has already passed the House. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the parking commission: For contingent expenses, including laborers, cart hire, trees, tree boxes, tree stakes, tree straps, planting and care of trees on city and suburban streets, whitewashing, care of tree spaces, parks, and miscellaneous items, $30,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill what service is intended in the words "care of tree spaces? In other words, I want to know if it is the purpose of this appropriation to secure the sodding and other proper care of the spaces around the trees, the spaces in the pavements.

Mr. GILLETT. That, I understand, is the purpose of it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman understand that has ever been done?

Mr. GILLETT. I think this is the exact language we had

Mr. HEPBURN. I mean that the duty has ever been performed for which the appropriation is made.

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose so. Yes; I am very sure it is. I can not say every tree has, but they enrich the trees from time to time, dig up the ground around about them, etc.

Mr. HEPBURN. I never had seen anything of that kind. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma ame Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of playgrounds sites, to be immediately available, $75,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman— Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the paragraph is new legislation on an appropriation bill, which is against the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will make it; then if the Chair overrules me, I will make another motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I reserve it if any gentleman wants to express his opinion about it, and if nobody does I will express my own.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is more interesting, perhaps.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am perfectly willing to do anything that is reasonable to help make what we all claim this capital is destined to be, the finest capital city in the world, and the events in connection with the public schools in this city in the last few years in this House have certainly demonstrated that I am a good friend to the public schools and the children.

When I first heard about this item I supposed the money was to be appropriated to enlarge the playgrounds in connection with certain schools, but I was informed to-day by a man who knows all about it that this $75,000 appropriation is for playgrounds in no way connected with existing public school buildings in this city, and that it is simply a beginning on the part of Congress to establish a multiplicity of large playgrounds in the various sections of Washington, including Georgetown, which have no particular connection with any school, and that they are not to be located in proximity to any of the public schools. also informed by a gentleman who I think has a pretty good head that this was merely a beginning, an entering wedge, of a scheme that would ultimately cost in all human probability a million dollars. What good will these general playgrounds established at various places all over the city do the school children? I am not at all certain that anybody would be willing for his small children to go to one of them. Surely he would not be willing for them to go to them unless they had supervision, particularly with reference to these things. had police upshot of the matter is, unless my information is absolutely incorrect, the $75,000 is the beginning of the establishing simply of a new set of parks in this city. If that is the case, I am opposed to it, and if this point of order is overruled, and if I can get the eye of the Chairman-

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will permit, why can not we simply provide that the children can play in the parks we

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is what I would have said if I had thought of it, and I am obliged to the gentleman for the suggestion. There are plenty of parks for them to play in now, and I do not intend to be put in the attitude in raising the point of order and moving to strike out this paragraph, of being unfriendly to the schools or the school children or the children generally of the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GILLETT. I understood the Chair to ask the gentleman from Missouri. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri the ground upon which he bases his point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My point of order is based upon the ground that it is new legislation and engrafted on an appropriation bill, and I do not think it needs any argument. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, what is in order on the District appropriation bill, it seems to me ought to be decided upon somewhat different grounds, or at least there ought to be a different leaning on the part of the Chair, from other appropriation bills, because there is here a municipal government for the continued operation of which this bill provides, and it may be if the same rules are applied that are applied to other appropriation bills a great deal that is in the regular District appropriation bill, and which everyone would agree ought to be there, might be stricken out.

Therefore, it seems to me that the Chair should consider that a District appropriation bill appropriates for a work in progress—namely, the municipal government—and all those phases of municipal government which are necessarily appropriated for are in order on a District appropriation bill. Among those is the school. It has been the custom on every District appropriation bill to appropriate for new sites for school buildings and for new school buildings. The education of the children is one of the necessary elements of a municipal government. law of Congress provides that we shall provide schools, and I suppose that it is on that general ground that it is held that these appropriations for the purchase of sites and for the erection of new school buildings are in order. Just as in Annapolis. It has been held with the school at Annapolis that it was in order to buy new ground and erect a new building there. seems to me it is in order to buy new land and erect new buildings for our school system.

Now, these playgrounds are, of course, part of our educa-onal system. It is meant to be a part of the moral and tional system. physical and intellectual improvement of the children of the I do not think the question of whether it is contiguous to a schoolhouse or not is of importance. If it should be, it might be ruled that one of these grounds was in order and the other two were out of order, because one of them is next to a schoolhouse and the other two are not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not a fact that the principal use to which these playgrounds would be put would be during the summer, when the schools are not in session at all?

Mr. GILLETT. Not the principal use. It would undoubtedly be a large use, but at the same time that is part of the school system. The fact that the schools are not in session does not prevent it from being part of the educational system of the District

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, another question. If these places are not located with particular reference to proximity to the school buildings, then how can the gentleman claim with a straight face that this proposition is any part of the public school system at all? Mr. GILLETT. I do not see how anybody could claim that it is not a part of the school system. It is a part of the education of the children. It is the part of providing healthful exercise, just as our school playgrounds are for the children of the District, and it seems to me it is a part of the educational system of the District.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Another question. What is the reason the children of this District can not play in these numerous parks that we have, just as well as in this new system of parks that is contemplated?

Mr. GILLETT. Because there are not nearly enough of them. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The truth is they warn them off the grass in these parks now, and instead of making them playgrounds for the children, as they ought to be, they are a kind of fashionable resort for the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILLETT. Now, the gentleman is mistaken in that, because in two of the places where these playgrounds are to be located there are not any parks, namely, the northeast section and the Georgetown section, and in the southwest section there is a small park which is now being used for a playground. But that does not affect the point of order as to whether it is in order or not on this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The parks belong to the Federal Government, do they not?

Mr. GILLETT. They do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They are not the property of the city. I would suggest the purchase and procurement of sites and the erection of playgrounds is as much a part of the school system as a gymnasium for school children is a part of the educational system.

Mr. GILLETT. This is practically gymnasium work. It is contemplated to have gymnastic apparatus upon them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the law provide now that although these parks belong to the United States Government they may be used by the children as public playgrounds?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not understand that they do.

The law provides that they shall not be used by children for public playgrounds.

Mr. GILLETT. I understand that there is a provision in law that the officer in charge shall set aside suitable provision for children in the public parks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have some practical information, because I am the father of many children. I do not know how it is regulated or who regulates it, but in some of the parks they permit the children to play and in some of them they do not. Now, in the Judiciary Square they can play and here in the Capitol park children 12 years of age can play, but in some of them nobody is allowed to go on the grass under any circumstances. I would like to know who regulates it or makes the distinction. I suppose it is done by the Commissioners, or the custodian of public grounds of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am not intentionally diverting from the point of order, but—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question. This plan involves ultimately the expenditure in the neighborhood of a million dollars if it is carried out according to the wishes of the people who are favoring it, does it not?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman; it will according to the purpose of the persons who propound it, but it will not according to my purpose, and it will not get any sympathy from me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The trouble about that is that you and I and the rest of us are here by a feeble tenure and can not stay for long, at best; but these people who want these things, they and their successors, are going to be here eternally.

Mr. GILLETT. But it does not follow that our successors are going to be any more friendly to such a proposition than we.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If I knew that the gentleman from Massachusetts were going to stay here forever I would be perfectly willing to leave it to him to keep it from reaching a million dollars; but he is subject to the ordinary laws of human life and the laws of American politics like the rest of us.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. SIMS. Is there not a tendency upon the part of the people of this city to have large amounts of land purchased by the Government, if it does not withdraw such land from taxation, thereby constantly reducing the taxable property of the District, and is that not used as an argument to found the claim that the Government should pay one-half of the expenses of the District?

Mr. GILLETT. With that I have not much sympathy; but I will answer that when we come to an argument of the amendment on its merits. I do not like to appear to be discussing a point of order and really be drawn into a discussion of the merits. But my position on the point of order is that this is analogous to other propositions which from year to year are in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the purchase of sites and the erection of schoolhouses; that it is absolutely necessary for the conduct of the municipal business that they should have schools, and that the education of the children is a work in progress which is specifically provided for by law and is compulsory on the District, and this is in furtherance of that project.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, just one word upon the point of order and in support of the contention that this movement is part of the public educational system of the city, and is therefore in order. The Committee on Appropriations for a number of years has made provisions, not in a large sum, but what was deemed sufficient from year to year to aid in the development and maintenance of public playgrounds for the children of the city. Further than that, the teachers of the public schools have been paid out of that fund to supervise the care and education and protection of the children on these playgrounds. Further than that, the janitors for the public schools have been employed and paid out of these funds for the care of these public playgrounds. They are, in a sense, to be educa-tional institutions for the children rather than mere recreation grounds, and they are for the development of the physical as the school proper is for the development of the mental side of the children, and therefore in order because it is a continuance of the present educational system.

Mr. REEDER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. REEDER. Can the gentleman state how far these proposed parks are to be from the nearest school building?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I can not tell you exactly how far they are to be from the schools; but in reasonably close proximity

Mr. GILLETT. One of them joins.
Mr. REEDER. I mean the other.
Mr. GILLETT. One of them joins the school building, and the other is quite a distance.

Mr. REEDER. Is it within a block?

Mr. GILLETT. One is near to the school building. I do not think the second is within a block.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But let me say that the testimony shows that they are within reach of 4,000 children.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question or two.

Mr. REEDER. I want to get an answer on this point: If they are away from the children as much as a block, and are to be used by the children, they can not be used by the children from the school unless you dismiss the school so that they can go to the playgrounds. They can not go there and come back in time for the school session.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In answer to the gentleman, I will state this: Going out on another mission in the city a few weeks ago with a gentleman who is present, we went by one of these playgrounds—private property—where there were scores of children from 8 to 16 years of age playing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be a wiser expenditure of money to buy sufficient playgrounds in the immediate neighborhood of the public school buildings that are already erected in this town?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If that could be done; but many of the buildings are so located that you can not enlarge the open area about them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know that. Take the Franklin School, for instance-it could not be done in that case for it would cost too much; but in many cases you could buy a block of ground, as the gentleman from Kansas seems to intimate, within a reasonable distance from the playgrounds, and make them available to the children. Now, another question: Do not the proponents of this plan intend that social clubs shall be established on these playgrounds, as they are called, and so on to the end of the chapter?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Now, if that is relevant to the point of order, I shall be glad to speak of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We are talking about the whole thing. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I should like to wait until the matter is properly up for discussion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One more question and then I will stop. Is it not in the contemplation of the proponents of this measure that this thing shall ultimately cost as much as a million dollars

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I have heard that stated on what I thought was good authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The geatleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] makes the point of order upon the paragraph of the bill provid-ing for the purchase of playground sites, to be immediately available.

The gentlemen who contend that the matter is not subject to the point of order seem to rely principally upon the proposition that this is a part of the public school system in some way. It seems to the Chair that if the gentlemen had thought at the time of the preparation of the bill that the playgrounds were a part of the public school system the item would have been inserted at some point among the twenty pages of the bill under the heading of public schools. It scarcely seems to the Chair that the purchase of playgrounds apart from the public schools can be called a part of the public school system; and it has been held by the Chair that even a provision in the bill providing for the erection of a new public school was subject to the point of order in this bill if not previously authorized.

As the Chair understands, there is no direct legislation authorizing the purchase of the playgrounds. If a bill were introduced in the House for that purpose it would be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which would have jurisdiction to consider and report it. If a bill reported from that committee were passed upon the subject, then the Committee on Appropriations would acquire jurisdiction. In the opinion of the present occupant of the chair, contrary to his personal inclinations as to playgrounds, the item is new legislation and is subject to the point of order; and the Chair themselves. and is subject to the point of order; and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment right there, after the word "dollars," in line 22, page 32:

For the purchase of playground sites for school children, to be immediately available, $75,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert after line 22, page 32, the following: "For the purchase of playground sites for school children, to be immediately available, $75,000."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting: For illuminating material, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning public lamps on avenues, streets, roads, and alleys; purchasing and expeuse of erecting and maintaining new lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures; moving lamp-posts, painting lamp-posts and lanterns; replacing and repairing lamp-posts and lanterns designations, lanterns, and fixtures; moving lamp-posts and lanterns damaged or unfit for service; for rent of storeroom, cartage of material, livery, and other necessary items, $250,000: Provided, That no more than $18 per annum shall be paid for each gas lamp equipped with a self-regulating flat-flame burner so adjusted as to secure under all ordinary variations of pressure and density a consumption of 5 cubic feet of gas per hour, nor more than $20.85 per annum for each gas or oil lamp equipped with an incandescent mantle burner of not less than 60 candlepower. And during the fiscal year 1908 the price prescribed by Congress for lighting each street lamp in the District of Columbia with gas or oil shall be construed to include the cost of the illuminating material used, lighting and extinguishing lamps, repairing, painting, cleaning, purchasing, and expense of erecting and maintaining lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures: Provided, That all of said lamps shall burn every night, on the average, from fifteen minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise: And provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may purchase, erect, light, and maintain such posts, lanterns, signs, and fixtures for street designation purposes, in addition to those mentioned above, as in their judgment may be necessary, which lamps shall not be subject to the restrictions of this paragraph except as to the time of burning.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, in line 22, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and $22.80 per annum for each."

Mr. GILLETT. That is merely to correct an oversight in the printing of the bill. There is a difference in the price of gas and oil lamps, and this is to make that perfectly clear.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care, including salaries of all necessary employees, maintenance, do operation of the Washington Aqueduct, District of Columbia, tration plant, and for each and every purpose connected therewith,

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24103the District of Columbia appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 7034, to incorporate the International Sunday School Association of America.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

8, 7034. To incorporate the International Sunday School Association

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio the reason of this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this a District company?
Mr. KEIFER. This is a corporation that has no business relations except those connected with Sabbath schools and the Sabbath School Association of America. This bill was introduced into the Senate of the United States by Senator Mc-CREARY, of Kentucky, at the instance of the International Sabbath School Association of America. It was referred in the Senate to the Judiciary Committee, there considered and reported to the Senate, and passed the Senate unanimously. The only thing that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate had any doubt about as to the bill as it was originally drawn was whether or not it should require the principal office to be held exclusively in the city of Washington, D. C. It was proposed in the original bill that the principal office should be here, but that an office might be kept at another place, provided a majority of the incorporators so desired. Senator Bacon, of Georgia, and others thought it ought to be limited, as I am informed, to a place wholly within the jurisdiction of the United States, and the bill was amended in that respect, requiring the office of the association to be in Washington City. Then, as some of the incorporators are citizens of the United States and others are citizens of Canada, the bill was amended finally so as to provide that in all the future the majority of the incorporators should be citizens of the United States. This amendporators should be citizens of the United States. ment was made on yesterday, just before the bill passed the Senate, on the motion of Senator Heyburn, of Idaho, as yesterday's proceedings in the Senate show.

Briefly, the object of the incorporation is to give this International Sabbath School Association, which has been going on with special organization a long time, with one office at Chicago and one at Toledo, and sometimes doing business in Philadel-phia and perhaps in Canada, wherever it was believed the best work could be done, a place where they can concentrate their work. The work covers the United States and Canada; perhaps other countries. It has been most successful. The principal thing is to give them organization where they may have their donations centered, and largely an incorporation is wanted and needed so that donations and bequests and devises, etc., can be accepted, which the unincorporated association has not been able so far to do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why could they not receive a charter from a State?

Mr. KEIFER. Because it is international; it covers all the States and more. There might be an incorporation in Kentucky and an office at Louisville, but down there they could not incorporate and extend corporate authority farther than Kentucky, the charter not being for general business that through State comity are allowed to do business in States where not chartered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes. Corporations incorporated under the laws of New Jersey do work all over the Union. Mr. KEIFER. Those are business corporations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why could they not do just as much with State incorporation as with a national incorporation?

Mr. KEIFER. I am not prepared to say. Of course they might have crippled along without an incorporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not the object to give them the prestige of a national charter?

Mr. KEIFER. Probably so; that may be one of the reasons for having a national charter. I am satisfied that the business of the organization will be better accomplished by a national incorporation, and, if it was fully understood, I think there would be no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the bill been to any committee of the House's

Mr. KEIFER. It has never been before a committee of the House; it has been in the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think that the House ought to have the benefit of an investigation of the matter by one of its committees?

Mr. KEIFER. The reason that I called it up is because it is understood that there are pressing reasons in connection with donations. It has been before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and in charge of Senator Bacon, of Georgia, where it was fully considered.

Mr. MANN. Has a similar bill been introduced in the House? Mr. KEIFER. No, Mr. Speaker; I think not. I was asked to introduce such a bill, but finding that the matter had been taken up by Senator McCreary, I did not introduce it, but waited until it might come regularly from the Senate.

Mr. MANN. There is no criticism upon the gentleman's action in waiting, but here is an organization that has been in existence for many years.

Mr. KEIFER. The work of the International Sabbath School Association has been going on for a quarter of a century or

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that if the organization has been in existence for years, and after it has been in the Senate for a considerable length of time, that he ought not to ask the House to pass the bill without giving it a few days' reference to a committee?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, I thought that it had sufficient consideration in the Senate. It involves nothing to the United States; there is no possible business involved in it-nothing in it for

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is to make an invidious distinction. If this bill is permitted to go through without such a reference, it being nothing unusual to make such a request, the next bill may have something in it that we do not discover.

Where it is of a business character, that is Mr. KEIFER. right. If the gentleman will allow me, I will hand to the Clerk to have read a letter written to me-a personal letter-from Mr. Marion Lawrence, which I will send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF THE GENERAL SECRETARY,
Toledo, Ohio, December 28, 1996.

Gen. J. WARREN KEIFER, Washington, D. C.

Gen. J. Warren Keifer,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I have your autograph letter from Springfield, dated Recember 24. The copy of the bill you sent me came all right, and I have looked it over with much interest. Now, in regard to the benefits to be derived would say they are principally two.

First, crystallization of our work. We are branching out a great deal, and already have three or four offices—one in Toledo, one in Chicago, one in Newark, N. J., etc. Others are likely to follow unless we centralize and crystallize. We have 13 secretaries under my direction—this does not include the office force in these various offices. The work is growing rapidly, and we are spending about $30,000 a year. We thought incorporation would make it easier for us, for we would move all of our offices to one place, probably Chicago, after suitable action has been taken with that in view. Of course that action can not be taken until after we are incorporated, with the chief office in the District of Columbia. We are likely to add quite a number more secretaries and departments to our work within the next few years. Our organization has always been too loose. We never have had even a constitution or by-laws. Everything has been done by precedent and impulse. We want to tie things together a little.

We admit, however, that the chief benefit sought for is financial. We desire to put ourselves into a position so that our friends can remember us in their wills. We have many friends, I believe, who would be willing to do this; and if we were incorporated in such a way that they would know their wishes would be carried out during the years to come they would feel more free to remember us in this way. We have no source of income whatever except through the generosity of churches and Sunday schools and individuals. There is no business feature in the association whatever. There is not a single thing we sell (and our sales are confined wholly to our reports and leaflets) upon which we do not lose money. The report of our last conve Yours MARION LAWRENCE.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw any objection he may have.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill not only occupies an exceptional place in the House, but it is a District bill and should be referred to the District Committee.

Mr. KEIFER. No; it is not a District bill. Mr. MANN. Well, if it is not a District bill, then I object, and if it is a District bill, I object. I certainly object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill is referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. Smith of Kentucky to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of J. A. Kemp, H. R. 9839, Fifty-eighth Congres, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CONSIDERATION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] one-half hour be given for the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Maryland one-half hour be devoted to the consideration of unobjected bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I find that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTH-ERLAND] does not care to go on until Tuesday, for which day he has given notice. I therefore renew my motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I gave notice that on Monday I would submit some remarks on an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia. As the Brownsville incident will take up all of that day, I wish to change the notice to Wednesday, January 23.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. KEAN. Is the morning business closed? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, the morning business is closed.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Chair what has become of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is upon the table. Mr. KEAN. Then I ask that it may go over until Monday, to be taken up immediately after the routine morning business on Monday

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL POWERS.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution No. 200 be taken from the table and read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Maryland, the Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. Whyte December 17, 1906, as follows:

December 17, 1906, as follows:

Resolved, That the people of the several States, acting in their highest sovereign capacity as free and independent States, adopted the Federal Constitution and established a form of government in the nature of a confederated republic, and for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects for which it was formed delegated to that Government certain rights enumerated in said Constitution, but reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people thereof, all the residuary powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States.

Resolved further. That the extension of the Federal powers beyond these enumerated in the Constitution can only be rightfully accomplished in the manner provided by that instrument and not by a strained construction of the Constitution which shall obliterate all State rights and vest the coveted, but not granted, power where it will be exercised by the General Government.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] said the other day, there are times in our political as well as individual life when we should take our bearings, and I may add, see what is the chart lying before us, and from whom we are to take our sailing orders.

The resolution under consideration states the form of our dual system of government, and the limitations of the powers delegated to the United States and those reserved by the States. It is impossible to discuss them without reference to the past history of the country and that, I trust, I shall do with laudable brevity.

The thirteen British colonies were separate and distinct communities; they had no political relation to each other.

They each had a government of its own. Three of the colonies as far back as 1643, united in a Federal Republic. Its existence was short-lived and its action was purely tentative. For a considerable period the efforts of the colonies were manifested in various devices to bring them together for purposes of safety and for the regulation of commerce. The first Continental Congress met to secure the rights of the colonies. The relations, however, of that Congress with the colonies did not constitute a government. They had not at that time renounced their al-legiance to the mother country and declared their independence.

In 1776 the people of the respective thirteen colonies declared. in instructions to their Congressional Delegates, that they were 'States independent and united." They were, by tradition and education, hostile to the establishment of an overruling central force, and they abhorred the idea of parting with the vital principle of freedom and self-direction in all their domestic concerns. In every way and form they sturdily resisted the encroachments of the Crown.

On the 10th June, 1776, a committee of Congress, consisting of five Members, was appointed to prepare a declaration "that these United Colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent States." Such declaration was made on the 4th July, 1776, and received the vote of every Colony.

The purpose of the then revolutionary government was to rescue the several communities or States from the Government of the British Crown.

The form of that Government was not changed by the Declaration of Independence, but from that time forth it made the Colonies, "free and independent States."

Prior to the Declaration of Independence the dominant idea of the people of the Colonies was for home government for each Colony, no matter what might be the General Government of the Colonies.

The revolutionary heroes waged war against Great Britain in behalf of their own people because the Government of that Kingdom was "one, outside of themselves." Indeed the war of the Revolution was largely based on an assault upon the right of Home Rule and had its start in the resistance to the enforcement of an act of the British Parliament by the people of Massachusetts, and thus the Colonies were aroused to the protection of their domestic Governments against the encroachments of imperial power. As distinct communities, nevertheless, they could not, then, form a practical union; but by reason of the successful revolution they were enabled to exercise the right of confederation.
On the 1st of March, 1781, the Articles of Confederation were subscribed and their ratification by all the States was announced to the whole country. The central authority was now in the Confederacy in the place of the Crown, and the same limited power only was granted to it.

In the treaty of peace of September 3, 1783, the States were distinctly recognized by name, as appears from Article 1. His Britannic Majesty acknowledges the said United States, viz, New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, to be free, sovereign, and independent States, and he treats with them as such.

As late as 1803, in the treaty with France for the cession of Louisiana, the third article provided "that the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States."

Into the Union of the United States, not "into the United States" under the Federal Constitution, but into the Union of the States, with the rights, etc., of citizens of the United States. And there is a like clause in the Treaty with Spain in 1819 in the resign of the Elevides.

the cession of the Floridas.

"The alliance of the States," as Washington then expressed it, is now complete. This alliance was a "Confederate Republic," as declared by Randolph, Ellsworth, and Varnum, a committee of Congress appointed to prepare an exposition of the confederation, to devise a plan for its complete execution, and to present supplemental articles.

Conceiving the defects in the Articles of Confederation, upon the disbanding of the army, Washington addressed a circular to the governor of every State, in which he used the following language: "It is indispensable to the happiness of the individual States that there should be lodged somewhere a supreme power to regulate and govern the general affairs of the confederated republic, without which the Union can not be of long duration, and everything must very rapidly tend to anarchy and confusion."

The Federation of the United States had no prototype which had equaled it. It had no parallel in history which can compare with it, even it it was not adequate to the then condition of the States.

It was a matter of no disputation at that early date that the chief defect of the Confederation under its articles was, that it acted upon political bodies, while the present Constitution operates upon natural persons. The Congress of the Confederation represented the States, not the people of the States, so that their enactments were merely requests for enforcement by the States. Under the present Constitution the people are represented in the House.

The Articles of Confederation had provided that-

Each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right, which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled.

The changes subsequently made in the Constitution were not changes in the foundation of the Union, but in the superstructure of the system of government. They are now, as they have been from the beginning, united confederated States, and the union entered into by them is in the nature of a confederated republic. The parties to the Articles of Confederated free, sovereign, and independent political communitiesernment over its own citizens which any political society can possess," "By this instrument these society is the control of th possessing within itself all the powers of legislation and gov-"By this instrument these several States became united for certain purposes." It style was "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States," and its name was "The United States of America." As I said before, article 2 provided that each State retains its sovereignty, free dom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by this Confederacy expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled." In the title of the articles the names of the States were distinctly set forth. In the concrete, it was a league for mutual defense. As early as December, 1779, Virginia, alarmed at some unwise legislation of Congress, resolved, in its legislature, that these enactments would establish a "dangerous precedent against the authority of the legislature and the sovereignty of the separate States.

The time had arrived for the establishment of a vigorous Federal Government for thirteen distinct communities; "a Government that should not destroy the political sovereignty of the States and should yet introduce a new sovereignty formed by means of powers whose surrender by the States, instead of weakening their present strength, would rather develop and increase it."

In 1787 Congress resolved that a convention be held for "the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation and reporting to Congress and the several legislatures such alterations and provisions therein as shall, when agreed to by Congress and confirmed by the States, render the Federal Government adequate to the exigencies of government and the preservation of the Union." It was never contemplated to change the confederate system.

With this view, the convention to revise and amend the Articles of Confederation and to establish a firmer General Government, met in Philadelphia on the 14th of May, 1787. That convention has been styled as "the wisest in the world." Its letter of attorney, from the constituent elements which the delegates represented, was clear and concise in its character.

"The government of every State was to be preserved, and so far as its original powers were to be transferred to the General Government its authority over its own citizens and within its own territory must, from the nature of political sovereignty, be supreme." Two supreme powers in the same country, operating upon the same individuals and both possessing the general attributes of sovereignty, but each operating upon different objects.

In the language of Mr. Mason in the convention, "the State Legislatures ought to have some means of defending themselves against the encroachment of the National Government. And what better means can we provide than to make them a constituent part of the National Government." In this way the States, as States, have their place in the new Constitution.

The greater reason now for the existence of the States is found in our vast expanse of country. Every attempt to change the federative character of the Republic met the most strenuous resistance. To a remark of Randolph, that the States ought to be one nation, Paterson of New Jersey replied:

The idea of a National Government, as contradistinguished from a Federal one, never entered into the mind of any of the States. If the States are, as States, still to continue in union they must be considered as equals. Thirteen sovereign and independent States can never constitute one nation and at the same time be States.

"If we are to be formed into a nation, the States, as States, must be abolished," as Ellsworth said.

Without the existence and cooperation of the States, a republican Government can not be supported over so great an extent of country. We know that the people of the States are strongly attached to their own constitutions. If you hold up a system of general government, destructive of their constitutional rights, they will oppose it. The only chance we have to support a general government is to graft it on the State governments.

State governments.

The word "national" was excluded from the Constitution because it might seem to present the idea of the union of the people without bringing into view that the one Republic was formed out of many States. "E Pluribus Unum" is a motto which speaks for itself. Toward foreign powers we may be classed as a nation. being one of the "family of nations," in regard to all matters of international law, treaty making, and the like. The Constitution spoke for the States, and on the question of agreeing to the engrossed Constitution, all the States answered "aye," and Alexander Hamilton, in a bold, plain hand, successively inserted on the great sheet of parchment, the name of each State, as the delegations one after another, came forward, in geographical order and signed the Constitution.

The seventh article provided that the ratifications of the conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same. Done in convention by the unanimous consent of the States present, etc.

Again, the very fact that the framers of the Constitution by the adoption of the principle of an equal State representation in the Senate furnished conclusive evidence of their recognition of the nature of the Government as of a Confederate Republic. Nothing is plainer as to the determination of the States to retain the power of distinct, equal, separate sovereignties in all matters not surrendered to the General Government than in their insistence, in reference to the treaty-making power, that the consent of two-thirds of the Senators present should be necessary to the ratification of a treaty. A bare majority was not to make a treaty the supreme law of the land. In the preamble to the Constitution it begins, "We, the people of the United States," and has been used as an argument in favor of a National Government that the mission of the separate States by name, as in the articles of confederation, denoted a change in the constituent elements of the two instruments; but it would not have done to have named the States in the Constitution, as it was not known by the convention what States would constitute the nine necessary to make the Constitution effective by subsequent ratification.

Mr. Madison, in answer to Patrick Henry, in explanation of those words said, that the people referred to was not the people, as composing one great society, but the people composing thirteen sovereignties. A majority of the people could not establish it; but it was to be binding only on the people of a State by their own separate consent. The Government of the Union is a government of these people in their several States; it emanates from them; its powers are granted by them and are to be exercised for their benefit. And so, the people are recognized by representation in the House, and the States by the Bancroft, in his History of the Constitution of the United States, declared it to be "a complete outline of a Federal Republic." The Government of the United States. public." The Government of the United States is the representative of the people of the States, with its powers specially enumerated in the Constitution, and delegated to that Government. But beyond this the States, severally, have their own separate governments, which are the organs, as to all other powers of government not otherwise delegated, and these, without enumeration, are the reserved or residuary powers inherent in the States or in the people thereof. It is not essential to catalogue them in this presence. They are as simple as the The question seems to have been taken out of the realm of disputation by the amendments to the Constitution proposed by Congress, and ratified by the legislatures of the several States, in pursuance of the fifth article of the original Constitution, which amendments are contained in twelve articles, and the tenth declared in no ambiguous terms that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people-that is, the same people who adopted the Constitution, namely the people of the States.

In my judgment the Government is one in the nature of a confederated republic, established by the States, by the people of the States, and not by the aggregated people of the United States.

It differs from the confederacy only in providing a stronger federal power, in that it established a government in place of a congress, which had no power to enforce its acts; in abandoning a reliance upon the constituent States to furnish voluntarily the means to execute the resolves of the Congress, and instead substituting powers to operate upon individuals in the several States by machinery essential to the life of a republic.

It has been asserted, whether true or false I know not, that Gladstone, speaking of our Constitution, remarked:

As the British constitution is the most subtle organism which proceeded from progressive history, so the American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

Nor was it a far-fetched compliment. In the language of another may I say:

For the first time in history an elaborate written constitution was applied to a federation. The details were so skilfully arranged that the instrument framed for thirteen little agricultural communities works well in forty-five large, populous States.

In the language of Mr. Jefferson, it is our duty to—support the State governments in all their rights, as the most competent administration of our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies: the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad.

From these sources of information in my early manhood I concluded that the structure of our Federal Government was in the nature of a confederated republic, and with all the light of subsequent discussion I have not wandered from that conviction one hair's breadth. Complex in its form, I admit, but its complexity is not so inscrutable that the mind of ordinary intelligence can not grasp what relates to the General Government and what belongs to the respective constituent States or the people.

A great and honored lawyer, holding high place in the affairs of this country, in a recent address upon the thesis of "What is to be the future of the States of the Union under our dual system of constitutional government" has given utterance to sentiments so plainly at war with the provisions of the Constitution in regard to the powers of the General Government and the reserved rights of the States that I felt it my duty, representing in part on this floor one of the original thirteen States forming the Union, to call the attention of the Senate and the counto the dangerous tendency of such views, coming from so exalted a source. In reading that address one would suppose that the centralizing and aristocratic scheme of Alexander Hamilton had been adopted by the "great convention," instead Hamilton had been adopted by the "great convention," instead of the Constitution of the United States, with its democratic form of a republic. His speech revives the painful recollection of a discredited and rejected plan of government of a statesman whose ideas were of monarchial tendencies. The beautiful description of our beloved country, the advance in science and art, invention and trade, rapid transit and telephone communication, was worthy of the erudite word painter and the ripe scholar, but in the political changes of sentiment, which he depicted as existing now, he drew largely on poetic license.

It is error to suppose that in the States the devotion to home rule or the opposition to Federal usurpation has abated one jot or tittle from its intensity as in the days of our fathers. I challenge the proof that "we are urging forward in a development of business and social life, which tends more and more to the obliteration of State lines and the decrease of State power." wish, I fear, is father to the thought. No doubt, there are disciples of the school of Hamilton, who would invade the region of the reserved rights of the States in controlling insurance, divorces, child labor, and the like, which belong exclusively to the cognizance of the several States. But let us consider this statement:

It may be that such control could better be exercised in particular instances by the governments of the States, but the people will have the control they need either from the States or from the National Government, and if the States fall to furnish it in due measure, sooner or later, constructions of the Constitution will be found to vest the power where it will be exercised—in the National Government.

No suggested change here in the constitutional fabric of our governmental organization by the process of amendments or a constitutional convention, such as framed the present Constitution, but by a construction of the Constitution in its original form the power coveted will be vested "in the National Government." Read in the light of another address delivered in October last, by one higher in authority than the distinguished orator just referred to, and for whom in his official character I entertain a high regard and from whose well-earned wreath of laurel I would not pluck a leaf, it is not difficult to see where the apt construction, if at all, is to be found:

In some cases this governmental action must be exercised by the several States individually. In yet others it has become increasingly evident that no efficient State action is possible, and that we need through Executive action, through legislation, and through judicial interpretation and construction of law to increase the power of the Federal Government.

Speaking of the lamented Lincoln he said:

He developed even before Marshall the doctrine (absolutely essential, not merely to the efficiency, but to the existence of this nation) that an inherent power rested in the nation, outside of the enumerated powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, in all cases where the object involved was beyond the power of the several States.

I can not yield allegiance to the soundness of any such doctrine. Even Daniel Webster, in his reply to Hayne of South Carolina, in the famous debate between those parliamentary gladiators, admitted that the General Government possesses those powers only which it can be shown were conferred by the terms of the Constitution and no more. All the rest belong to the State governments of the people themselves. The Federal Government exercises strictly delegated powers and can have no right to intrench on the reserved powers of the States. Its powers, being limited, are to be strictly construed. Again, from the same address:

the same address:

It is the narrow construction of the powers of the National Government which in our democracy has proved the chief means of limiting the natural power to cut out abuses. * * Many legislative actions and many judicial decisions, which I am confident time will show to have been erroneous and a damage to the country would have been avoided if our legislators and jurists had approched the matter of enacting and construing the laws of the land in the spirit of your great Pennsylvanian, Justice Wilson—in the spirit of Marshall and Washington. Such decisions put us at a great disadvantage in the battle for industrial order as against, at present, industrial chaos.

The legislative or judicial actions and decisions of which I complain, be it remembered, do not really leave to the States power to dear with corporate wealth in business.

Can the "construction" which is to allow the Federal Government to invade the province of the State be looked for in the judiciary, where few men can be found to bend the knee that thrift may follow fawning? Does it fall within the compass of belief that it can be found in that noble band of judges who are inspired by the dignity of their high office, and whose power in the judicial department is described by John Hay Brown, justice of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, in these ringing words:

How transcendent is its authority to mark the limits of executive and legislative power; to administer the laws and give commands, not only to individuals, but to President and Congress; to sit in judgment on the proceedings and privileges of the sovereign States, and to give final form and effect to the great charter of the Union, on which the rights, the peace, the harmony, the prosperity, safety, and honor of the whole country depend.

Oh, no; it must not and can not be! So, to quote that fearless justice once again:

When, under delegated powers committed to the General Government, Congress attempts to do, even with the approval of the President, what the people will not permit it to do, but one power on earth can save the country from the consequence of legislative wandering beyond constitutional limits—the Federal judiciary.

No proposition is more hostile to the wishes of the great masses of the people than that of extension of the powers of the General Government and for consolidation or accumulation in the Federal Government of the powers properly belonging to the States. No suggestion, in my judgment, could be more odious, as it was in the past, nor is it now less hateful in the present condition of the country. It has not even the charm of novelty. During the contests between the Federalists and the Republicans, in 1800, the leaders of the then schools of political thought were Marshall and Hamilton on the one side and on the other the State's rights men, Jefferson and Madison, and the key to the triumph of either was then mooted to be in the Supreme Court.

One idea was to have adopted an amendment to the Constitution changing the tenure of the judges for life to four or six years; the other was to accomplish, by the appointment of enough judges to outvote Marshall and his Federalist companions, or by the alteration of the judiciary acts to impair seriously the activity of the Supreme Court. Such were the frantic cries of the frenzied partisans of that heated period; but to the honor of the Republicans of that day, Jefferson would have none of it, but trampled under foot such revolutionary suggestions.

I feel confident that the wise distribution of powers between the General and State Governments are amply sufficient to protect us from the supposed dangerous tendencies of the times, if the sovereign people of the States, upon whom both governments rest for safety, will take warning in time and resist with reason the errors of such political thought.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.
Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a few minutes?
Mr. GALLINGER. With great pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask leave to have printed in the Record certain papers which I will mention presently. They relate to the resolution which is pending, introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], but I do not intend at this time to discuss that resolution further. Nor is it my purpose to discuss now the amendment to that resolution proposed yesterday by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Black-BURN], not only proposed, but written entirely by that distinguished Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly. Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is merely with reference to the Senator's request that certain documents be printed in the Record.

Personally I have no objection, but I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that is not in accordance with the customary procedure of the Senate. I suggest to the Senator that he suspend the request in any event until the Senator from Ohio is present. I am not personally concerned about it, but I have heard several Senators object heretofore when similar requests have been made.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think-of course my experience here is limited-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The same as mine; exactly.
Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think that my request runs counter to any rule or custom of the Senate in this regard. The papers to which I refer are included in documents already printed by order of the Senate, and I simply desire to print certain of them in the RECORD in order that the people of the country may have the benefit of what they contain.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator from Texasand I am not going to press any objection at all, because I am not concerned about it—the propriety at least of suspending his request until the Senator from Ohio is here.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know whether I will have another opportunity to-day, and there is nothing, as I conceive, which could possibly work any discourtesy to the Senator from Ohio in this respect.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, they are simply extracts or excerpts from documents already printed by the Senate. Mr. CULBERSON. From documents already printed by the Senate. Mr. GALLINGER. I should think there could be no objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state them in order that what they are may appear in my statement. The first refers to what action was taken by the War Department and the Department of Justice to secure to the accused soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry full protection under the law. The second is the testimony of witnesses, which was taken under the supervision of the Assistant Attorney-General recently at Brownsville, and includes the testimony of the following witnesses: Sanborn, Schrieber, Mrs. Cowen, Gertrude Cowen, Mrs. Leahy, Mrs. Parks, Mr. Odin and his wife, and all the testimony on the subject of the rifles, bullets, etc., given by the experts of the Ordnance Department of the Army. Those constitute the matters I desire to have printed in the Record, so that the people of the country, as well as the Senators here, may have the benefit of the testimony in reference to this subject,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The papers referred to are as follows:

MILITARY SECRETARY, War Department, Washington, D. C.:

Following telegrams received from Brownsville this date:

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, CAMP MABRY, Austin, Tex.:

Austin, Tex.:

Have placed three sergeants, three corporals, and six privates in confinement in guardhouse here on warrants issued by Judge Wells, of charge of murder, conspiring to murder, etc., to be kept in confinement until required by judge. I do not believe these men will have unbiased trial here. An effort, in my opinion, should be made to have them tried elsewhere. I also fear for their safety if turned over to civil authorities, in case of mob violence, although authorities assure absolute protection. Feeling here still very bitter. Request opinion on my action.

PENROSE, Commanding.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 23.

CHIEF OF STAFF, CAMP MABEY, Austin, Tex.:

Austin, Tex.:

Battalion Twenty-fifth will probably get away to-night. Warrants have been issued for murder, conspiracy to murder, etc., against three sergeants, three corporals, six privates, and one ex-soldier. They will be turned over to post commander. Captain Preston, Twenty-sixth Infantry, for safe-keeping, and placed in post guardhouse until required by district judge. Don't know when this will be; probably early part of next month; possibly earlier. Authorities pledge themselves able to keep prisoners from violence. Feeling here high.

BLOCKSOM, Major.

In view of the excited state of feeling among citizens at Brownsville, I recommend that the Department of Justice be asked to take immediate steps for proper defense of these men, and that a change of venue be secured to some locality not affected by local excitement. I do not believe that the lives of these men will be safe if they are turned over to the civil authorities at Brownsville, nor will their witnesses be safe if sent back to that place. In view of present feeling, action looking to the immediate transfer of these men to another place of confinement pending trial is urged.

WILLIAM LOEB, Jr., Secretary to the President, Oyster Bay, N. Y.:

Scoretary to the President, Oyster Bay, N. Y.:

Commanding general, Department of Texas, reports warrants issued by civil authorities at Brownsville for twelve enlisted men in connection with disturbance there. Accised men now under guard at post, to be held until wanted by civil authorities. Commanding general recommends they be transferred and held elsewhere. Reports from Texas indicate that civil authorities can not now protect accused men from mob violence. Have consulted with Acting Attorney-General Robb. Acting Judge-Advocate-General Crowder, and General Bell. We all agree that accused men should be sent immediately to San Antonio and held there until Government can have reasonable assurance that they will receive protection and fair trial at hands of civil authorities. We think it unsafe to leave accused at Fort Brown, with only one white company of forty-eight men to protect them.

We also fear that turning them over to civil authorities at Browns ville now or in immediate future would be disastrous to them. Train is now waiting at Brown to take battalion Twenty-fifth Infantry to Fort Reno. Okla. We strongly recommend that battalion take accused men with it to San Antonio and turn them over to military authorities there, to be confined and guarded until they can be turned over to civil authorities safely. Battalion to proceed to Fort Reno immediately upon delivering prisoners at San Antonio. Please get President's decision at earliest possible moment and rush answer to this, as train is waiting at Fort Brown and battalion ready to embark. In present excited state of feeling in Brownsville further delay in movement may make trouble.

Because of facts enumerated in your telegram of August 24, I entirely approve of the action you propose to take. Meanwhile the battalion will proceed to Fort Reno immediately on delivering prisoners at San Antonio. Act immediately

COMMANDING OFFICER, Fort Brown, Tex.:

Commanding Officer, Fort Brown, Tex.:

Confidential. All men of Twenty-fifth Infantry who are now in custody of military authorities, including those for whom warrants have been issued by civil authorities, will be sent immediately with battalion to Fort Sam Houston and delivered to military authorities there. They will be held there until they can be turned over safely to civil authorities. Battalion will remain at Fort Sam Houston until sufficient white troops reach there to guard and protect prisoners. Battalion will then proceed immediately to Fort Reno. This movement of accused men should not be announced in advance, and should be made so as to avoid attracting attention or bringing on conflict with civil authorities. There is no intention of taking these men beyond jurisdiction of State of Texas or of withholding them from civil authorities a moment beyond time when they can be turned over safely. It is not believed safe to leave them at Fort Brown, as the one company to be left there is insufficient to do work of shipping property and supplies and at same time guard prisoners so as to prevent their escape or protect them if need be. You can make this explanation if it becomes necessary. The President himself directs the action herein ordered. You are authorized to make all necessary arrangements with rallroad companies without referring matter to higher authority, and to arrange for holding train at San Antonio for reembarkation of battalion. Make movement quietly and discreetly. By all means avoid conflict if possible, but see that accused men and battalion are protected from violence during movement. Instructions have been whred to department commander, if possible, to have troops meet your train at San Antonio and relieve you of accused men, so that you can proceed direct to Fort Reno. Communicate with department commander at Camp Mabry, if possible. Start your movement at earliest possible moment.

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS, Laredo, Tex., September 6, Southern District of Texas,

Laredo, Tex., September 6, 1906.

Hon. WM. H. Moody,

Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

Sir: I beg leave to submit the following report covering my investigations in the matter of the negro soldiers at Brownsville, Tex.:

August 28, ultimo, I received a telegram from United States Attorney McLemore requesting me to go at once to Brownsville, Tex., "consult with military and civil authorities and report in detail situation and facts whether in your opinion accused soldiers can now get fair trial at Brownsville and be afforded protection by civil authorities against mob violence; if not, whether civil authorities will consent to change of venue, * * * report to Attorney-General." I immediately started for Brownsville via Monterey and Matamoras, Mexico, being the quickest route. I was fortunate on my journey to encounter several prominent persons who had been in Brownsville, it began a series of questions with them as well as others I met who could give me information on these points. After arrival in Brownsville, I began a series of questions with them as well as others I met who could give me information on these points. After arrival in Brownsville I interrogated and consulted the military officer making an inspection for the War Department, Major Blastock [Blocksom], county judge, mayor of Brownsville, chairman of the citizens' protection committee, ex-district judge, collector of customs, inspector of customs, and citizens generally, poor, rich, and indifferent races, endeavoring, as nearly as possible, to feel the pulse of the entire body corporate, and judge of the sentiment existing.

I found the officials, and with very few exceptions all the citizens most frank and courteous in expressing their views and opinions on the matter, and I had no difficulty in determining that such a prejudice existed against the accused negro soldiers that a fair trial or any trial could not be obtained in Cameron County. In fact, some of the best citizens expressed the wish that the soldiers m

Were the accused to be taken back to Brownsville for trial, should indictments be found, and such trial result in an acquittal, I fear, unless the accused were well guarded, there might be trouble before they could reach a place of safety. The city of Brownsville, without doubt, has suffered a terrible and unreasonable attack by soldiers, who should have acted just the opposite in affording them protection, and they are righteously indignant. As my instructions did not include a finding of the facts concerning the attack and the crime committed, I presume it is not desired. If, however, details of the attack and facts connected are desired, it can readily be had from the War Department from Inspector-General, as Major Blastock [Blocksom] and I know that he was very careful in gathering an unbiased mass of information and facts.

The chances are that unless the soldiers clean up their own quarters, or turn State's evidence, no conviction can ever be had of the guilty who have caused the disturbance and trouble.

I trust that I have fully covered the information desired in this report and have the honor of being,

Your obedient servant,

Assistant United States Attorney.

A. C. HAMILTON, Assistant United States Attorney.

TESTIMONY.

1. Testimony with reference to the assembling of the soldiers, the shooting from the barracks behind the garrison wall, the climbing over the garrison wall, and the shooting into houses on the Garrison road.

Mr. F. A. H. Sanborn was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. Mr. Sanborn, do you reside in the city of Brownsville?—A. Yes,

Mr. F. A. H. Sanborn was nist duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. Mr. Sanborn, do you reside in the city of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived here?—A. I can not give you the exact date now, but for more than thirty years.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am manager of the Western Union telegraph office.

Q. And where in this city is your office located?—A. At the extreme lower end of Elizabeth street, just facing the garrison wall.

Q. Right opposite the gate to the barracks?—A. Yes; it is the last building on Elizabeth street, opposite the gate through the wall.

Q. Were you at your home on the night of the 13th of August of this year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear the firing during that night?—A. Yes.

Q. About what time?—A. Shortly before 12 o'clock, I should say. I don't know that I thought to look at the time when I got up. I was already in bed and sound asleep and was awakened.

Q. Where did the firing seem to be?—A. It seemed to me, from the sound and the nearness of it, that it was right in front of the garrison gate, outside the wall—right near my window—near the small entrance gate to the garrison.

Q. When you were aroused from your sleep at that time what did you do?—A. I was so confused, and the firing was so near me and so heavy, that I could not form any idea of what was going on, and I could not find a match with which to light my lamp, and it was four or five minutes before I could realize what was happening.

Q. Did you make a light?—A. I did not until some time after that.

Q. What did you do then, after you got up and made a search for a light?—A. I went back, before I lighted the lamp, and opened the bilinds—the window was opened and the blinds closed—and looked through them, and then I saw one colored soldier, who came up right by the wall and went through the small garrison gate.

Q. What did you do see him after he passed through the gate?—A. He came from the direction of the alley, where I afterwards hear

O. Do you know from your soldiers about his size stationed here at that time reasonable soldiers about his size stationed here at that time reasonable soldiers about his size stationed here at that time reasonable soldiers about how many minutes elapsed?—A. I should not suppose that it was more than five minutes.

and the time you saw this soldier enter the gate, about now many minutes elapsed?—A. I should not suppose that it was more than five minutes.

Q. What about the firing during that time?—A. Well, by the time that I looked through the blinds the firing had about ceased in front of me and I heard them firing back of me, up the alley. The first firing was so near me that it seemed as if I could almost feel the concussion.

Q. Then it receded and you heard it in the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many shots would you judge, approximately, that you heard fired there from the beginning to the end?—A. I do not know: it would have to be a rough guess; but I think in the first firing right near me there must have been five or six, and afterwards I was some distance away from it and I did not try to keep count of them; however, I know there were a good many fired.

Q. Was there anyone in the upper part of that building in which you were located at that time?—A. Yes; the proprietor of the building and his wife—Mr. and Mrs. Rendall.

Q. Now, after you looked out of the window and saw this soldier going through the gate, what did you do then?—A. I came out into the office—I had communicating doors between the office and my room—and opened the end door, toward the garrison, and looked out; and a few minutes later, or, rather, before I opened the door, I heard the alarm.

Q. The call to arms?—A. Yes, sir. Then I opened my door and stood in it.

Q. Were you alone at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you see then?—A. I saw the officers coming over across the parade to the barracks, went into the quarters, heard them arouse the men, and afterwards I heard the roll call. I don't know where the company was formed, but from my hearing everything so plainly they must have been formed in the rear of the barracks or on the walks between the barracks.

Q. Where did you first observe the officers with lanterns?—A. I saw them come across the parade.

XLI-83

Q. Could you see them when they left their residences on the other side of the parade ground?—A. No; I did not see them until they got over near the soldiers' barracks.

Q. They went into the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then the soldiers came out?—A. Yes.

Q. And then officers formed in line, I presume?—A. Yes.

Q. The firing had ceased at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. After you came out on the porch did you hear any firing up in the town?—A. No; I think it had ceased.

Q. You don't recall any shots?—A. No, sir; I do not recall any.

Q. At the time you were there on your porch watching the roll call did you know or had you any idea of what had taken place in the town that evening?—A. No; it was a perfect surprise to me, and that was why I was so much confused, and when I first saw this colored soldier with his gun it made no impression on me, and finally I concluded that there must have been some trouble between the police and the soldiers.

Q. You formed that impression there at the time from what you saw?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you did not know that anyone had been assassinated or that any houses had been fired into?—A No; not until the next morning.

Q. About how long did you stay out on the porch there?—A. I stayed there until they called the roll and things had quieted down, and then I went back to bed.

Q. During that time did you see any citizens upon the streets?—A. No. I looked up Main street, but I saw no excitement.

Q. Did you see any colored soldiers, other than the one you have designated, go back into the fort?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you, from where you were, see the entire length of the wall?—A. No; not so as to be able to distinguish anyone, although it was not a very dark night.

Q. Did it occur to you to look to see whether any soldiers were coming back?—A. No.

Q. Then, as I understand you, the soldiers might have returned down the alley back of your residence and gotten over the wall without your having seen them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, as I understand in Butler's expedition in New Orleans I was d

and—

Q. You have been here, then, since the civil war?—A. Yes, sir. I served all through the war as a telegrapher and in the telegraph corps, although I was a member of the Army. I was the only one of several that were detailed that served in the Army; kept my name on the roll. We had had the choice to be discharged and be borne on the rolls without pay.

Q. Now, Mr. Sanborn, is there anything that you think of which occurred that night (the 13th of August, 1906) here in Brownsville, concerning which I have not interrogated you, with reference to which you care to make a statement?—A No, sir; I don't think there is.

Q. Have you stated all that you know about that occurrence here?—A. Yes, sir; all that came to my personal knowledge.

Q. Was the house in which you were living that night fired into?—A. There was one shot through the upper story. I was told by Mr. Rendall that it went through the mosquito bar.

Q. Have you seen the mark of the shot since that time?—A. No; I have not examined it. I saw it from a distance.

Q. I call your attention, Mr. Sanborn, to "Exhibit A," which is a fire-insurance plat of that portion of the city of Brownsville adjacent to the fort, and ask you whether this building located at the corner of Elizabeth street and the road is the building in which you were on that evening?—A. That is exactly the location of the building; that plat may have been made before the house you refer to was built, but that is the location exactly. [Indicated by figure 1.]

Q. Calling your attention to this building marked "1" on the plat, your bedroom is in what portion of that building?—A. The rear portion of that building marked "1", toward the fort.

Q. And where was the place that you sat while you watched the soldlers assemble?—A. The door, midway in the front portion of the building.

Q. Facing toward the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Facing toward the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Both of those are located on the first floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Clerk District Court, Cameron County, Tex.

Herman Schrieber was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:
Q. What is your full name?—A. Herman Schrieber.
Q. Do you live in the town of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How old are you?—A. I am 20 now.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. I just get work here any place; have no set trade.
Q. You live with your mother, Mrs. Wallace, at the corner of Fifteenth and Washington streets?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And were living there on the 13th of August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. In what room were you sleeping on that night?—A. I was sleeping in the southwest corner room, toward the garrison.
Q. Were you asleep at the time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you in bed at the time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, you may state what you heard there that night.—A. Just about ten minutes of 12, when the first shots were fired, I got out of bed and walked out on the corner of the sidewalk; I could see them firing toward the river into the town.
Q. Where were the men that were doing the firing standing?—A. Inside the garrison wall; between the barracks and the garrison wall, inside.

Q. Where were you standing at that time?—A. I was standing right outside the house, about 15 feet from the gate of the house where I was Staying.

Q. About how many shots did you see fired at that time?—A. Couple of volleys.

Q. What did you do then?—A. While I was standing out there I heard two bullets buzzing by; I heard it hit something, and as I thought it was right by me I went back into the house.

Q. That was the first time you supposed that the people who were doing the firing were firing ball cartridges?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Before that what did you think it meant?—A. I did not know what it meant or what it was about.

Q. But when you heard this bullet come into the vicinity of your house you then went back into your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear firing after that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From what direction?—A. Like it was coming up toward town.

Q. Can you locate more particularly, from the sound of the shooting, that it was coming up toward town?—A. It seemed to be right about that alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets.

Q. You went back into the house then and stayed there all night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You went back into the house then and stayed there all night?—
A. Yes, sir.
Q. With your mother?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I presume that she was quite frightened also?—A. She was.
Q. Why did you not go out on the street after that to see what had happened?—A. My mother would not let me.
Q. In other words, from what you and she had seen that night, you concluded that there was something unusual happening in town?—A. Yes, sir. Q. In other words, from what you and she had seen that night, you concluded that there was something unusual happening in town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And she felt that it was not safe for you to be out?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, did you hear any noises other than the firing over at the garrison on that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe that noise.—A. They were saying something about "Where is that damn stuff," or, "Get it agoing."

Q. Where were you when you heard them say that?—A. I was walking in the house.

Q. That was after you had been out on the sidewalk listening to the firing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you tell where the persons were who said, "Get that damn stuff," or something similar to that?—A. It sounded to me as if it was in the second quarters from the river.

Q. You did not know what they meant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you tell whether or not there were soldiers out upon the porches of the barracks at that time?—A. No, sir; I never noticed; it was a little dark at the time.

Q. Did you hear anything that would indicate that there were soldiers?—A. Yes; I heard walking on the porches.

Q. You say you heard running up and down on the porches?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you went inside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then you went inside?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how long after the first firing that you heard—and that was while you were in the house—did the bugle sound?—A. It came right after the shots.

Testimony with reference to the course of the raiders from the Garrison road, up the alley to Fourteenth street, where they shot into the Coven house, the Garza house, and the rear of the Leahy Hotel.

Mrs. Anna Adrienne Cowen was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. What is your full name?—A. Anna Adrienne Cowen.

Q. Mrs. Cowen, you live in the city of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you live with your husband and your family in your dwelling house on Fourteenth street next to the alley?—A. Yes; for nearly twenty years.

twenty years.
Q. You were in your house on the night of August 13, 1906?—A. Yes,

Q. You were in your house on the hight of August 19, sir.
Q. I believe that a party was taking place in your house during the early part of that evening and until late?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. A party of young people?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. About what time did the children leave your home on that evening?—A. After taps; they wanted to stay until 12, but one or two that lived farther away had to leave earlier; they went after 11 o'clock.
Q. You remember the shooting that occurred in the vicinity of your home on that evening?—A. Perfectly.
Q. When the firing first commenced, where were you in your house?—A. I was sitting right here at the end of the dinner table where I am sitting now.

Q. When the firing first commenced, where were you in your house?—A. I was sitting right here at the end of the dinner table where I am sitting now.

Q. That is, in the middle room in the rear of your house?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were your children at that time?—A. I had three lying in that room [indicating], west of the dining room.

Q. Where were the rest of the children?—A. My boy was in his room, the one east of the dining room nearest the alley, and the baby was sitting in his chair in my bedroom, the northwest room.

Q. Now, Mrs. Cowen, where was the shooting located?—A. Undeniably in the post. I knew from the start that it was the negroes and that it was a riot, I thought, between the Mexican police and the soldiers, and that they had had a clash.

Q. Now, with reference to your home, in which direction did the firing appear to be?—A. The firing seemed to be from the direction of the post—did not seem, I knew it.

Q. About how many shots did you hear before they came near you?—A. Ten or more.

Q. Did you still remain in your dining room?—A. Yes; until the shooting came right to us in the alley.

Q. You did not see the soldiers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear them?—A. A. Just as soon as the firing came right on us so that I could not be mistaken that they were shooting at our house, I gathered up the children and hurried them under the bed in my room, the northwest room. We had had the windows open and my servant girl kept trying to close them during the firing. She saw the soldiers and she heard them talk, and she was at the door lindicating], not 3 feet—

Q. Where were you when the lamp on the table was shot out?—A. In my bedroom.

Q. Was this dining-room light the only light in this room?—A. Yes.

Q. In what other rooms were there lights?—A. In the hall there was a large Rochester hanging lamp.

Q. Was there a light in your boy's room?—A. No.

Q. Was there a light in your bront room?—A. No.

Q. Was there a light in your front room?—A. No.

Q. And you were in there when the shooting was going on in the ley?—A. Yes; when they were firing directly on us—in there with alley?—A. Y alley?—A. Ies; when they were arms that the last shot was over?—A. Yes. Q. You remained in there until after the last shot was over?—A. Yes. Q. Could you tell where the shots were going?—A. We could hear the bullets whizzing; we could smell the powder, and were almost suffocated by it, and it seemed as if the walls themselves shook.

Q. Where did the firing seem to be after it had ceased in the alley?—

A. I concluded that they ran uptown.

Q. And you did not hear any firing uptown, then, after the firing ceased here?—A. I could not tell you of any more than what happened in my house.

in my house.

Q. When did you make an examination of the bullet holes in your house?—A. When this lamp was blown out the girl crawled to my bedroom and said nothing about the lamp, but she did remark to me, "They have broken the wardrobe glass," and when the firing stopped she got up, went to the front door and looked out, and I heard voices across the street, and I called out, "Oh, Katie, is that you?" and I said, "We have nearly been killed over here," and I thought then that the wardrobe had been the only thing struck. We had not gotten up at all.

said, "We have nearly been killed over here," and I thought then that the wardrobe had been the only thing struck. We had not gotten up at all.

Q. Did you and the children then go over to the Leahy Hotel?—A. Yes; and stayed there all night.

Q. When did you come over and make an examination?—A. That same night, about 1 o'clock or so in the morning.

Q. Now, Mrs. Cowen, will you state where the bullet holes are located in your dining room and in your boy's bedroom?—A. There are about ten in my boy's room, about 4 or 5 feet from the ground. Five shots are within 2 or 3 inches of each other.

Q. That is, in the east window of your boy's room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With respect to the dining room, where are they?—A. There is one the same height, about 4 feet. It came through the window and broke the glass and then broke the lamp on the dining-room table. That came from the alley. These shots, when they came into these rooms, traveled from one room to the other.

Q. And they went through the various partitions of the house?—A. Yes. There are ten bullet holes in the children's room (southwest corner of the house), four over their bed, about 6 feet above the floor.

Q. Now, these bullet holes that we see in the children's bedroom were evidentily made by the same bullets that entered the house through your boy's bedroom?—A. Yes; I suppose so.

Q. And about how many bullets entered these three rooms of your house?—A. We counted ten in all. Then we have several in the fence outside.

O. Now, the next morning, did you find any bullets in the house?—

O. And about how many bullets entered these three rooms of your house?—A. We counted ten in all. Then we have several in the fence outside.

Q. Now, the next morning, did you find any bullets in the house?—A. Yes; several. I found these [exhibiting several battered bullets] in the different rooms.

Q. Now, Mrs. Cowen, you do not know, of your own knowledge, as to who did this shooting?—A. No; I know it was soldiers, but do not know which ones.

Q. You make that statement from the fact that you heard the firing over at the barracks?—A. Oh, undenlably.

Q. And they came up the alley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got into that further room as soon as you realized what was happening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no idea, until the glass was broken in the door of the wardrobe in your room, that they were firing on your house?—A. Oh, yes; we heard the bullets whizzing around, and the smell of powder was fierce. I knew that the bullets were coming in. I just felt like the next one was going to strike us, and I knew that the bullets were going inside of the house.

Q. Have you any idea why the soldiers fired into your house on that evening?—A. Simply because we happened to be the best target, was more accessible to the post, and our doors were open, and from the street they could see everything that was going on in our house.

Q. Neither you nor your husband nor any of the children had had any trouble with them?—A. No; never. The soldiers would often give my children bait when they would go fishing, and were very friendly. They never molested us and we saw very little of them; it was simply that we afforded them a good target that they shot at our house. We had just been home twelve days from San Antonio.

Q. Have you stated all that you know, of your own knowledge, with reference to what took place here in your house on the evening of the 13th of August. 1906?—A. Yes, sir. I was in my full senses and knew just what happened.

Gertrude Cowen (daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cowen) was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:
Q. Your name is Gertrude Cowen?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How old are you?—A. Seventeen.
Q. You were at your home on the night of the 13th of August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, will you go on and state, in your own words, all that you know about the shooting that took place here in the vicinity of your home on that night?—A. I was sitting in the dining room when the firing began.

know about the shooting that took place here in the vicinity of your home on that night?—A. I was sitting in the dining room when the firing began.

Q. Where was the firing located?—A. It sounded like it was inside the garrison; it was very fast. The servant girl closed the diningroom door and we ran around in the house, and the firing still sounded like it was in the alley; and then mamma told us to get under the bed and to pray to God to save us.

Q. So all you children got under the bed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you heard shooting in the alley here to the east of your house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. An unmber of shots?—A. Yes, sir. We could not count them, there were so many.

Q. And you did not attempt to count them, of course?—A. No, sir.

Q. Gertrude, did you see the glass taken out of the wardrobe door this morning in the northwest room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was found in back of the glass—between the glass and the wood?—A. That bullet that you have in your hand, marked with a star on the rear end of it.

Q. Who else was present at the time this bullet was found?—A. Eva, Major Blocksom, and papa. GERTRUDE COWEN.

Louis Harold Cowen (son of Mr. and Mrs. Cowen) was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:
Q. What is your name?—A. Louis Harold Cowen.
Q. You are the son of Mr. and Mrs. Cowen?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How old are you, Harold?—A. Eighteen.
Q. You were at your home on the night of the 13th of August?—A. Ses sir.

Yes, sir.

Q. And you were just recovering from an attack of typhoid fever at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had been at the party that evening?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any shooting that night?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you when the shooting first commenced?—A. In my room, which is the southeast room in the house.

Q. From which direction was the shooting?—A. It seemed to me like it was by the alley over toward the barracks.

Q. About how many shots did you hear fired?—A. I did not count them; there were a good many. They were shooting one right after the other in rapid succession.

Q. What were you doing at the time?—A. I was sitting down undressing when I first heard the shooting.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I went to the dining-room window and started to look out, but mama said for me not to and I didn't. When I heard that the shooting was coming nearer I came to the dining-room door.

room door.

Q. When the shooting kept coming nearer you went into the front

Q. When the shooting kept coming nearer you went into the front room?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And from there to the northwest room, your mother's room, and laid on the floor?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where was the shooting going on about that time?—A. They were shooting by Mr. Yturria's house in the alley, at the rear of our house, and each shot seemed to come nearer.
Q. And you were afraid that they might shoot into your house?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you hear any shooting after the parties got up to the east of your house, in the alley?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. About how many shoot did you hear from them?—A. I don't know, exactly: I guess about thirty.
Q. Did you know that your house was being shot into then?—A. No; I didn't have much idea what was being shot into.
Q. Where did the shooting appear to proceed to from there?—A. It seemed to me like I could hear one or two shots in front of our house, at the corner. The one that came from the corner was the one that went into mama's bedroom and broke the glass in the wardrobe door, I think.

went into mama's bedroom and broke the glass in the wardrooe door, I think.

Q. Then, after the shooting was over, where did you go?—A. Over to Mrs. Leahy's hotel, partly undressed—all of us went over—and stayed all night.

Q. Now, you have examined the bullet holes through these rear rooms, can you state, approximately, how many bullets entered the house?—A. About ten, that I could count.

Q. And those bullets have apparently gone through every room except the parlor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many rooms in the house were shot into?—A. Five.

Q. About what distance (height) from the floor did these bullets apparently go?—A. They were from about 3 feet to 5 feet high.

Q. How many persons were in the house when this shooting occurred?—A. Six of the family and the servant girl.

Q. You have stated all that you know, Harold, with reference to what took place on that night?—A. Yes.

Q. You, of course, were all very much frightened at the time the shooting started; and was your father away at the time?—A. Yes; uptown.

Q. And you reside in the city of Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you lived here?—A. I have lived here since Janu-1870.

When were you married?—A. I was married in 1886.
Who was your husband?—A. Michael Leahy.
Was he a soldier?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What regiment?—A. I believe it was the Eighth United States Cavalry.
Q. Was your husband in business here after he left the Army?—A. Yes; he ran a saloon.
Q. You have charge of a hotel here, do you not?—A. Yes, sir; I have been in that business about a year and nine months.
Q. Your hotel is located at the corner of Elizabeth and Fourteenth streets?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the rear of your hotel abuts on the alley between Elizabeth and Washington streets?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And is directly opposite Mr. Cowen's house on Fourteenth street?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were you at the time the shooting first began?—A. In my bedroom.

Q. And where is that located?—A. In the rear of my hotel, not very far from the alley, but facing on the yard.

Q. Do you know what time it was when you first heard the firing on that night?—A. Yes; it was five minutes of 12 by my clock.

Q. You had retired at that time?—A. No; I had just wound my clock when the shooting began, and I left my room and ran up to that window [indicating; the house referred to was just across the street from where testimony was being taken], and saw four of the shots as they were fired. They shot nine—I counted them—and then thirteen, and then a volley, and I went downstairs again and told my sister not to let the children get out of bed, and then walked out on the front street to see where the firing was. I knew the negroes were shooting bullets—I walked out on Elizabeth street and they flew around me. I went back upstairs and stayed in that window [indicating] and saw them shoot.

Q. That was the window of the room where Judge Park was?—A. No; this was a separate room. When I went upstairs, he had not

Q. That was the window of the room where Judge Park was?—
A. No; this was a separate room. When I went upstairs, he had not gotten up. I went back upstairs and hollered to him that the negroes were shooting up the town. Then he got up and went to his window, and so did Mr. Elkins. There were three windows facing on Fourteenth street.

Q. In whose more than the room of the roo

Q. In whose room was the window in your hotel nearest the alley, facing on Fourteenth street?—A. Mr. Elkins's.

Q. The second window from the alley was in whose room?—A. Judge

Q. The second window from the alley was in a vacant room?—A. Yes.
Q. And the third window from the alley was in a vacant room?—A. Yes.
Q. That is the window you went to and looked out in the first instance?—A. Yes.
Q. And the second time you went back upstairs did you go to the same window?—A. Yes; to the same window, and saw the soldiers shooting from the galleries of the barracks. I had a clear view from the window of two-thirds of the quarters—the second barracks. I don't know what company was in there. I stood there watching them for some minutes shooting, and saw them move back and forth; saw the flash of the guns from the barrels, and heard two distinct voices, which I believe was the voice of officers. One said: "Cease firing;" the other, "Stop shooting."
Q. How long was this after the first firing you heard when you were in your bedroom?—A. Ten minutes afterwards, at least; it could not have been less.
Q. Did you hear any firing up the alley near the rear of your hotel?—A. I saw them firing at the Cowen house; that is, at the corner of Fourteenth street and the alley, but I did not know they were shooting at the Cowen house; I could only see the flash of the guns. I could not see the men then; all I could see was the flashes of the guns.

Q. Did you see any men come out of the alley?—A. I saw them were shooting at the Cowen house; I could only see the hash of the guns. I could not see them; this is the alley east of Mr. Cowen's house. I could not see the men then; all I could see was the flashes of the guns.

Q. Did you see any men come out of the alley?—A. I saw them stop at that tree [indicating] and fire one volley, and then stopped in the middle of the street and fire another, and then another—three volleys in the middle of the alley. There was a mudhole there and they went around it.

Q. When the men crossed from the entrance of the alley by Mr. Cowen's house, across Fourteenth street, could you see them at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. How were they dressed?—A. In khaki uniforms; some with blue shirts on and the others had the whole yellow uniforms. I counted six and then ten; there was a distance of about 6 feet from the six to the ten. I could see the blue barrels of the guns, and they looked about 2½ feet long. I could see distinctly that they were negro men dressed in the uniform of soldiers.

Q. Now, after the shooting took place there in the alley by Mr. Cowen's house and in front of his house, did you hear any firing up the alley toward town?—A. They held up and stopped in the middle of the street; one mumbled and the other spoke out very clear and distinct and said: "Keep ahead and shoot to the front."

Q. Who was at the window there at that time?—A. Mr. Elkins, Judge Park and myself. Judge Park could not recognize them because he did not have his glasses on.

Q. Judge Park has since died, has he not?—A. Yes, sir; died about two weeks after this occurred.

Q. After they left your side there in front of Mr. Cowen's house and to the rear of your hotel, did you hear any firing then up the alley?—A. When I ran over for Mr. Cowen's family the men were shooting up the alley; not as far up, though, as the Miller Hotel.

Q. You came down after you saw them go into the alley and went across to Mr. Cowen's house and brought Mrs. Cowen and her family over to your hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During this time was the barracks?—A. Not after the men left the barracks, no; not that I could hear.

Q. How many of the men did you see come back?—A. Six.

Q. Where did you see them?—A. Running down the same alley in the direction of the barracks.

Q. And they were dressed in the same way?—A. I could not see them then.

Q. Then you could only see them in the first instance by the flash of their guns?—A. Yes, sir; there were three volleys of shot, which gave me a very clear and distinct view of them. Otherwise I could not have recognized them.

Q. From your position in the window when they came back, as not have recognized them.

Q. From your position in the window when they came back, as there was no shooting then, you could not tell whether they were soldiers, but you imagined they were the same parties?—A. Yes; after those men went back, those six that I could see ran; when they were going they were in a half-stooping position.

Q. You could see their position?—A. Yes, sir. When they came back they were standing straight and running very fast, but going down they were not running very fast, or could only see the objects, but could not tell whether or not they had on khaki uniforms?—A. No; but I could see that they had something across their shoulders. It was dark.

Q. Now, Mrs. Leahy, did any police officers come down to your house that evening?—A. Yes; two police came by and asked where the fire was. I said: "It is not a fire; the negroes are shooting up the town." I asked them to jump inside the gate, and I put them in a room.

Q. Where were you?—A. I was in the window.
Q. Where were the policemen when 'they asked where the fire was?—A. On the Fourteenth street sidewalk.

Q. At that time the soldiers had not come into view by the alley from the Cowen house?—A. No; not then.
Q. And you were watching from the window in the direction of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. The fire, then, was over in the barracks?—A. No; it was over the wall; that's why I put the police in my house.
Q. Did you call to the police to come inside of your house?—A.

Yes.

Q. Who were these two officers?—A. I could not give you their names. My sister knows them. I don't know any except—
Q. How long did they remain in your house that night?—A. Oh, about two hours—well, so long that I forgot all about them being there. Mr. Park said afterwards that two policemen were missing and they thought they must have been killed as they could not be found.

there. Mr. Park said afterwards that two policemen were missing and they thought they must have been killed as they could not be found.

Q. After you called to these policemen to come into your house did you go downstairs?—A. Yes; I went down and put them into a room and then went back up to the window.

Q. And that is the time you saw the shooting toward the Cowen house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after the firing had all ceased, do you remember the incident of the squad of soldiers coming out from the fort and going up town?—A. Yes; I was out there [indicating]; I did not see them when they went out after the shooting. I went downstairs and walked out to the side gate and said: "There's the squad of soldiers coming back." There was an officer with them, but I did not recognize him. I saw Dr. Joe and Fred Combe, but as they passed me they looked at me very savagely and remarked: "We will wipe out of the town every white man before we are through with it." I was standing at the gate, and they came right between the tree there [indicating] and me.

Q. Do you know whether they could see you at the time?—A. Yes; certainly. I had a lantern, and they could see me just as plainly as you see me now.

Q. Was the squad at that time halted in front of your house?—A.

as you see me now.

Q. Was the squad at that time halted in front of your house?—A.

No; they were going by. I saw no officers, but was told afterwards that there was an officer with them.

Q. You have stated, in substance, all that you saw or heard there on that night, have you? And you can't think of anything else that would be material or would throw any light on this difficulty?—A. No; that is what I saw the night of the shooting. It lasted twenty-five minutes, to my knowledge, and if there was one shot there were five hundred. My house was shot into, but I think by stray bullets.

Q. In what portion?—A. In the back part of the kitchen stray bullets.

Q. In what portion?—A. In the back part of the kitchen.
Q. Lower or upper?—A. About midway.
Q. You had never had any difficulty of any kind with the troops that were stationed here?—A. No, sir; I never had.
Q. Did you hear the bugle call?—A. Yes; but I did not know what is was.

Q. Then you do not know when it was, with reference to the firing?—A. Yes; it was quite a little while after I heard the men cease ing?—A. Yes; it was quite a factor firing.

Q. The bugle call was before these men went up the alley?—A. Yes; before or just about the time the men went up the alley I heard the bugle call.

Q. That was over in the barracks?—A. Yes; it sounded like it was facing the parade ground. After that I could hear the men and see them running up and down the porches—the galleries of the barracks.

Q. There were lights in the windows of the barracks?—A. Yes, sir,

Q. How long did you live in Brownsville before coming to San Antonio?—A. Six years.

Q. What was your husband's business?—A. A lawyer and attorney.

Q. And where did he practice law?—A. He practiced law, I might say, all over the State of Texas.

Q. And was engaged in the practice of law how long?—A. About twenty-five years.

Q. And was engaged in the practice of law how long?—A. About twenty-five years.
Q. Was your husband. Judge Parks, in Brownsville on the night of the 13th of August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I presume he was there on professional business?—A. Yes, sir. He had just returned to Brownsville from San Antonio.
Q. Did you, Mrs. Parks, shortly after the shooting affray in Brownsville on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, receive a letter from your husband relative to that shooting?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that the letter which you have just shown to me?—A. Yes, sir. The letter is as follows:

[Office of W.

N. Parks, attorney at law, federal equity practice a spe-lty. Practice in all courts, State and Federal.] cialty. BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 15, 1906.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 15, 1906.

DEAR MAMA: I did not write you yesterday, because that was no time to do so. The entire city is up in arms. I suppose you have seen in the papers what the negro soldiers did. Night before last, between 11 p. m. and 12, the negroes came out of the garrison in great force and began a bombardment of the town. It was a terrible affair. They fired several hundred shots along the streets near the garrison line into the houses and everywhere else, utterly regardless of the families in the houses; then they came on up the alley between Mrs. Louis Cowan's house and the Yturria place where we lived; between these two houses they halted and shot about a dozen or more shots through Louis Cowan's house, shattering the large mirror in her wardrobe, and also shot a chiffonier all to pieces in another room, and still in another room shot another wardrobe or piece of furniture to pieces, and even shot the lamp chimney off the lamp and put the lamp out, and many other shots were fired through the house. It was a miracle that the children and Mrs. Cowan were not killed; but while they were shooting near the garrison and coming up the alley, Mrs. Cowan hid the children under the beds, having them lay flat down, and she also crouched flat down on the floor; this is all that saved them.

I was in my room at the Leahy Hotel—the first room on the left as you go up the stairway—and from the window saw the whole thing, but could not tell they were shooting in the house, and I had no arms whatever to do anything with, and if I had done anything they would have stormed the hotel and killed everyone in it. They then marched on up the alley, shooting at everything in sight, until they got to the Miller Hotel, which they proceeded to bombard in great shape, shooting at every window where a light was visible. But I forgot to say that before they left the corner of Mrs. Cowen's place, they fired a couple of shots into the Leahy Hotel, but they did not go through the brick walls. At the bombardment of the Miller Hotel the police attempted to attack them, but the brave and valiant (?) Brownsville police were put to flight in a very few seconds, and the lieutenant of police Joseph Dominguez, the same man who was shot by Baker, the soldier I defended and cleared a couple of years ago, had his horse killed under him and his right hand shot all to pieces, and which necessitated amputation of the hand and part of the arm; then they went on up the alley, and in the old Jagou place, where a saloon is kept, they fired in from the alley and killed the barkeeper, a very good young man named Frank Natus; they proceeded around on Elizabeth street and shot up all the houses; in another part of the arm; then they went on up the alley, and in the old Jagou place, where a saloon is kept, they fired in from the alley and killed the barkeeper, a very good young man named Frank Natus; they proceeded around on Elizabeth street and shot up all the houses; in another part of the town, around near old lady Sauder's store, in one of her neat cottages, where Fred. Sta

Q. Mrs. Parks, did you receive this letter a few days after the date which it bears, viz. the 15th of August?—A. Yes, sir; I think I have the envelope with the postmark.

Q. And you were here at your home in San Antonio at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Yes, sir.

Q. Your husband is not living at the present time?—A. No, sir.
Q. How long after the 13th of August did he die?—A. He died on the 30th of August.
Q. Here in San Antonio?—A. No, sir; in Brownsville.
Q. Did you receive any other letters from your husband, Judge Parks, giving an account of what took place on that night?—A. Yes, sir; I received three very lengthy letters.
Q. What has become of those letters?—A. I destroyed them as I read them.
Q. And this is the only letter which you have from him since this occurrence at Brownsville on the 13th of August in which he gave you an account of what took place on that night?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I notice that this letter is signed "Papa." Will you state whether or not that is the writing of your husband, Judge Parks?—A. Yes, sir.

whether or not that is the writing of your nusband, Judge Parks?—
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I presume, Mrs. Parks, that this being the last letter which you have from your husband you would like to have it returned to you at No. 101 Woodlawn avenue, San Antonio, Tex., when the Government has no longer any use for it?—A. Yes, sir.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Bexar:

Mrs. Eleanor Parks, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that she has read the foregoing testimony by her subscribed, and that the same is true of her own knowledge, except as to those matters therein stated upon information and belief, and that as to those matters she believes them to be correct.

Q. And how long have you been in that business?—A. Thirty-one Ars.

Q. What is your age?—A. Fifty-four.
Q. To what parts of the United States does your business call you?—
To all parts.
Q. What place do you regard as your home?—A. San Antonio, Tex.
Q. How long have you lived here in this vicinity?—A. About twenty

Q. How long have you have account of the control of class of '72.

Q. You are a married man?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What family have you?—A. A wife and five children.
Q. They live with you, do they?—A. Yes, sir; all except one.
Q. Were you in Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906?—
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long had you been there on that visit?—A. Six weeks.
Q. What members of your family accompanied you to Brownsville?—
A. My wife and five children.
Q. I presume your business required you before that time to make frequent visits to Brownsville?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you well acquainted with the people in Brownsville generally?—A. Yes, sir; very well.
Q. When you visited Brownsville on that occasion where did you stop?—A. At the Miller Hotel.
Q. Mr. Odin, I will show you this plat (Exhibit A), and ask you to locate your room in the Miller Hotel (which is No. 5 on the plat).—A. It was the room cornering on the alley and Thirteenth street, second floor.

Q. How large is that room?—A. About 20 feet square.
Q. What windows has it in it?—A. Two windows opening on the alley and two opening on Thirteenth street.
Q. Were you in that room with your wife on the 13th of August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And what other members of your family were with you?—A. My five children.
Q. Were they all in that room?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, Mr. Odin, will you proceed to state, in your own words, just what you know about the shooting which occurred on that night in the city of Brownsville?—A. At 11.55 p. m. on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, I was sitting in the alley window of our room in the Miller Hotel, on the second floor, when I heard shots in the direction of the alley toward the fort. I noted the time—it was 5 minutes of 12, and I counted about 60 shots before they arrived at our windows. During this time I called my wife, and immediately after she and my little boy came to the window we heard persons upon the run coming toward us in the alley from the direction of Fort Brown, and when they passed our windows, I counted six negro soldiers, three abreast in two columns, with one soldier running alongside, who stopped, crossed the alley opposite our windows, and one large negro soldiers gave the order. "Halt!" and said "There he goes; shoot!" and they lired a volley. Immediately one other negro soldier joined them from the same direction from widders are represented to the same direction from widders are represented to the same direction from widders are represented to the same direction from widders and supposed that it was a mad dog shat they were chasing and shooting at. Then a second order was given to fire and they fired again to the left or toward the river. Then one large negro soldier stepped back to the center of the alley, slightly in the rear of the other eleven, and raised his gun, and at this time another volley was fired. Immediately following this report the large negro soldiers and myself in the window. The ball from his rifle passed through the lower window s

Q. Where were you and your wife standing at that time?—A. I was standing at the window looking out on Thirteenth street.

Q. You had left the window facing on the alley?—A. Yes, sir; had just stepped across the room.

Q. Who, if anyone, was with you at the window?—A. Mrs. Odin.

Q. And where did you see these men at that time—where were they standing?—A. They were nearly to the alley on Thirteenth street—on the north side of Thirteenth street.

Q. About how many men did you see there?—A. Twelve men.

Q. Did you at that time stop to count them or was your estimation just made from the general appearance?—A. I saw them all pass over and I counted them and said to my wife, "There are just twelve of them."

and I counted them and said to my wife, "There are just twelve of them."

Q. Now, you may go on and state what happened then.—A. After firing at the Miller Hotel they passed northward up the alley—a part of them at least.

Q. Did you see any go east on Thirteenth street?—A. No, sir; but of course some may have gone east on Thirteenth street without my having seen them.

Q. Where did you hear firing then?—A. In about two minutes after they passed northward up the alley I counted five more shots, and in about two minutes thereafter twelve negroes—negro soldiers—appeared again going toward Fort Brown, and crossed Thirteenth street and entered the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel.

Q. Going in what direction?—A. Going toward Fort Brown on double-quick and passed out of sight.

Q. Did you hear any more shooting after that?—A. I did not.

Q. So the last shooting you heard was up the alley, on the north side of Thirteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when these soldiers were in Thirteenth street at the mouth of the alley, at the time they were doing the shooting into the Miller Hotel, could you see how they were dessed?—A. Yes, sir; they were dressed in brown uniforms and a broad-brimmed soft hat, such as the soldiers wear.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, at the time they were in Thirteenth street them.

Hotel, could you see how they were dressed?—A. Its, such as the soldiers wear.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, at the time they were in Thirteenth street there, could you distinguish the kind of dress that they had on at any time other than when they were firing?—A. I could when they were in Thirteenth street, but I could not when they got into the alley.

Q. Then when they were in the alley, either to the north or to the south of Thirteenth street, you could not distinguish the way in which they were dressed, except by the flashes of their guns?—A. We could tell them when they were at the rear of the Miller Hotel when they were not firing.

Q. But when they were across the street, to the north of Thirteenth street, you could not tell them except for the flashes of their guns, or how they were dressed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you describe as nearly as you can the light, if any, that seemed to be upon these men during the firing that night in Thirteenth street, out of the alley?—A. The lights from the street lamps from Elizabeth and Washington streets gave us plenty of light to distinguish them plainly, and their dress, and to tell distinctly that they were negroes.

Q. Did you have any difficulty at the time, Mr. Odin, in seeing the faces of these men?—A. No, sir; for they were at times looking up directly toward the window.

Q. And you state positively that they were negroes?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And grossed in the uniform of United States soldiers such as were stationed at Fort Brown at that time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now, Mr. Odin, will you state as to the character of the voices of these men who spoke during the shooting?—A. They spoke in the manner and vernacular of the negroes. If I had not seen them by the flashes from their guns, I would have known by their voices that they were negroes by the manner of their speech and accent.
Q. Now, you state that you were sitting in one of the windows facing on the alley in the rear of the Miller Hotel, on the second floor, when you first heard shots that night?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. In what direction were those first shots that you heard?—A. Down the alley, toward Fort Brown.
Q. And from the time you heard those first shots until the time you heard the last shots to the north of Thirteenth street, in the alley, about how many minutes elapsed?—A. About twelve minutes.
Q. Did you, Mr. Odin, see the lieuteant of police, Dominguez, on that night?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did you hear a horse going by on Thirteenth street in the direction of Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you was that before you heard firing or saw them firing in the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel?—A. About a half minute.
Q. Did you see any person on Thirteenth street during the time of this firing other than these colored soldlers?—A. No, sir.
Q. Mr. Tillman has stated that he passed along Thirteenth street, going toward Washington street from Elizabeth, a short time before the firing occurred in the vicinity of the Miller Hotel. Did you see or hear him?—A. I heard some one person pass up Thirteenth street.
Q. But you did not see him?—A. No, sir.
Q. I will ask you, Mr. Odin, whether you know where Mr. Starck's house is located that was fired into that night?—A. No, sir.
Q. I will show you this plat (Exhibit A) and point out to you the locatio did not.

Q. After these men passed across Thirteenth street, going north in the alley, you heard some firing in the direction in which they had gone, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many shots?—A. Five.
Q. Where were you at that time?—A. I was standing at my window facing on Thirteenth street.

Q. Did you remain at your windows during all this time or did you at times go back into the room with your wife and children and then return to the window again?—A. I only left the window one during the time the shooting was going on, and that was during the time they were shooting north of us up the alley and while the soldiers were out of my sight.

were shooting north of us up the alley and while the soldiers were out of my sight.

Q. When your little boy fell back into the room, what did you do then?—A. My wife said, "They have shot Lee," and I said, "I reckon not; see if there is any blood on him;" and he said, "Mamma, I am not shot, but they came pretty near me." I was standing at the north window at the time.

Q. Where were your other children during this time, Mr. Odin?—A. They were in bed, except our little girl, who was standing by our side.

Q. Was she with you while the firing was going on in the alley at the rear of the hotel?—A. Yes; standing behind us.

Q. How old is she?—A. Three years old.

Q. Your other children were in bed, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether they were asleep or not?—A. They were all awake, except the older one.

Q. How old is he?—A. Eleven years.

Q. He did not awaken during all the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Odin, as you sat at the window on the night of the 13th of August about 12 o'clock and heard the shooting down in the vicinity of Fort Brown and farther down the alley in the direction of the fort, did you anticipate at that time that there was any trouble or that the soldiers were shooting into the houses in the city of Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

A. No, sir.

Q. After the soldiers reached the rear of the Miller Hotel did you anticipate that there was any trouble of any kind?—A. No, sir; not until they shot at the policeman.

Q. And then, for the first time, you appreciated the fact that there was serious trouble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after that was it that the shot was fired into your room facing on the alley?—A. Immediately after that.

Q. From the time when you heard the first shots until you heard the last ones that night was there anyone in your room other than the members of your family?—A. Yes; Mr. Davis, the hotel clerk.

Q. About what time did he come into your room during that shooting?—A. He came into our room during the time that the soldiers were up the alley at the rear of Tillman's saloon.

Q. Was he the only one in your room during the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he the only one in your room during the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. So during the time that the soldiers disappeared up the alley going north nobody had been in your room except the members of your family?—A. No, sir.
Q. And during that whole shooting did you or Mrs. Odin or any of your children leave your room?—A. No, sir.
Q. What light was there in your room that night when the shooting commenced?—A. A small oil lamp, turned partly down.
Q. Was the light turned down before any shooting commenced at all?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. During the progress of the shooting was the light interfered with in any way by either you or your wife?—A. No, sir.
Q. It was left in the same condition as when the shooting began?—A. When they left the alley going north my wife blew out the light.
Q. Mr. Odin, from the time that the men appeared there at the rear of the alley until they disappeared in the alley across the street, and during the whole of that shooting, both into your room and at the officer going down the street, and the different volleys that you have spoken about, about how long a period of time elapsed, in your judgment?—A. About one and one-half minutes, more or less, I should judge.
Q. I will ask you, from the direction of that shot which entered ment?—A. About one and one-nair inflates, more of less, I should judge.
Q. I will ask you, from the direction of that shot which entered your room, where it must have been fired from?—A. From about the center of the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel.
Q. Did you go into the room on the third floor immediately over your room that next morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know, then, what became of that shot that went into le ceiling of your room?—A. No, sir.
Q. How long after this occurred, on the night of the 13th of August, as it before you and your wife and family left Brownsville?—A. We ft on the following morning, the 14th of August.
Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To Corpus Christi and Sam ntonio.

left on the following morning, the 14th of August.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To Corpus Christi and Sam Antonio.

Q. Have you been back to Brownsville since that time?—A. No, sir. Q. Will you describe more particularly the condition of the window sash, the window out of which you were looking at the time the shot was fired on that night apparently at you and your wife?—A. The lower sash of the window was raised to the height of our heads, and we were looking out with the top of our heads underneath the sash, and there was a wire screen in the lower half of the window. I was at the left side of the window, Mrs. Odin next to me on the right with her head close to mine, and our little boy at her side, with his face against the window screen. The ball entered the screen, then went through the sash, passed through it diagonally, and then went into the ceiling at about 4 feet from the rear of the room. Just before this shot was fired, the little boy raised up and said, "Mamma, what is going on?" I said, "They are shooting the mad dog," and then the shot was fired into our window.

Q. At the time this was fired into your window, will you state more particularly what you saw and heard in the alley?—A. Immediately before this shot was fired at us raised his gun and shot into our window and the flash from the other soldiers' guns revealed his face plainly, looking up and shooting at us, and he exclaimed, "We got another white bastard."

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, I will ask you about the distance from your window to the man who fired the shot at you?—A. I should say from the end of his gun to our faces it was about 12 feet.

Q. Do you recall anything else that happened there that night, concerning which I have not interrogated you, and about which you care to make a further statement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you before the grand jury or the citizens' committee that investigated this affair?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you made any written or sworn statement to anyone other than the statement you make here to-day?—A. No, sir: I hav least.

Q. You stated in the former part of your testimony that there were twelve negro soldiers in the rear of the Miller Hotel, and that you saw them and counted them. Will you explain how you happened to count them there that night?—A. Because the first six came up three abreast in two columns, with another negro at their side, making seven. They stopped at the mouth of the alley and then one by himself followed behind on the run as the other ones ahead, and directly four more came up two abreast on double-quick or on the run; that made twelve.

Q. So, Mr. Odin, from the arrangement in which these men came up the alley you were at once enabled to make a calculation as to how many men there were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, Mr. Odin, from the arrangement in which these men came up the alley you were at once enabled to make a calculation as to how many men there were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not all huddled together in a bunch or crowd?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now you have stated that when the men came back after the firing had ceased up in the rear of Tillman's saloon that there were twelve of them, and that you saw them out of your window which opens ont onto Thirteenth street. I will ask you how you made that estimate as to the number?—A. Because they came three abreast in three columns and two abreast following behind, and one nearly at the front as to the number?—A. Because they came three abreast in three columns and two abreast following behind, and one nearly at the front at the side. The three in front stopped about 10 or 12 feet from the mouth of the alley or in the street, by an order to halt. The next three were close behind them, also the next three, and also the remaining two, and the single one was nearly at the front of the first row of three. Then the second row filed up in line with the first, and the remaining six separated about 10 feet from them to the west, and they stopped in the same order, and they came down the alley. Then some order was given (I could not hear that distinctly), and they formed a line of six about 10 feet apart, and remained about six or eight seconds, apparently looking up and down Thirteenth street. Then they formed in columns of three again, and an order of march was given, and they passed toward the fort, across the street and down the alley on the opposite side from our window, and disappeared.

Q. How were they marching—running or walking?—A. They were on the double-quick; they started on the double-quick. But about the time they entered the alley they were running very fast.

Q. Could you tell whether or not at that time they broke their formation?—A. Yes, ir.

Q. Could you tell whether or mot at that time they broke their formation?—A. Yes, sir; and I heard them running aft to be the same.

Q. Were you at home at the time that your wife made this statement 1907.

A. No, sir; I was in Nevada, Mo.

Q. Do you think of anything else with reference to which you care to make a statement?—A. I would like to explain that the reason I was so certain about the shooting and the identity of the persons who did it, and about the number of shots fired, is because I have all my life been in a country where there has been a great many town "shootups" (that is what they call them), and been accustomed to hearing shooting in the frontier towns, and on several occasions I have been in towns where there was a good deal of shooting done, that it became almost a habit that I kept pretty correct account of what happened. I was not alarmed or seared. In fact, I did not believe that there was anything serious happening until we heard the policeman's horse fall and immediately saw the negro raise his gun and shoot into our window. Then for the first time I realized it was a town "shoot-up."

By A. I. CAMPBELL, Deputy.

Mrs. Ethel M. Odin was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. Your name is Ethel M. Odin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were with your husband and manly stopping at the Mr. Odin and the city of Brownsville on the 13th of August, 1906?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mrs. Odin, I will ask you to go on and state, in your own words, just what you saw and heard there on that night.—A. About 12 o'clock that night, the Jand he was sick. I was giving him some medicale at the time, when Mr. Odin was standing in the window facing the alley. The shooting commenced down toward the fort, and Mr. Odin called to me to come to the window, and when I went I heard the meroes coming the come up, and they commenced fring, and one negroe said, "There he goes," First, though, they said, "Halt," then, "There he goes, shoot," and they commenced fring, and one negroe said, with the cone up, and they commenced fring, and one negroe said, which were the street in front of the Miller Hotel. They were firing all this time, and one of then exclaimed, "We've got that—of a ~ "." start then our little boy, sleeping in a bed!" the did him to keep still, and just then our little boy, sleeping in a bed!" to do him to keep still, and just then our little boy was standing on the foot of the bed, which made him almost then our little boy was standing on the foot of the bed, which made him almost as high as I was a story as a story of the sale of their gas I cause the window facing on the alley. By the flash of their gas I cause the window facing on the alley. By the flash of their gas I cause the wind at me, I should judge, and he shot right through the screen and through the window sash and through the shade and curtain—a dark-green curtain—and the bullet just passed through my hair, and my face smarted a little bit. I did not light any lamp that night, but looked at myself in the glass the next morning, and my face was powder burned and I used vaseline on it for about a week afterwards. I stood just in the middle of the window and it passed right through the edge of my hair.

Q. Did you see that night or the next morning any marks of that bullet which you said went through your hair?—A. About daylight I got up and went to the window and looked out and saw the hole in the window, through the screen and shade, and looked up at the celling and saw a piece of plastering was torn off, just directly over the dresser. The jacket fell back into the room, and I picked up the jacket and gave it to my husband, and I understand he sent it to the Secretary of War.

Q. Did you hear any of these men talking in the alley at the time they were doing this shooting?—A. Yes, sir; they kept saying "There he goes, shoot," and we supposed at the time he was shooting at a dog.

Q. That was about the first conversation you hear?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After that, what other conversation did you hear?—A. Nothing, except when they spoke about—when they said "We've got that son of a bitch," and immediately after that, "We've got another white bastard."

Q. Could you tell from that talk whether they were colored people or white people who did the shooting in the alley?—A. Yes, sir; they had

Q. Could you tell from that talk whether they were colored people or white people who did the shooting in the alley?—A. Yes, sir; they had the accent of the negro.

Q. At what place were these men standing when you had the best view of them?—A. Right at the mouth of the alley.

Q. On which side of Thirteenth street?—A. The side toward the Miller Hotel.

ler Hotel.

Q. Was there anybody in your room other than the members of your family on that night?—A. No, sir; there was no one in the room, except after it was all over Mr. Davis, the night clerk, came up and asked us if they had shot into our room, and he was the only one that was in our room during that night.

Q. Did you or your husband, or any member of your family, leave your room that night?—A. No, sir; except once when I stepped out into the court and went to Mrs. Moore's room and knocked on the door and asked how Mrs. Moore was. Mr. Moore said she was very sick in bed from the shock, and I returned to my room.

Q. I presume that you were awake the greater part of the night?—A. We never closed our eyes again until morning. We were afraid they would come back. Our little girl could not sleep for two weeks afterwards. It made her nearly have nervous prostration, and we left the next morning on the first train.

Q. Have you ever been back to Brownsville since that time?—A. No. sir.

Q. Have you ever been back to Brownsville since that time?—A. No. sir.
Q. Will you state how these men were dressed and the color of their clothing?—A. They were dressed in the uniform that the soldiers wear—brown, and soft brown hats, and looked just as they always did when marching up the street, except four of them, who were in their shirts. The shirts that these men had on seemed to be a little lighter than their uniform.

Q. Were were your hyphend standing in the room as nearly as you.

smirts. The shirts that these men had on seemed to be a little lighter than their uniform.

Q. Where was your husband standing in the room, as nearly as you can remember, during the time this shooting was going on?—A. First he was standing in the alley window farthest away from Thirteenth street, and he remained there until they had gone out on Thirteenth street, and the remained there until they had gone out on Thirteenth street and until that window was shot into, and then he steped to the other window facing on the alley nearest Thirteenth street, and remained there until they went by the alley. Then after they came back he stepped to the window facing the alley and stood there and saw them go back in the direction of the fort.

Q. Have you heretofore made any statement concerning what you saw of this shooting from your room in the Miller Hotel on that night?—A. Yes, sir; I made a short statement.

Q. When and to whom?—A. About five weeks ago, to Mr. Stevens, and the county clerk, or deputy county clerk, Mr. Wilkens.

Q. Where did you make that statement?—A. In my home, at 2320 West Commerce street, in the city of San Antonio.

Q. I will show you this paper which I hold in my hand, marked "Exhibit C," and ask you to look at the signature and state whether you signed that statement?—A. Yes, sir.

The statement is as follows:

Statement of Mrs. E. M. Odin.

Statement of Mrs. E. M. Odin.

"I was at Brownsville, Tex., with my husband and family the night of the shooting. I was in my room at the hotel, in the second story, facing the alley, and heard some one running in the alley. I went to the raised window and looked out and saw a number of negro soldiers, about twelve in number. They all had guns, and I noticed two of them had guns and also revolvers. Some of them were shooting at the time I reached the window and others were hollowing "Shoot him; there he goes." Their shots were directed at a man on a horse whom I recognized as a policeman. His horse was killed in front of the hotel, near the window of my room. I had a dim light burning in my room at the time, and the attention of the soldiers was directed to our window, and when they saw my husband and myself they immediately open fire on us. One of the bullets struck the window sash about an inch from my head and passed through my hair and lodged in the wall; two other bullets came into room and lodged in the wall. About thirty shots were fired into the hotel. Next morning when I got up I found my face was powder burnt. When the soldiers came back they were running toward barracks and were firing all the time. Some of them were in their blouses and bareheaded. All this took place between 11 p. m. and 12 m. on that night. It was a very bright moonlight night. I am almost positive that I could identify some of the men. I have one or two bullets that I took out of the walls of my room. One of the bullets I gave to Chas. F. Stevens.

"Witnesses: "Mrs. E. M. ODIN.

"Witnesses:
"J. ED WILKENS.
"CHAS. F. STEVENS."

Q. I will ask you to state under what circumstances you signed this paper marked "Exhibit C," and how it was taken down, just as nearly as you can remember?—A. Mr. Stevens and Mr. Wilkens one day at noon came out to our house, 2320 West Commerce, and told me that they had been sent out there to get a statement from me in regard to this affair. I hesitated to give it to them at first, and they said it was all right and went on and explained that you or some Government official was going to be at Brownsville and would be here in a short time, and as I was intending to go away for a short time I gave them a short statement. They said they wanted to use it.

Q. As you made the statement to them at that time, was it taken down in writing?—A. Yes, sir; it was taken down in writing, Mr. Wilkens wrote it down, and he asked me if it was a bright moonlight night, and I told him I thought there was some moon; I could not say whether it was a bright moonlight or not. He wrote it down there Ipointing to the statement] that it was a bright moonlight night; but there was enough light from both street lamps that I could see these people plain in their uniforms, and their faces also.

Q. After this statement was written down by Mr. Wilkens at that time, did you read it over, or did he read it over to you, before you signed it?—A. No. sir; he did not read it over, nor did I read it over, and he asked me if I would sign, and I said "Yes." I was in quite a hurry at the time, as our little girl was sick and I could not leave her but a few minutes. I told him I could not give him but a few minutes.

minutes.

leave her but a few minutes. I told him I could not give him but a few minutes.

Q. So you signed it without having read it through?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at that time, during your conversation with Mr. Stevens and Mr. Wilkens, state that it was a very bright moonlight night?—A. No. sir; I did not.

Q. What, if anything, did you say about it being moonlight?—A. I said there was a little moon; that it was light there in the street.

Q. Is there anything more that you care to state with reference to the circumstances under which this statement marked "Exhibit C" was made by you at that time?—A. When Mr. Stevens came out to my house I told him that I didn't have the time to give him, as our little girl was very sick, and he said it would not take more than five minutes; if I could give him that much time they would appreciate it very much. So I invited them into the parlor (they were in the hall then), and the clerk sat down, and I gave him just a short statement, but when I saw it come out in the paper the next day I noticed that there were some things I never had said. Mr. Stevens asked me if I could identify those negroes. I told him that was a pretty hard thing to do, to identify them among so many of them, but that I believed that if I could see that speckled-face negro I could identify him. I did not tell Mr. Stevens that I could identify any of the rest of them. And in regard to the bullets, nothing was ever said about them only that I had one of the jackets which came off from the bullet and fell back in the room and which I picked up from the floor. I did not say anything about picking any bullets out of the wall, and he asked me if I would willingly give him the jacket, so he could forward it to Washington, and I said "Certainly," and went and got it for him. I see by this statement that it is claimed that I said I recognized a policeman. I did not say anything of the kind, and did not know it was a policeman that was shot until the next morning. I see it is stated here that two other bullets came int made that statement.

made that statement.
Q. At the time you made this statement marked "Exhibit C" you state that your little girl was very ill. Did she recover from that sickness?—A. No, sir; she died.
Q. How long after that did she die?—A. She died at 3 o'clock Sunday morning, and they were at my house on Friday noon. If it had been any other time I would have taken this statement and read it over, but I just could not do it then.
Q. I presume you had supposed that they had correctly stated what you had said to them?—A. Yes, sir; but the statement is incorrect with respect to the points that I have pointed out. As to the other things it is substantially correct.

By A. I. CAMPBELL, Deputy.

12. Expert evidence as to bullets, rifles, etc.

Capt. Hanson E. Ely was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. What is your full name?—A. Hanson E. Ely.

Q. You are a captain in the United States Army?—A. Yes, sir; captain, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Army?—A. Yes, sir; capten years and six months.

Q. How long have you been connected with the Army?—A. Nineteen years and six months.

Q. Captain, are you familiar with the rifle used by the United States Army at the present time and during the past year?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that rifle called?—A. The new Springfield rifle.

Q. And what is its caliber?—A. Thirty hundredths.

Q. Will you describe in a general way the ammunition which is fired from that rifle?—A. The ammunition which is ordinarily used is that made by the Ordnance Department or the United States Cartridge Company. It is a cartridge about 33 inches in length, has what is called a "bottle-neck shell," and a bullet about 1½ inches in length, steel jacketed throughout. The shells have on their but the mark of the Ordnance Department or that of the United States Cartridge Company. These cartridges are carried in brass clips holding five each, similar to this (witness showed one of the clips turned over by the mayor of Brownsville to Mr. Purdy).

Q. Now, Captain Ely, will you state what experience you have had in the use of this new Springfield rifle?—A. I have had more experience with the old "Krag" rifle, though I have had some with the new Springfield, but the bullet fired and the effects of the bullet are the same in the two, being made practically identical, the new Springfield bullet being a little more pointed, however.

Q. About how long has the new Springfield rifle been in use in the Army?—A. About six to ten months.

Q. Will you state now, Captain, in a general way, the description of the new Springfield, how it is fired, and the number of "lands" in the bore?—A. The new Springfield rifl the rear. This permits the cartridge to feed up from the magazine, and by pushing the bolt forward and turning the handle to the right, the bolt is locked, the plece cocked, and ready for discharge. After being discharged the operation is repeated and the shell ejected by means of an ejector spring, which throws it to the right and rear a distance of from 3 to 6 feet, depending on the rapidity of the operation.

Q. Now, Captain Ely, I will show you the empty cartridges (thirty-two in number) and ball cartridges (six in number) and three clins which were turned over to me by the mayor of the city of Brownsville and the sheriff of Cameron County at the time of my investigation there last week in connection with the testimony of the mayor and other witnesses to the effect that they were picked up in the streets in the city of Brownsville a short time after the shooting affray there on the 13th of August, and will ask you whether you have examined those empty shells and ball cartridges?—A. Yes, sir; I have.

Q. Can you state whether they are similar to the ammunition such as is used in the new Springfield rifle in use in the United States Army?—A. Yes, sir; they are. In fact, there is no ammunition made for any other guns in this section like this, and I could practically swear that that ammunition was made for that rifle—the new Springfield.

O. Now, will you on and state the difference between this ammunity of the section is a surface.

Army — A. 1es, sir; they are. In fact, there is no ammunition made for any other guns in this section like this, and I could practically swear that that ammunition was made for that rifle—the new Spring-field.

Q. Now, will you go on and state the difference between this ammunition, if any exists, and the ammunition which is used by other rifles in use in this section of the country outside of the Army?—A. I have hunted in this country, and am acquainted with a number of local hunters, and have shot with them. The only sporting rifles in use in this country to any extent whatever are the Marlin, the Remlington, and the Winchester. These rifles I am somewhat familiar with. They could not use the Government ammunition such as you have shown me, because the powder charge is greater, the shell longer, and the projectile longer in the Government rifle than in rifles above mentioned; and while I am familiar with a number of those three makes, those I have seen could not possibly use this ammunition, their chamber being too short for it; and from what I know of rifles that I have not seen—from catalogues and studying the same—I am convinced that there are none made by these companies that will shoot the ammunition, but I have never heard of one in this country. The New York National Guard at one time used the Savage rifle.

Q. Now, Captain Ely, I will ask you what knowledge you have with respect to the bullets of this Government ammunition and the bullets used by the rifles which you have heretofore mentioned?—A. I have hunted with both rifles and the different ammunition used in the different sporting rifles and the Government rifle. It is invariably the case with hunters to use what is called the "soft-nose" bullet, such as is in this cartridge. [Witness marks the cartridge with an "E" with his knife on the side of the case.] When this cartridge is fired—that is, the soft-nose bullet—and the projectile strikes deer or other objects, the lead which is on the side of the steel case "mushrooms," as it is technically ca jacket of the projectile, after peng lifed, with always show the lands" of the bore of the rifle firing it. These "lands" cut into the steel and give the bullet the necessary rotation to keep it from tumbling.

Q. Now, Captain Ely, I will show you a bullet which Maj. A. P. Blocksom picked out of the dining-room door in the house of Mr. Yurria in the city of Brownsville, Tex., on the 1st day of January of this year, and will ask you to examine it and state, in your judgment, what kind of a bullet it is and all about it.—A. That is a new Springfield bullet, or bullet fired from the new Springfield Government service ammunition, caliber 30. This I can tell by the jacket of the bullet, its length, the shape of its nose, the mark of the four "lands" of any rifles used in this vicinity; and also the rifles used in this vicinity, other than the Government rifles, have a larger number of "lands" of the rifle on the bullet, which is deeper than that of the "lands" of any rifles used in this vicinity; and also the rifles used in this vicinity, other than the Government rifles, have a larger number of "lands" in them, and the "lands" are shallower than in the new Springfield.

Q. Now, Captain Ely, I will ask you whether you know of any rifle made which has as small a number of "lands," to wit, four, as those of the new Springfield rifle?—A. I do not, except probably the Krag. I am familiar with the Marlin, the Remington, and the Winchester rifles, practically the only rifles used in this country, or the rifles most generally used, and all of these rifles have either six or seven "lands."

Q. Will you explain what "lands" are, and what is their function?—A. The "lands" are projections from the interior of the bore of a rifle which runs spirally from the breech to the muzzle, forming helices. The twist of these "lands" in the Government rifle are four in number, and they are more prominent, or have greater helpht, than in other rifles, the ordinary sporting rifles.

The projected from the piece. This rotary motion keeps the it marks of "lands" similar to the marks upon this bullet which I have shown you?—A. I know of no such rifle, except the Krag, nor have I heard of any during my entire experience with rifles and rifle shooting. I will state in this connection that *the cup won from the English rifle team by the United States rifle team, after having been taken to this country, was returned to the English rifle team on their protest that the rifles used by the American team were not accurately the military rifle in use by the United States Army, because these barrels used by the American competing team had been especially made with a larger number of "lands" in them, and these "lands" were shallower than in the regular military rifle, the terms of the competition requiring that the military rifle should be used, and the cup was returned.

Q. Now, Captain, I will show you this bullet, indented at the side of the nose, and which Mr. Garza states in his affidavit that he picked out of the top of the wooden cover of the well-at the house of Mr. Yturria, in Brownsville, on the 14th day of August, 1906, and will ask you to examine this bullet, which I now show you, and state whether or not it was fired from a new Springfield rifle; and if so, your reasons for so stating.—A. This bullet was fired from a new Springfield rifle, the reasons being the same as above: The marks of four "lands" of the new Springfield rifle are shown distinctly on the bullet, with their greater depth than that of any other rifle used commonly in this vicinity, or used anywhere, so far as I know, and the caliber also is the same as that of the Government rifle.

Q. Captain Ely, I will next show you a bullet which was given to me, and marked with a star on the flat surface at the base of the bullet, in connection with the testimony of Miss Gertrude Cowen, and which is alleged to have been found in a wardrobe in the house of Mr. Louis Cowen, in the city of Brownsville, lodged between the plate-glass mirror and the wooden back of the mirror, on the day on which Mi opinion this bullet was fired from a new Springfield rifle, it having the steel jacket covering the nose, is .30 caliber, has the four grooves made by the four "lands" of the Springfield rifle, having the depth which those "lands" make.

Q. From the examination which you have made of this bullet, which was found in the wardrobe in the Cowen house back of the broken glass, can you state as to whether that bullet could have been fired through two or three wooden partitions before striking the mirror in the wardrobe and still the nose of the bullet be in the condition in which you see it?—A. I can. The velocity of bullets from the new Springfield rifle (about 2,100 feet per second) is so great, and the nose of the bullet being covered with an extremely hard substance, which is a composition, but is ordinarily called "steel jacket," it will penetrate about 50 inches of soft wood. I have seen bullets from the Government rifle penetrate a large number of pine boards without having the nose perceptibly defaced in any manner. At the same time I have known bullets to be deflected simply by knots in pine timber.

Q. Now, I will ask you, Captain, if you can account, taking into consideration the place where the bullet is alleged to have been found, back of the glass mirror, for the flattened condition of the base of the bullet, and also taking into consideration the further fact that the bullet was fired through two or more partitions of the Cowen house?—A. From much observation of bruised and mutilated bullets of this character, and the knowledge of the cause of the deflection of the same. I am of the opinion that this bullet was probably deflected from its course by some knot in the wood through which it passed, especially as I saw at one time a soldier wounded in a marker's pit by a bullet deflected by a knot in a pine 2 by 4 which constituted part of the shelter over his head. If this bullet had been so deflected, it probably tumbled—that is, going end over end, in which case it might have struck the thick plate glass end over end, in which case it might have struck the thick plate glass with its butt, breaking the glass and falling into the place you have described.

Q. Captain Ely, I have asked you several questions with reference to this bullet [handing same to Captain Ely] alleged to have been found in the wardrobe in the Cowen house. Are you able to state, from the bruised condition of the butt of this bullet, whether or not it passed through some object before coming in contact with the obstacle which produced the deformation?—A. Yes; it must have passed through some such obstacle, or the nose of the bullet would have struck first. Some obstacle must have caused a deviation of the direction of the bullet which caused it to tumble, which is the only explanation I can see for causing the deformation at the butt of the bullet.

Q. In this connection, Captain Ely, I will show you the two pieces of metal, which I hold in my hand, resembling bent tin, and which were claimed by Mrs. Cowen to have been found in the drawer of a dresser through which one of the bullets which were fired into the Cowen house on the night of the 13th of August. I will ask you to examine these pieces of metal [hands them to Captain Ely] and to state whether in your opinion they are portions of a bullet or bullets fired from the Springfield rifle?—A. I am fully convinced that these pieces are parts of the cupro-nickel casing or steel jacket of the projectile of the new Springfield ammunition. I have had considerable experience on the rifle range and have examined a very great number of broken-up projectiles, broken by the iron-target frame or stones in the earth, and these are without doubt parts of such a projectile. The hardness and constitution of the metal show it to be the peculiar composition used in this jacket, and not to be tin or any such ordinary substance.

Q. Captain Ely, I will ask you whether it is possible for the jacket of a ball fired from a new Springfield rifle into a frame dwelling house, after having passed through one or more p and the drawer would readily retain them while the lead portion passed on through.

Q. Now, Captain Ely, I will show you these three portions of metal which were given to Major Blocksom by Mr. Garza, and which he testified were found in his house on the morning of the 14th day of August, on the dining-room floor, near a bullet hole in the bottom of the dresser, and will ask you to examine those pieces of metal and state whether in your opinion they are portions of the steel jacket or covering of a bullet fired from the new Springfield rifle?—A. Yes; these are undoubtedly portions of the jacket of such a projectile, especially as one piece distinctly shows the base of the jacket, though somewhat deformed. I will say in this connection that to one not accustomed to the peculiar deformations on the jacketed bullet the parts of the jacket might seem like pieces of the or other substance. Therefore, this morning I dug from the rifle butts at Fort Sam Houstin these projectiles and ragged pieces of projectile jackets [hands them over to Mr. Purdy] to show the similarity of the pieces in evidence and these which I know are parts of projectiles coming from the new Springfield rifle; and also the unbroken bullets would show the marking of the "lands" described in my testimony, to be exactly similar to such markings on the projectiles of the exactly similar to such markings on the projectiles of the same material, the number of "lands" the same, and their depth the same. Q. Now, Captain Ely, I want to ask you a question about another matter. From your experience as an Army officer in charge of enlisted men, are you able to state whether it is possible for a private to secure and retain in his possession a dozen or more rounds of cartridges without it appearing upon the records of the ammunition that are kept, and without the knowledge of his commanding officer that the private has such ammunition in his possession?—A. Yes. It is possible, in spite of all possible checks. Only yesterday afternoon there was on trial at Fort Sam Houston the case of a man in my own company who had a certain amount of ammunition unauthorizedly in his possession, and had fired the same at night, and in my company I take more than ordinary precaution not generally taken. With the target season shooting, with an allowance of 400 rounds of ammunition mendiately after inspection, and to issue it to them immediately before inspection—a precaution not generally taken. With the target season shooting, and the post competitions, there is a splendid opportunity for men who desire to steal ammunition to so. It is customary in many companies to permit the men to ret

Clerk United States Court for the Western District of Texas,
By A. I. CAMPBELL,
Deputy.

Capt. David J. Baker was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksof and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. What is your full name?—A. David J. Baker, captain, Twent; sixth Infantry.

Q. Captain Baker, how long have you been in the United States Army?—A. About twenty-four and one-half years.

Q. You are stationed here at Fort Sam Houston at the present time?—A. Yes, sir; in command of a company of the Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. You are stationed here at Fort Sam Houston at the present time?—A. Yes, sir; in command of a company of the Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Q. What experience have you had, Captain Baker, in the use of rifles used by the United States troops and with Government ammunition used in such rifles?—A. I have been familiar with the weapons and with the ammunition used in such rifles ever since I have been in the service. An officer comes into intimate contact with the weapons and ammunition used by them, especially on the target range and in active service. I have not had much experience of that kind with the new Springfield rifle, but I have taken pains to learn the weapon thoroughly, and the ammunition is in all leading characteristics the same as that used in the Krag rifle, which the new Springfield rifle superseded in the Army, and with which I am very thoroughly acquainted.

Q. Captain Eaker, I should like to show you certain shells and ball cartridges and three clips which were turned over to me by the mayor of Brownsyille. Tex., and the sheriff of Cameron County, during my investigation there last week, and ask you whether or not you can tell from those empty shells and ball cartridges as to what kind of ammunition it is?—A. The ammunition and the clips were manufactured for use in the new Springfield rifle, and are such as are used by the troops at the present time. They are manufactured in all cases either by the Government itself or the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, now called the United States Cartridge Company, and, as far as I know, only by such plants; and they are only used by and sold to the Government.

Q. Captain, I will ask you whether ammunition of the character of ment.

Q. Captain, I will ask you whether ammunition of the character of that which I have shown you—that is, such as was in these empty shells—is commonly bought and sold in the market for general use and for hunting purposes?—A. No, sir. When you first asked me that question, I answered it offhand, as above, but since then, and in order to satisfy myself, I have made inquiry of the principal gun dealers of San Antonio, all of whom are distributors of weapons and ammunition, not only in this vicinity, but throughout Texas, and they confirm the answer that I have already given.

The property of the confirmed that the confirmed duce the proper number at all times. The ten rounds, at least, are always in the personal possession of the enlisted man, the only requirement being that he produce them on inspection. In addition to the ten rounds, target practice, field service, and possibly the generosity of the quartermaster-sergeant or first sergeant give them an opportunity to accumulate more without specific knowledge on the part of their officers. After twenty years' experience as an officer, and having been many times during that period a company commander and in close contact with enlisted men, both in garrison and in the field, I believe that most enlisted men of any organization in service in any post really have in their possession at all times more ammunition than that which may have been issued to them and which they are required to produce on inspection, namely, ten rounds.

Q. Then, in your opinion, Captain Baker, it would not only be possible, but it is a very common thing, for the enlisted men to have in their possession a dozen or so rounds of cartridges each without it appearing from the records of the ammunition kept that he has in his possession such additional rounds?—A. The chances for getting this ammunition are so many that even with the greatest care on the part of the company officers it is impossible to break up the practice. It is as hard a thing to deal with as to prevent the feeding of other people by the cook in your kitchen. It is almost a similar case.

Q. Captain Baker, in conclusion, I want to call your attention particularly to the three clips that were turned over to me by the mayor of the city of Brownsville and by the sheriff of Cameron County as having been found in the streets of Brownsville on the morning after the shooting on the 13th of August, and ask you whether those clips are similar to the clips used in the new Springfield rifle?—A. I have in the new Springfield rifle. The three shown me by you I have compared with this. They are in every respect the same. I know of no such clip in use in this

Clerk United States Court Western District of Texas,
By A. I. CAMPBELL, Deputy.

Col. Frank Baker was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:
Q. What is your full name, Colonel Baker?—A. Frank Baker.
Q. And you are a lieutenant-colonel of the Ordnance Department of the United States Army, stationed at the San Antonio Arsenal?—A.

the United States Army, stationed at the San Antonio Arsenal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long, Colonel, have you been connected with the Ordnance Department of the Army?—A. Twenty-seven years.

Q. Are you acquainted with the ride now in use in the United States Army, commonly known as the "new Springfield rifle?"—A. Yes, sir; though this rifle is officially designated as United States magazine rifle, caliber 30, model 1903.

Q. Will you state, Colonel, where this Springfield rifle is manufactured.—A. At the Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass., and at the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., which are manufacturing establishments under the direction of the Ordnance Department of the Army.

Q. Then, as I understand you, Colonel, this rifle is manufactured by the Government for the use of the United States Army?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Colonel Baker, I will ask you to state as to whether this new Springfield rifle can be purchased or obtained by anyone except the officers and men connected with the United States Army.—A. The only case of which I am aware where it can be so obtained is by an inventor purchasing it by the authority of the Chief of Ordnance, or in case a soldier should desert and carry away his rifle and later dispose of the same.

purchasing it by the authority of the Chief of Ordinance, of the same.

Q. In other words, it is manufactured for the exclusive use of the United States Army, and not for sale?—A. It is.

Q. Colonel Baker, I will show you these thirty-two empty shells, six ball cartridges, and three clips, which were turned over to me during the progress of my investigation of the Brownsville affray by the mayor of Brownsville and the sheriff of Cameron County. These cartridges and clips are alleged to have been picked up in the streets of the city of Brownsville on the morning of the 14th day of August, 1906, and turned over to the mayor of that city. I will ask you to examine the six ball cartridges and to give your opinion as to what kind of ammunition they are? [Hands the six ball cartridges to Colonel Baker.]—A. One of these cartridges was made at the Frankford Arsenal, and is for the United States magazine rifle, caliber 30, model 1903; the remaining five were made my the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, of Bridgeport, Conn., and are identical with the ammunition used in the United States magazine rifle, caliber 30, model 1903; and there is no question in my mind but that they were made for the United States Government and issued to troops for use with the rifle named.

Q. Now, Colonel Baker, I will ask you as to whether that ammunition which you have just examined—the six ball cartridges—can be fired from the Krag-Jörgensen rifle?—A. It can not.

Q. I will ask you, Colonel, whether you have attempted to insert one of those cartridges in a Krag-Jörgensen rifle?—A. It can not.

Q. With what success?—A. It is impossible to seat the cartridge in the chamber by at least one-half inch.

Q. Now, Colonel Baker, I will call your attention to these thirty-two empty shells which were picked up in the streets in the city of Brownsville on the morning of the 14th of August, and ask you whether in your opinion those shells were fired from the new Springfield rifle? [Hands the empty shells which were picked up in the streets in the ci

Were.

Q. Have you made a demonstration with these shells in the new springfield rifle, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they fit that gun?—A. I have.

Q. And you have no doubt but that they were fired from such rifle?—A. I have not the least doubt in the world.

Q. Now, Colonel Baker, I will call your attention to three clips which were alleged to have been picked up in the streets of Brownsville the day after the shooting there last August, and ask you whether in your opinion those clips were such as were used by the troops in connection with the new Springfield rifle?—A. They are.

Q. Will you state, Colonel Baker, where this ammunition is manufactured which is specially designed for use in the new Springfield rifle?—A. In general, it is manufactured at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, which is a manufacturing establishment which is owned, controlled, and operated by the United States Government. The Government has also purchased ammunition for the magazine rifle, caliber .30, model 1903, from the following-named private manufacturers: The United States Cartridge Company, of Lowell, Mass.; the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, of New Haven, Conn.

Q. I will ask you, Colonel Baker, if you know of any rifle, other than the new Springfield rifle, which will shoot the ammunition such as I have exhibited to you?—A. I do not. There may be, but I am not cognizant of it.

Frank Baker.

Frank Baker.
Lieutenant-Colonel, Ordnance Department, United States Army. THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Bexar:

Frank Baker, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that he has read the foregoing testimony by him subscribed, and that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to those matters therein stated upon information and belief, and that as to those matters he believes them to be true.

Frank Baker,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Ordnance Department, United States Army. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 6th day of January, 1907.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE.

Will you please send a competent officer to the factories where the ammunition for the Springfield rifle of the model of 1903 has been manufactured and obtain from the persons who know how much, if any, of that ammunition has been sold to anybody but the Government, and who the persons were to whom it was sold?

Second. Whether the rifle itself, of the model of 1903, has been made and sold to anybody but the Government by third persons.

Third. Whether, within the knowledge of the experts of the firms manufacturing the ammunition, any gun is known, except the United States rifle of the model of 1903, which will take this ammunition, either by single cartridges or in a clip.

Fourth. What has been the destination of any United States rifles of the model of 1903 which have found their way into the possession of any other persons than the troops of the Regular Army of the United States.

WM. H. Taff,

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

[Indorsement.]

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, Washington, January 10, 1907.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,

Washington, January 10, 1907.

1. Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War, together with report of Capt. J. H. Rice, Ordnance Department, upon the first three of the items mentioned in the within memorandum.

2. It appears from Captain Rice's report that ammunition similar to that for the Springfield rifle, model of 1903, has been manufactured and sold to private parties by two establishments. This ammunition is, however, somewhat different from that manufactured by or for the Government, in that the ammunition manufactured by the Winchester Repeating Arms Company used different priming compositions and different anvil, and all but 25,000 rounds had different marking on the base of the cartridge case, while that manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, while using the same anvil. had different priming composition and different marking on the base of the cartridge case. Therefore it should be possible to distinguish any of the ammunition or fire cartridge cases thus manufactured and sold to private parties from that manufactured by or for the Government.

3. Some 438 rifles designed to fire the ammunition mentioned above as sold to private parties have been manufactured and mostly sold to dealers and to individuals by the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, and two such rifles have been manufactured by the M. Hartley Company, one of which is still in its possession. It is not believed, however, that any of these rifles would ordinarily fire the Government ammunition, because of their light blow by the firing pin, which is the reason for the difference of primer and anvil mentioned above.

4. There is also inclosed a list of the names and addresses of all parties to whom United States Government ammunition for the rifle of the model of 1903 had been furnished prior to August 13, 1906, under the various laws and regulations permitting the disposition of such ammunition to others than United States troops.

5. Referring to the fourth point in the wit

WILLIAM CROZIER, Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

WAR DEPARTMENT.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 10, 1907.

SIR: 1. Referring to letter from The Military Secretary, dated January 7, 1907, O. O. 32753-93, directing me to proceed to Lowell, Mass., and
New Haven and Bridgeport, Conn., and your verbal instructions in connection therewith, I have the honor to report as follows:

I left this city at 5.35 p. m. on January 6, arriving at Lowell, Mass., the next morning. I visited the works of the United States Cartridge Company at that place and had a talk with Mr. Butler and Mr. Hoxle, of the company. Mr. Butler stated that no ammunition, model of 1903, had been sold by them, as there was practically no market for the product

2 I then proceeded to the works of the Winchester Repeating Arms Company at New Haven, Conn., arriving at 4.22 p. m., January 7. I called upon Mr. W. Bennett, second vice-president of that company, who informed me that their model of 1895 Winchester rifle had been chambered for the model of 1903 cartridge and that 438 had been shipped from the factory; 152,920 model of 1903 cartridges had also been manufactured and shipped to dealers and others. Of these, 25,000 used cartridge cases, marked in accordance with the Government system, that had been left over from their last contract with the Ordanace Department. This marking was "W. R. A. Co., 5-06." All the remaining cartridges sold by them were marked "W. R. A. Co., 30 G. 93." All the Winchester cartridges sold to others than the United States had fulminate primers of Winchester manufacture instead of the non-fulminate primers used by the Ordanace Department. The Winchester primer has an anvil shaped approximately thus: , , while the Government primer has an anvil shaped thus:

had fulminate primers used by the Ordnance Department. The Winchester primer has an anvil shaped approximately thus:

, while the Government primer has an anvil shaped thus:

, the Winchester also being of thinner material. It is necessary for the company to use fulminate primers, since the nonfulminate are too insensitive for the stroke of the firing pin in their arm.

All the fulminate primers manufactured by them will be discharged by a 2-ounce weight dropped 23 inches, while the Ordnance Department primer requires the same weight dropped 30 inches. Consequently it would be but rarely that a Government cartridge with nonfulminate primer would be discharged in a Winchester riffe. Mr. Bennett stated that he knew of no other company in the United States that had sold any arms chambered for the 1903 cartridge. He very kindly furnished me with lists showing where all their arms so chambered had been sent from the factory, and a similar list in reference to the ammunition. I also later obtained a list showing where the arms and ammunition of this class had been sent when sold by their New York retail store. The former lists were not completed until 6 p. m. on January 8, and the latter required the greater part of January 9 for their preparation. Of the arms shown shipped to San Francisco, fifteen were destroyed in the earthquake and fire at that place. While the Winchester company was preparing the lists referred to above I proceeded to Bridgeport, Conn., and interviewed the officials of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company at that place. I found that they had sold 15,860 rounds of animunition, model of 1903, which they said was marked on the base, "U. M. C. 30 S." and not "U. M. C. Co.," followed by the date, as is done in the case of Government contracts. I was unable to obtain a list showing where this ammunition had been sent, but was informed that it could probably be obtained at their New York office. The cartridges old by this company are supplied with fulminate primers in which the anvil is practically the as to make this possible. These two companies appeared to be under the same management.

4. Although ciligent inquiry was made, I was unable to hear of any company in the United States that manufactures the regular model of 1903 rifle, nor did any of the men with whom I talked know of any company manufacturing any rifle chambered for the 1903 ammunition other than those enumerated above. The Winchester rifle does not use a clip, nor would the one Lee rifle sold by M. Hartley Company use the service clip.

5. About 90 per cent of the 1903 ammunition sold by the Winchester Company had soft-nose bullets, the remainder having the ordinary jacketed bullet. Their records did not show the exact proportion. The list furnished by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company indicates which were soft-nosed and which were jacketed.

6. The last two lists were completed late on the afternoon of January 9. The lists referred to above are hereto appended, marked as follows:

List of arms shipped from the factory of the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, marked "A."
List of model of 1903 cartridges shipped from the Winchester factory, marked "B."
List of rifles sold by the New York retail store of the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, marked "C."
List of ammunition sold by the New York retail store of the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, marked "D."
List of ammunition sold by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, marked "E."
Very respectfully,
Captain, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army.
The Chief of Ordnance.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,

Please examine, and have Captain Rice examine, the shells and cartridges and the undischarged cartridges and the bullets which Mr. Purdy will show you, and state, first, whether you can tell by the marks on them whether the shells are those manufactured exclusively for the on them who Government.

Secondly, whether, in your opinion, the three bullets shown to you could have come from the Springfield rifle, model of 1903, and whether they could have come from any other rifle which you know of.

Third, whether the bandoleer shown you by Mr. Purdy is the bandoleer in use in the service and manufactured for the Government, and what your information is as to the fact whether such bandoleers are manufactured for anybody but the Government.

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

manufactured for anybody but the Government.

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

[Indorsement.]

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDANCE.

Washington, January 12, 1907.

1. Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War, with the information that the empty shells, undischarged cartridges, and bullets referred to within, have been carefully examined. The empty cases are marked on the base as having been manufactured at the Frankford Arsenal, and by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company. The former place manufactures only for the Government, and the shells manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company are marked on the base with the date of manufacture, which indicates that they were furnished to the United States under contract, since the officials of that company have stated to Captain Rice that no similar cartridge cases among the small number they have sold to the trade were marked with the date. There is, therefore, no reasonable doubt of the fact that these cartridge cases were manufactured for and furnished to the Government.

2. The three bullets referred to within could have come from the model of 1903 rifle, commonly known as the "new Springfield," and they could also have come from the so-called "Krag rifle," the size of the bullet being identical for the two arms and the rifling being the same, thus leaving the same marks on the Jacket of the bullet. If taken in connection with the cartridge cases referred to above, however, the Krag rifle would be eliminated, since these cases can not be used in that arm, because it has a smaller chamber than the new Springfield and because it is arranged for the use of a cartridge case with a flanged head instead of one with a cannelured or rimless head, as is the case with the ammunition for the model of 1903 gun. The bullets could not have come from any arm of which I know except the two enumerated above, since the only rifle manufactured in this country, so far as investigation has disclosed, which has the same form of chamber as the model of 1903 ammuniti

WILLIAM CROZIER, Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

John H. Rice was first duly sworn by Maj. A. P. Blocksom, and, upon being examined by Mr. Purdy, testified as follows:

Q. You are a captain in the United States Army?—A. Yes.
Q. How long have you been connected with the Army?—A. Since June 15, 1889.
Q. In what department of the Army are you employed at the present time?—A. Ordnance Department.
Q. How long have you been connected with the Ordnance Department of the United States Army?—A. Since November, 1898.
Q. During that time will you state, Captain, in a general way, what your duties have been in that Department?—A. I have been on duty at the gun factory at Watervliet Arsenal for about six months; at the Sandy Hook proving ground for about two years; at the Manila ordnance depot for something over two years; on inspection duty for a little more than two years, and since last April on duty in the office of the Chief of Ordnance in the city of Washington.
Q. I will ask you, Captain, if you are familiar with the rifle known as the "new Springfield rifle" and now in use in the United States Army?—A. I am.
Q. Will you state, Captain, about how long that rifle has been in use by the troops?—A. About eight months.
Q. What was the rifle used by the United States Army before the new Springfield rifle was adopted?—A. It is an arm commonly known as the "Krag rifle" adopted some little time before the Spanish war.
Q. Will you go on now, Captain, and describe the bore of these two rifles and any other characteristies which you think of that are pecular to these two guns?—A. The bores are practically identical as regards rifling, each having four lands, 0.06 inch wide, the depth of groove or height of land is 0.004. The Krag rifle barrel is longer than that of the new Springfield rifle and the chamber is different in size, being smaller in the Krag, so that the cartridge for the model of 1903 ammunition in the Krag rifle barrel is longer than that of the new Springfield rifle and the chamber is different not have been in the Krag ri on the morning of the 14th of August, 1906, and ask you if you know what kind of ammunition they are?—A. The clips are for the model of 1903 ammunition manufactured either for or by the Government for use in its model 1903 rifle, and after considerable investigation of the subject I feel sure that they can not be used with any other arm to be found in this country. The cartridge cases are for model of 1903 Government ammunition; part of them were manufactured at the Frankford Arsenal and Gun Factory, which produced material only for the use of troops, and the remainder were manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, evidently in accordance with a contract with the United States Government and for delivery to the Government. The cases are identified as for the 1903 rifle by their shape and size, as well as the fact that they are cannelured. Their place of manufacture is indicated by marking on the base of the shell. Those from the case is indicated by marking on the base of the shell. Those from the case manufactured by them for commercial use by the date being stamped in, which is not the case with their commercial material.

Q. I will now ask you, Captain Rice, whether this ammunition I have shown you, including the ball cartridges and empty shells, is capable of being used in the Krag-Jörgensen rifle?—A. It is not; because the cases are not the right size for the chamber, and they are cannelured and could not be used in a gun made to take a flanged case.

Q. Do you know of any rifle in which this ammunition which I have shown you can be used other than the new Springfield rifle?—A. It will fit the Winchester rifle, model of 1895, when specially chambered—only 438 have been thus changed—but could not be used satisfactorily in that arm, because the blow of the firing pin is not sufficiently strong to discharge the primer. There have also been manufactured two Lee rifles chambered for this ammunition, one of which is still in the hands of the manufacturer and the other is in the hands of an employee, which you state, as I remember, will take this ammunition. I will ask you, Captain, how many lands are contained in the bore of the 1895 model Winchester rifle which will take this ammunition?—A. There are six of a width almost twice that of the lands of the model of 1903 rifle.

I will now show you, Captain Rice, a bullet offered in evidence in connection with the testimony of Miss Gertrude Cowen, who was ecently examined by me in the city of Brownsville, even, who was ecently examined by me in the city of Brownsville, who have been found between the plate-glass mirror and the backing thereto in the wardrobe of the Cowen house on the same day upon which Miss Cowen was examined. I will ask you to examine this builet and state what kind of a rifle, in your opinion, that builet was fried from, and the kind of ammunition of which it was a part?—A. There is no question in my mind but that it was fred from a model of the filling are such as are made as the Krag rifle, since the marks of the rifling are such as are made as the Krag rifle, since the marks of my belief made only by them.

Q. If this bullet is a part of one of the shells, or a similar shell, which I have shown you as having been picked up on the streets of the city of Brownsville on the day after the shooting affray, I will ask you whether it could have been fired from a Krag rifle?—A. It could not have been fired in the Krag gun from which It follows that it could not have been fired in the Krag gun.

Q. When, as I understand you, Captain, this bullet which I have shown you, in your opinion, could have been fired only from a Krag rifle, or from a new Springfield rifle, and if the bullet was originally contained in one of these shells which I have shown you, then, and in such case, the Krag rifle is eliminated, and in your judgment it was freed only from a Krag rifle, and if the bullet was originally contained in one of these shells which I have shown you, then, and in such case, the Krag rifle is eliminated, and in your judgment it was freed only from contract for the Government. The markings indicate that this particular bandoleer was furnished by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company in January, 1906. The cartridge cases, in reference to which I have previously testified, were manufactured by that company, as shown by the markings, in December, 1905.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, 88:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Common, ss.

John H. Rice personally appeared before me, and, on being first duly sworn, deposes and says that he has read the foregoing testimony by him subscribed, and the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to those matters therein stated upon information and belief, and that as to those matters he believes them to be true.

John H. Rice.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 11th day of January, A. D. 1907.

A. C. CAINE,

Notary Public, District of Columbia.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be now entered upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.
Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7214) respecting proceedings in the courts of the United States in the western district of the State of Missouri. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first bill in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The bill (S. 6470) in relation to the Washington Market Company was announced as the first bill in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, or-dered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SERVICE ON FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

The bill (S. 7170) to amend an act relating to service on for-eign corporations, approved June 30, 1902, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia,'" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act so as to read as follows:

When a foreign corporation shall transact business in the District without having any place of business or resident agent therein, service upon any officer or agent or employee of such corporation in the District shall be effectual as to suits growing out of contracts entered into or to be performed, in whole or in part, in the District of Columbia or growing out of any tort heretofore or hereafter committed in the said District.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF KENYON STREET NW.

The bill (H. R. 10843) authorizing the extension of Kenyon street NW. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER SIDE DRIVE AND PARK ROAD.

The bill (H. R. 128) for the opening of a connecting highway between Water Side drive and Park road, District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to institute a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for connecting the north end of Water Side drive, in Kalorama Heights, just above Q street, with the south end of Park road, in Belair Heights, by a highway 60 feet wide, all in accordance with plans on file in the office of the Engineer Commissioner, District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUMBER TRADE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask that Senate resolution 189, Table Calendar 21, may be taken from the table and laid before the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from South Dakota. The resolution submitted by Mr. KITTREDGE December 6, 1906, is as follows:

is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed immediately to inquire, investigate, and report to Congress, or to the President when Congress is not in session, from time to time as the investigation proceeds, as to the lumber trade or business of the United States which is the subject of interstate or foreign commerce and make full inquiry into the cause or causes of the high prices of lumber in its various stages of manufacture from the log; and the said investigation and inquiry shall be conducted with the particular object of ascertaining whether or not there exists among any corporations, companies, or persons engaged in the manufacture or sale of lumber any combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade or commerce in lumber or to increase the market price of lumber in any part of the United States.

To carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution the Secretary shall have power to issue subpensa, administer oaths, examine witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive depositions taken before any proper officer in any State in the United States.

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be required to make the said investigation at his earliest possible convenience and to furnish the information above required from time to time and as soon as it can be done consistent with the performance of his public duties.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I wish to modify the resolution by striking out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 2 of the printed resolution. The reason for the request is that the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor clothed the Commissioner of Corporations with the power proposed to be conferred by the provision which I wish to have eliminated, and I do not desire that the resolution shall in any manner interfere with the antiimmunity act which became a law last winter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be made as requested by the Senator from South Dakota.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out of the resolution lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 2, in the following words:

To carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution the Secretary shall have power to issue subpenas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive depositions taken before any proper officer in any State in the United States.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, there are few articles of commerce that bear more important relation to the welfare of the people of all classes, and particularly those of small means in farming communities, than lumber in its manufactured form. It is an absolute necessity to the development of those portions of the country adapted exclusively to agriculture, as much so as food, clothing, and all other articles necessary to human comfort and even existence. The prices of such an article affect in the most vital manner the prosperity of every community in the land, both rural and urban.

For more than twenty years I have lived in a section of the country requiring the importation of all lumber that has entered into the home building of a fertile but treeless prairie. State which I have the honor in part to represent has occupied its position in the sisterhood of States less than twenty years, but in that brief period her population has grown until it now exceeds half a million people.

I have watched the development of that country by the unremitting toil of a sturdy yeomanry, schooled by habits of industry and frugality, paying tribute to what I believe to be the most gigantic, exacting, and soulless of the trusts that oppress

THE KING OF TRUSTS.

The lumber trust is the king of combinations in restraint of trade. In its far-reaching effects there is none to compare with it. It is remorseless in its grasp on the people, and the only change which it contemplates is to increase the price of its products at stated and frequent intervals without regard to cost. The consumer not only bears the burden of its aggressive policy of advancing prices, but also of the profits of intervening agencies. For him there is no escape from the avarice of this monopoly. To him the lumber trust is a tangible, living reality. When he sees these advancing prices without reference to increased cost of production, he needs no argument to convince him that the Government to which he contributes his support and renders true allegiance is derelict in its duty, unless it employs all the resources at its command to relieve him of these oppressions. The people demand this as a right and not as a favor. The trust has become so bold in its operations within the last year or two that it has eliminated in many localities all semblance of competition and from a central point controls both the wholesale and retail trade and fixes the price to the consumer.

I have in my possession uniform price lists ostensibly emanating from many different localities, but which are in fact printed from the same type, turned out by the same press, and issued from a common center. A further comparison of these lists with each other discloses the fact that prices are identically the same whether in Minnesota or Arkansas, Illinois or Texas, Indiana or Missouri, Louisiana or Ohio, or in any other portions of the coun-It matters not whether these price lists are issued by the Northwestern Lumbermen's Association, of Minnesota, or the Trinity River Lumber Company, of Texas. The prices quoted by each and every one of these companies are identical in every particular. I apprehend that the Department of Commerce and Labor, with information obtainable by it, will have little diffi-culty in establishing the fact that the lumber trust is a verity, whose fields of operation extend from ocean to ocean and may extend from the Tropics to and beyond the Canadian border.

This evidence is but a sample of what I have collected by personal effort during the past two years.

ENORMOUS PROFITS.

That the profits of this gigantic combination are exorbitant beyond all reason, is easily demonstrated. The value of stumpage-that is, the value per thousand feet board measure of standing yellow pine timber—based on the highest price at which the Government sold its stumpage last year was $4 per thousand. The cutting and hauling of the logs to the mill is made at an average cost not to exceed $3.50 per thousand; any well-equipped sawmill can put the lumber on the yard for $1 per thousand. Add incidental expenses, $1.50 per thousand, thus making the cost of the manufactured article $10 per thousand feet. lumber sold on the market during the past year at prices ranging from $45 to $48 per thousand feet. The difference between the cost of production and the retail price is thus found to be from $35 to $38 per thousand and represents the cost of transportation, the legitimate cost of doing the business, and what I conceive to be an exorbitant profit exacted by manipulation of the monopoly.

This statement is based upon the average of the outturn of a log, there being about as much superior as there is inferior to the grade taken as my basis. A log will yield about 20 per cent culls, 20 per cent first common, 20 per cent second common, 20 per cent firsts, and 20 per cent second firsts.

Another analysis of the data which I have obtained shows that it costs $10 to manufacture the lumber at the mills and yields to the trust a profit of at least 200 per cent. According to the last census of the United States, the value of timber products in 1900 was $566,600,000. From this the enormous profits accruing to the trust are patent.

METHODS OF THE COMBINATION.

The methods by which this trust has obtained control of the lumber business of this country are no longer necessarily a It not only arbitrarily advances the prices of lumber at stated intervals, but by various means attempts to discourage independent dealers from entering its field. Failing in that, it resorts to drastic and unscrupulous methods to crush them and ruin their business

Much of the information which I have obtained concerning this subject is of a confidential nature. For obvious reasons dealers, unwillingly in the grasp of the monopoly, are reluctant to divulge information relating to their dealings with it. All such information, however, will be easily accessible to the Department of Commerce and Labor operating under the authority and direction of Congress. The evidence already developed con-clusively shows that the whole country is subdivided into territories, each of which is dominated by an association maintaining a mere shadow of independence and in complete control of such territory, subject to the direction of the trust. The re-tail dealers within these respective subdivisions are not permitted to compete with each other either in the same town or within the allotted territory, and the minimum price which the retailer may charge is fixed by the association. If such retailer violates any of the directions of the association he is first subjected to a system of heavy fines and penalties, and if such violations are repeated the offender is then blacklisted and finally eliminated from doing business. Such is the discipline to which all retail dealers are subjected by the association to maintain the supremacy of the trust.

Oftentimes the retail dealers in a locality are united in an association, or combination, to maintain prices higher than the minimum fixed by the trust and they are always restricted to the territory prescribed by the dominant trust. As notice to the trade, the trust issues from time to time a "Directory of Regular Retail Lumber Dealers" authorized to engage in business within a prescribed territory.

COMPETITION ELIMINATED. But the retail dealers are not alone in the clutches of the trust. The wholesaler is subject to its domination as well. If he sells to an unauthorized dealer he is subject to boycott and other penalties.

The mill men are also subject to like domination and like discipline, although they have an association of their own subject to the parent association, which fixes prices, prescribes territory within which each member may operate and beyond which none can ship or solicit business, and are subject to penalties for violations of their agreements. Prior to this organization there was competition. Since it became effective there is none.

The latter association has an agreement with the trust by which the small mills are handicapped and eliminated from business as speedily as possible. All millwork must be purchased of the member of the association to which the particular territory is assigned. Often they compel the transaction of business through local dealers friendly to the interest of the trust, and in that event the local dealer obtains a percentage for handling it. If the transaction occurs in a locality where the retailers are in combination with each other and the purchase is made direct from the mill operating in that territory, a profit is added for the benefit of the local dealers and is divided among

"REGULAR" DEALERS PROTECTED.

If a contractor seeks to purchase millwork for use in a town not within the territory of the company with which he ordinarily deals, he can only purchase of the authorized or "regular" company. If the contractor or corrector products lar" company. If the contractor or carpenter undertakes to manufacture millwork even on a small scale, the price of the material which he must use is at once raised to such a point as to prohibit its profitable use, and thus competition, even on a small scale, is eliminated. The wholesaler protects the authorized retailer in every instance. If a contractor attempts to purchase direct from the wholesaler, a price will not be quoted until the wholesaler has communicated with the "regular" dealer at the contractor's home for the purpose of obtaining his prices. The contractor is asked by the wholesaler to "call later," perhaps the following day; meantime the desired information is obtained, the local price is quoted by the wholesaler, and the difference between the wholesale price to the authorized retail dealer and the price quoted to the contractor is credited to the local dealer, who thus obtains the profit the same as if he had handled the business.

LOCAL COMBINATIONS.

Where authorized local dealers have an organization, a bill of lumber is never sold by a member without first advising all the other members. In such case the local dealers are permitted to charge any price above the minimum fixed by the trust. It is noticeable that no objection is ever made by the trust to an advance of prices. The offense consists in a reduction only. The customer is required to wait until all the members of the association can be advised and the dealer who by arrangement is to receive the business is assisted by his sham competitors quoting higher prices. In this way the business is distributed and "equalized."

These methods, briefly indicated, preclude the possibility of success by an independent dealer who has the temerity to embark in the lumber business without the sanction and authority of the lumber trust. He is hampered and harassed by all sorts of schemes and devices backed by the resources of an invisible, invincible power. At first the trust tries the power of persuasion to prevent him from entering the field. If he persists and embarks in business the tactics are changed and he is boldly informed that he will have a "fight on his hands." If, perchance, he is engaged in any other line of business, an attempt is made to intimidate him by threatening competition in such

THE INVISIBLE HAND WORKS DESTRUCTION.

The "irregular" dealer may be successful in purchasing the original stock of lumber and thus tie up his capital. Then his trouble's begin. The invisible and all-powerful hand begins to work his destruction. He finds it impossible to purchase lumber which he has contracted to sell. All sorts of subterfuges are adopted to deceive and harass him. His orders with the wholesalers are not at first rejected outright, but resort to dilatory practices is made to work his ruin. The trust in that locality reduces the retail prices of lumber without regard to cost, and thus renders it impossible for the independent dealer long to continue the struggle. Exasperating delays and deceptions make success impossible for the independent dealer and the outcome of his venture is certain: He is either financially ruined or surrenders to the trust on such terms as it sees fit to impose. One of the agencies that has wrought his destruction is illustrated by the following letter issued by the trust, in confidence, to the wholesalers:

To Shippers of Lumber to the Regular Trade.

Gentlemen: Please note the following for your information:

Minnesota Lumber and Manufacturing Company, Minneapolis, Minn.—Attention is called to the inclosed, which is a photographic copy of their "ad" in the November issue of the American Cooperative Journal. Their address is given as Lumber Exchange, but no office number given. Inquiry discloses the fact that their mail is delivered and accepted at the office of the Burkholder Lumber Company.

Hanny Neesen, Wellsburg, Jova.—Formerly of Neesen Brothers, lumber dealers, who sold out. He has no lumber yard at Wellsburg, according to latest reports.

Gardner Lumber Company, Gardner, Jova.—Have lately caused lumber to be shipped to Tama, lowa, where they have no yard.

Wilkinson Lumber Company, Minneapolis, Minn.—This concern consists of L. N. Wilkinson, who advertises to sell lumber to consumers in car lots. He says he expects to fill orders out of a stock of lumber owned by one I. J. Boyum, at Park Rapids, Minn.

A. J. Aaby, Huyfield, Minn.—Has on a number of occasions professed to be going into the lumber business at Hayfield, but so far as known has never gone further than to try to secdre wholesale lists and estimates.

Monks & McKinley, Mankato, Minn.—Have caused a shipment to be made to consumers at Grogan, Minn., where they have no yard.

Peet Brothers, Anamosa, Iowa.—At the time of our last communication, the indications were that they were developing into retail lumber dealers, but late reports from there indicate that they are not regularly maintaining a complete stock.

C. E. Ross, Chevalah, Wash.—Ordered shingles from the coast for shipment to Parkston, S. Dak. On arrival there they were turned over to one Titus Heisinger, who sells them out at about cost. He has no yard at Parkston. Previously, Heisinger received shingles through Leuer Brothers, of Chewalah, Wash. He apparently has some friend at Chewalah who induces these mill men to act for him in placing shingle orders.

EFFECT OF THE BLACKLIST.

The effect of this confidential letter is illustrated by the following correspondence, from which for obvious reasons names and localities are omitted. The two letters were addressed to the same parties.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 6, 1906.

GENTLEMEN: We have your favor of January 5, inclosing order fcr one car of No. 1 hemlock, for which please accept our thanks.

We have just received this morning an inventory from the mill and find that in quite a number of items we are very very short. We can fill your order as follows:

100 2 x 4-10 No. 1 Hem. S1S & E.
100 " 16 "
400 " 12 "
400 " 14 "

100 100 400 " 14 200 2 x 6-10 200 " 12 200 " 14 " 11

Where we reduced the 2 x 4's 10 and 16 inch, and 2 x 6-16 to just one-half the quantity that you stated in your order, we were obliged to increase some of the other items in order to make a minimum carload and find that we can best spare 2 x 6's, 12 and 14 inch. Kindly advise us that this change is satisfactory and we will then give your order all dispatch possible.

Yours, very truly,

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 9, 1906.

Gentlemen: We are obliged to return to you your order January 5, 1906, for one car hemlock. We sent this order to the mill, and they have returned it to us to-day with a letter stating that their business relations with another concern will not permit them to make shipment to you, or to us at ________ for delivery to you. They have no hesitancy in telling us that they have agreed with the _______ people not to ship to anyone else at _______ . We called them up by long-distance telephone and maintained that we had purchased this stock from them without any reservations, and that we demanded the right to ship it wherever we pleased. They tell us that they would not load the car, and that while we own the hemlock, yet if any car was loaded for shipment to ______ that we would be obliged to come over to the mill and load it ourselves. We have made the case very plain to you and see no way under the circumstances that we can make the shipment, as they think more of the _______ business apparently than they do of ours. We have no other stock that we can get onto the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road.

I submitted these letters, together with other information, to the Department of Commerce and Labor January 18, 1906, and received the following reply thereto:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BURBAU OF CORPORATIONS,
Washington, January 22, 1906.

Hon. A. B. KITTREDGE, United States Senate.

HERBERT KNOX SMITH, Acting Commissioner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from South Da-kota kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business? Mr. KITTREDGE.

Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be stated.
The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, when I first began to make inquiry into the conditions of the lumber trade in the Northwest, I found it difficult to obtain evidence respecting the operations of the trust. Since offering this resolution I have received a great mass of correspondence relating to the subject received a great mass of correspondence relating to the subject from all sections of the country. Many of the writers have related in detail their experience, both as dealers in and consumers of lumber. I have not the slightest doubt of the ability of the executive department to establish, by an abundance of competent evidence, the fact of the existence of a conspiracy, in contravention of law, affecting the lumber business.

Within the past five years the prices of lumber and timber products have been arbitrarily advanced from 100 to 500 per cent. Prices of dimension stuff have been advanced 50 per cent in the last four years. Ordinary flooring was advanced 334 in the last four years. Ordinary flooring was advanced 331 per cent during the past twelve months, and the price of oak flooring has been forced at intervals during the past two years from $40 to $100 per thousand feet, an advance of 150 per cent from a price which was already high. Of this latter price $50, or upwards of 80 per cent of the net advance, is nothing better than robbery and is, in fact, the plunder of a commercial outlaw.

THE TARIFF ON LUMBER. In the early operations of the trust it was argued in explanation of advancing prices that the duty on lumber was the cause. Let us see what force there is in this argument. The Dingley tariff act of 1897 restored the lumber schedules of the McKinley Act of 1890, under which logs were admitted free, rough lumber was dutiable to the extent of $1 per thousand feet board measure, and there was a duty of $2 per thousand feet board measure, ure, on lumber planed on both sides. Between 1894 and 1897, under the Wilson Act, all of these articles were admitted free. From information which I have obtained I am convinced that the lumber trust has been in successful operation without interruption for more than twenty years, during which period it has been operating with ever-increasing boldness. Had the existence of the trust been known to the framers of the tariff act of either 1890 or 1897 it is not probable that it would have been thought necessary to foster the lumber industry by a protective duty. However that may be, and whatever may have been the argument in favor of such a cuty, there is no longer either necessity or excuse for its continuance. It is not the policy of this Gov-ernment to foster monopolies, and while it must be apparent that the present duties are not solely responsible for the exorbitant prices of lumber, yet I am unqualifiedly in favor of their CONSPIRACY TO EXACT TRIBUTE.

The results of my investigation during 1905 were laid before the proper Executive Department in that year. I was convinced at that time that the lumber trade in the Northwest was under the control, more or less absolute, of an illegal and oppressive combination, but I did not know then, as I believe that I have now demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt, that the combination which holds the Northwest in its grasp is a gigantic conspiracy to exact tribute from American people, regardless of their geographical distribution. I did not know then as I now do know that the Northwestern Lumbermen's Association had its counterpart in every section of the country, each operating in territory with well defined and carefully prescribed metes and bounds, and each a counterpart of a monstrous monopoly which owns billions of acres of forest lands in fee simple, con-trols mills and factories, distributes their outputs, and fixes prices therefor without regard to the law of supply and demand, the cost of production, the welfare of communities or the rights of persons, and operates in flagrant defiance of the laws of Con-

This criminal combination is a menace to the whole country on which it preys. Of all the trusts perhaps this is the only one of which it may be truthfully said that it is literally with us from the cradle to the grave. The Federal Government alone has the legal authority and judicial power to punish and dissolve it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARTILLERY.

Mr. WARREN. I move to take up the bill (S. 3923) to re-organize and to increase the efficiency of the artillery of the United States Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amend-on Military Affairs will be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 6, page 4, line 9, after the word "respectively," to strike out:

Provided further, That upon the outbreak of war, or when war is imminent, the President is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint as an officer of the Volunteer Army one second lieutenant of Coast Artillery for each company of Coast Artillery, to be selected preferably from the noncommissioned officers of that arm; and to increase the strength of the Coast Artillery by an average of three sergeants, four corporals, and thirty-four privates for each company; but the total enlisted strength of the Coast Artillery, as provided under this act, shall not exceed 26,117, exclusive of master electricians, electrician-sergeants, first class, and electrician-sergeants, second class.

And to insert:

and that the total enlisted strength of the Coast Artillery, as provided under this act, shall not exceed 19,147, exclusive of master electricians, electrician-sergeants, first class, and electrician-sergeants, second class.

So as to make the section read:

Sec. 6. That each company of coast artillery shall consist of one captain, one first lieutenant, one second lieutenant, one first sergeant, one quartermaster-sergeant, two cooks, two mechanics, two musicians, and such number of sergeants, corporals, and privates as may be fixed by the President in accordance with the requirements of the service to which it may be assigned: Provided, That the total number of sergeants and corporals in the coast artillery shall not exceed 1,360 and 2,040, respectively, and that the total enlisted strength of the coast artillery, as provided under this act, shall not exceed 19,147, exclusive of master electricians, electrician-sergeants, second class.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 6, line 13, after the word "coast," to insert "artillery;" so as to read:

That on and after the approval of this act the coast artillery and the field artillery shall be permanently separated, the separation to be effected as follows.

All officers in the present Artillery Corps shall remain on one list as regards promotion until there shall have been filled, subject to the provisions of section 10 of this act, all vacancies to which promotion can be immediately made in the coast and field artillery combined. After such promotion they shall in each grade be assigned by the President to the coast or the field artillery according to the special aptitude for their respective services, such assignment to be permanent: Provided, That in making these assignments to the coast and to the field artillery the officers in each grade, taken in order of rank and beginning with the senior in that grade, shall be divided into a number of sections equal to the number of officers of that grade to be assigned to the field artillery, such sections to be in each grade as nearly equal numerically as possible; and there shall be assigned from each of these sections one officer to the field artillery and the remainder to the coast artillery. The number of officers composing a section in the grades not completely filled by promotion of the officers of the present Artillery Corps shall be determined by dividing the number of offices authorized herein for the grade in the coast and the field artillery combined by the number authorized for the grade in the field artillery: Provided further, That—

After such promotion they shall, in each grade, be assigned by the President to the coast artillery or to the field artillery, according to special aptitude and qualifications and agreeably to individual preference, so far as may be practicable and for the good of the service, such assignments to be permanent; and.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 7, line 25, after the word "coast" to insert "artillery;" so as to read:

and all officers promoted or appointed in the artillery thereafter shall be commissioned as officers of the coast artillery or the field artillery, as the case may be, and shall be promoted by seniority in their own branch, subject to the provisions of the laws governing promotion in the Army at large.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 8, line 4, after the words "Sec. 10," to strike out:

That all vacancies created or caused by this act shall be filled, except as hereinafter provided, by promotion according to seniority in the present Artillery Corps, subject to examination as now prescribed by law. Of the vacancies created or caused in the grades of captain and first and second lieutenant in each branch one-fifth shall be filled in each fiscal year until the total number of officers herein provided for shall have been attained. First and second lieutenants of cavalry and infantry of longer commissioned service at the date of approval of this act than officers of artillery of corresponding grades who would otherwise be promoted under this act shall be given the option of promotion to the next higher grade in the artillery, subject to examination to be prescribed by the President.

motion according to seniority, subject to examination as now prescribed by law. Of the vacancies created or caused by this act which can not be filled by promotion of officers now in the Artillery Corps, one-fifth in each branch shall be filled in each fiscal year until the total number of officers herein provided for shall have been attained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 9, line 7, after the word "law," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the number of assignments to the cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, and infantry made each year from the graduates of the United States Military Academy shall be as nearly as practicable in the ratio of the authorized total commissioned strength of each of these arms of the service to their authorized total commissioned strength combined.

Mr. WARREN. On page 4, line 7, after the word "artillery," I move to insert the words "so fixed" with a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. President, from the report of the committee I see that the increased cost under the bill is estimated for the first year at about $2,000,000; that the annual increased cost will amount to about $2,600,000 for the fifth year, and that $5,500,000 will be expended for barracks, quarters, stables, gun sheds, etc., extending over the period of five years. I should like to have some explanation of the bill from the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The actual increase for the first year is one million six hundred thousand and some odd dollars. I speak in round numbers. To be exact, $1,689,615 for total increased cost, pay of officers and men, and all supplies.

Mr. KEAN. Then the report is inaccurate.

Mr. WARREN. The bill, the Senator will observe, has been amended.

Mr. KEAN. But the report has not.

Mr. WARREN. I am speaking of the present bill with proposed amendments. The increased cost of the artillery, coast and field, will be when all the places are filled at the end of five years $2,500,874 per annum over and above the present cost.

The matter of five million or five and one-half million dollars for barracks really has little reference to this increase of force, because that would be approximately the estimate for the present posts and for the present force.

At the various places where there are emplacements and guns there must be barracks for the men and stables for the horses; whether men are there continually or not we must house our forces. So this increase of men does not necessarily make more places for barracks, and the barracks item can be eliminated so far as it applies strictly to this increase of men.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take a long time in presenting to the Senate what I have to say in support of the proposed increase in the Artillery Corps of the Army provided for in this bill. But we are drifting along in a way which I think is not well understood by the Congress and by the people of this country, and without oratory or undue persuasion I want, if I may, to present plain facts and conditions which are startling to me and I believe will be equally startling to the Senate.

We have been engaged for something over twenty years in the work of erecting and manning a comprehensive system of defenses for our coast lines, and in my judgment we are either running away with ourselves and spending needless amounts of money or else we are almost criminally negligent in not providing for the most essential factor in our work-the motive and governing force to utilize these expenditures along the lines for which they have been made; that is, we are not furnishing the brain and brawn, we are building emplacements and guns, but we are not providing for men to care for and handle them. until at this hour we find ourselves where we ought in justice and good faith to take an account of stock to find what we have, what we need, and what is our condition-whether we are solvent or otherwise.

But within the past two years the National Coast Defense Board—a new board instituted for the purpose of reviewing the original Endicott Board plans, and making changes which later inventions and the growth of the United States seemed to make necessary, reported last March, Abbot, Corps of Engineers. Capt. Charles S. Smith, Ordnance Department. Commander W. T. Sampson, United States Navy. Commander Caspar F. Goodrich, United States Navy. Mr. Joseph Morgan, jr., of Pennsylvania. Mr. Erastus Cornling, of New York.

The above Board was appointed by Grover Cleveland, President.

On March 5, 1906, a new board, consisting of the following, were appointed by President Roosevelt, and termed the "National Coast Defense Board:

Hon. William H. Taft, Secretary of War, president of the board.
Lieut. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, Chief of Staff.
Maj. Gen. George L. Gillespie, Assistant Chief of Staff.
Brig. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely, Chief Signal Officer.

Brig. Gen. Alexander Mackenzie, Chief of Engineers.
Capt. Charles M. Thomas, U. S. Navy.
Capt. Charles S. Sperry, U. S. Navy.
Maj. George W. Goethals, General Staff, will act as secretary of the sard.

Subsequent retirement of officers caused some changes.

Now, Mr. President, with nearly $120,000,000 already expended and $76,000,000 or more to expend as already estimated for, we have as yet made almost no preparation for caring for the objects of these expenditures or for their use should occasion arise. It is obvious that this expenditure is unnecessary, of no value, and foolish unless we are going to care for it, support it, and be in constant readiness to use it. It takes men to put in motion, keep in motion, and make available the guns and pro-

These figures are based upon the number required for one shift only, no allowance being made for sick, wounded, reserves,

When the Endicott Board reported, it was then known that we would require some 40,000 men for the defenses which they had recommended, while at that time (1885) we had in the artillery only the following:

Of these, 14,278 men are coast and 4,012 are field.

I may say here that the submarine mines, torpedo defenses, etc., have lately been taken from the Engineer Corps and added to the Coast Artillery, but in making the change we made no provision for a force to handle them. Now, this bill proposes an increase of-

Any increase above this, even in the time of war, would require action by Congress.

Of course it is not expected that all of our defenses in all parts of the country would be under fire at once, and it is fair to presume that we could move men from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast or from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast should an attack be made from one side only, with sufficient notice beforehand. But this would take time and great risk, and we certainly ought to have a fair proportion of all our guns in place and manned sufficiently to utilize them.

At the time the Endicott Board was ordered we were practically without any defenses. We had, in all, five regiments of artillery, this strength having been fixed at the close of the civil war, and, with the exception of twenty privates to each battery, this strength was maintained until 1898, when two regiments more were added. In 1899 another increase was made by adding two batteries to each regiment, and in 1901 the present Artillery Corps was organized—126 companies of Coast Artillery and 30 batteries of Field Artillery. Our present arthery and so batteries of Field Arthery. Our present condition is that, with 393 batteries now constructed, only 125 have troops assigned to them and are in commission and the balance, 268, are out of commission and in the hands of care takers—less than one-third the number of officers required and slightly over one-third the number of men. If we were drawn into battle to-morrow but one-third of our batteries could be put in action, and those put in action could fight with only from 50 to 75 per cent of their guns.

The increase asked for is to be gradual as to officers, extending over five years, one-fifth each year, the enlisted men being taken on at once, providing we are fortunate enough to secure the enlistment of competent men. Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. I do. Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Wyoming will permit me in that connection, I will say that, as I recollect the act for the permanent military establishment, it limited the total military strength of the Army in all branches.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And, as I understand this bill, it provides that the total number of enlisted men shall not be increased.

Mr. WARREN. That the maximum of the Army shall not be increased.

Mr. BACON. Yes. So that the effect of this bill, so far as the enlisted men are concerned, is not to increase the numerical size of the present military establishment, but simply to provide that such number of them as is indicated in this bill shall be of the artillery arm. Is not that correct?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. BACON. And the only increase is in the matter of officers and of other things essential for the proper maintenance, discipline, and sustenance of these particular men?

Mr. WARREN. That is right. I will give the exact number of the increase, if the Senator would like to know it. At the end of five years there will be in the artillery, field and coast, 296 increase in number of officers and 6.337 increase in number of enlisted men, including noncommissioned officers, etc.

Mr. KEAN. But does not that increase the Army?
Mr. BACON. As I understand the Senator from Wyoming it will not be an increase of the Army.

Mr. WARREN. It does not increase the maximum strength of the Army as provided by law. It does not raise the maximum.

Mr. BACON. The last statement of the Senator that there would be an increase of over 6,000, then, is not what he intended?

Mr. WARREN. It increases the artillery branch of the Army; that proportion which under the law as at present is allowed to the artillery.

Mr. BACON. Exactly. Mr. WARREN. It increases the Coast Artillery and Field Artillery.

Mr. BACON. It does not include the Field Artillery in the matter of officers.

Mr. WARREN. In this connection I may say that we are short, at present, in the authorized force, nearly 25 per cent—this because of insufficient pay, etc. Mr. President, I have in my hand a statement made, at my request, by a most competent artillery officer, covering, in some detail, figures as to past expenditures and future wants and conditions, which seems so thoroughly comprehensive, yet brief and to the point, that I shall ask permission to incorporate it in my remarks:

The present system of coast defense is founded primarily upon the report of the Endicott Board, organized by direction of Congress in 1885. That report gives the principles upon which any system of coast defense must be based and a scheme or system of defense for the various ports and harbors of the United States which the Board considered of sufficient importance to be defended.

The details of the system of defense have been modified and added to from time to time to keep pace with the advances in ordnance, electrical appliances, methods of construction, and with changes in design and armament of war vessels. The present system is, therefore, the result of a gradual development. In addition to the heavy or high-power guns and submarine mines proposed by the Endicott Board, defended ports are now equipped with rapid-fire guns, and to some extent with power plants, searchlights, and range-finding and fire-control systems, necessary adjuncts of an adequate defense to-day, though not considered to in 1886.

The estimates of the Endicott Board have, in effect, formed the basis guits and submarine mines proposed by the Endicott Board, defended ports are now equipped with rapid-fire guins, and to some extent with power plants, searchlights, and range-finding and fire-control systems, necessary adjuncts of an adequate defense to-day, though not considered so 1886.

Search and the search of the Endicott Board have, in effect, formed the basis of all appropriations heretofore made by Congress for fortifications. Nearly two-thirds of the land armament recommended by the Endicott Board has been installed or provided for. But, since the date of the report so many conditions then existing have been materially modified, and the engines or implements of war have been so greatly improved, and others, untried or unknown, of undoubted value, developed, that, on January 31, 1905, the President organized a new board known as the National Coast Defense Board, to revise the plans of the Endicott Board and to recommend the armament fixed and floating, mobile torpedoes, submarine mines, and all other defensive appliances that may be necessary to complete the harbor defense with the most economical and advantageous expenditure of money.

The plans of the Endicott Board carried an estimate of $126,377,800. The first appropriation made by Congress based upon these estimates was approved September 22, 1888, when $1,350,000 was appropriated Appropriations have continued from year to year until $72,750,583,98 have been expended for batteries with their guns, mortars, and carriages, for submarine union, more appropriate for fire-control installation, and the submarine mines, searchlights, and power plants have been provided at a cost of $63,494,97. Submarine mines, searchlights, and power plants have been provided at a cost of $53,719,100,200, under the plans of the Endicott Board report, is $119,102,483,32. The inflications, and for cammunication, etc.

Under the plans of the Endicott Board 376 mortars, 337 heavy guns, and 587 rapid-fire guns, with their emplacements, have been provided at a cost of $5,718,76 total required for the United States, constructed or projected, 1,985 officers, 47.709 men; required for the gefenses of the insular possessions and the isthmian canal, projected by the National Coast Defense Board, 292 officers, 7,401 men; grand total required for the United States, the insular possessions, and the isthmian canal, 2,277 officers, Board, 292 officers, 7,401 men; grand total required for the United States, the insular possessions, and the isthmian canal, 2,277 officers, 55,110 men.

It should be borne in mind that these figures are based upon the actual number required for one shift, if the entire force could be mustered and marched, each man to his place. No allowance is made for sick or wounded, for reserves or supports; the figures given indicate the number of positions which will have to be filled when the defenses are manned.

In 1885, when the Endicott Board drew plans for the defenses of the United States, to man which requires 1,985 officers and 47,709 men, the artillery of the United States consisted of five regiments; in all 280 officers and some 2,770 men. This strength had been fixed in 1865 at the close of the civil war, and with the exception of the addition of 200 privates to each battery, this strength was maintained until 1898, at which time two regiments were added. In 1899 another increase was made by adding two field batteries to each regiment, and in 1901 the present Artillery corps was organized, consisting of 126 companies of Coast Artillery and 30 batteries of Field Artillery. Under this law, 514 officers and 14,153 men are now assigned to the Coast Artillery.

1901 the present Artillery Corps was organized, consisting of 126 companies of Coast Artillery and 30 batteries of Field Artillery. Under this law, 514 officers and 14,153 men are now assigned to the Coast Artillery.

These 514 officers and 14,153 men are assigned to coast defenses that require 1,774 officers and 41,833 men. What is the result? Of 393 batteries now constructed, 125 only have troops assigned to them, are in commission, and the rest, 268, are out of commission, in the hands of care takers. If we were drawn into a fight to-morrow, only one-third of our batteries could go into action, and, due to the shortage of men in the companies, many of these batteries could only fight from 50 to 75 per cent of their guns. The question naturally arises as to the wisdom of making any further appropriations for the provision of additional defenses until Congress has determined upon some means of providing men to fight the defenses already installed.

Let us consider a concrete case. For the defense of Puget Sound, the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad and the site of the only navy-yard on the Pacific coast that can accommodate a modern battle ship, there are now mounted 104 mortars and guns.

To operate these mortars and guns and the accompanying submarine mines, searchlights, power plants, etc., 149 officers and 3,626 men are required. There are actually on duty now in the forts on Puget Sound 27 officers and 902 men. The National Coast Defense Board says that the defenses of Puget Sound are inadequate; that the four 12-inch guns there are not powerful enough, and they propose to manufacture a new and greater caliber, a 14-inch gun, and to mount seven of these in Puget Sound, along with twenty-three others of smaller caliber. These additional defenses will require 50 additional officers and 1,168 additional men. The completed scheme would, therefore, require 199 officers and 4,794 men. There are available 27 officers and 902 men. What can possibly be the advisability of adding more guns when two-thirds expensive devices, or whether we have simply taken our old stage-coach drivers and designated them to perform the duties of locomotive engineers.

In 1885 seacoast cannon were all muzzle-loaders and were nearly all smoothbores. They were mounted upon the crudest kind of carriages and were loaded with black powder. At that time a battery of Coast Artillery consisted of a captain, three lieutenants, a first sergeant, a certain number of sergeants, corporals, and privates, two musiclans, an artificer, and a wagoner. To-day the organization of a company of artillery is the same except that there has been added a company quartermaster-sergeant, and that the artificer and the wagoner, who drew the pay of corporals, are now called mechanics and get the pay of sergeants. The organization of a company of Coast Artillery to-day is essentially the same as it was before the civil war, when guns were mounted upon wooden carriages. Congress has spent more than $5,700,000 for submarine mines, searchlights, and power plants to be used in connection therewith. How many skilled men have been provided for the operation of these mines and searchlights, how many engineers and firemen for the power plants? None; not one. Three million five hundred thousand dollars has been spent for the installation of the fire-control systems. Every company has assigned to it two fire-control stations, in each of which is mounted a $1,500 range finder, the telescope alone being worth about $500. How many observers, or skilled men, have been provided to operate and care for this delicate and expensive apparatus? Not one. The Coast Artillery to-day is not satisfied, as it was fifty years ago, with sergeants and corporals: what it needs is engineers, firemen, master gunners, observers, plotters, casemate electricians, gun pointers, searchlight and switchboard operators, and other expert grades to meet its particular requirements. Sergeants and corporals meet an infantry and cavalry requirement, but they do not meed more power plants, but engineers and

Mr. WARREN. I call particular attention to what is said about the shortage of men, especially as to experts. We can not enlist up to our present allowance or maximum, because we do not pay enough. Here is the great Navy of the United States, which has always distinguished itself, but neither more nor less than the Army, in which enlisted men and noncommissioned officers are paid such compensation as the President of the United States may determine. As I understand it, the pay is fixed from time to time by the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, but in the Army we have and I am not apologizing for using the term—an obsolete, or it should be obsolete, pay-roll scale, made up many years ago, when we were using smooth-bore, muzzle-loading guns, requiring only main strength and very little practice to load them. Everything was done by main strength. Now, that has all passed away. The mechanism about the breech of one of the cannon of to-day requires a man able to almost construct and erect a complicated piece of machinery. The men who have to take care of the power plants in these batteries, which are electrical power plants, are required to be electricians and mathematicians in the firing control. Formerly your gun was in plain sight and you had to provide in front of it such shelter as you could get for your men. It is now different; it is operated by touching a spring, and the immense gun rises from behind an embankment, and somebody, located perhaps a quarter of a mile away, will telephone down to the man underneath how to sight the gun and fire it, bringing it back and loading and firing two or three times a minute, whereas formerly it was once in five minutes, and so on. Now, the men who are enlisted must be taught to be electricians and machinists, and hence mathematicians. It takes the entire time of one enlistment to teach them, and when they get to the end of the term of enlistment, instead of reenlisting for $15 or $18 a month, they step out and get $50 or $75 or $100 a month, as the case may be, in some machine shop or electrical works.

This bill not only provides for more men, but it provides for larger pay for these experts, so that we may have inducement for them to reenlist, and so that we may have men competent to do the work. As it is now, we are nearly 25 per cent short of the authorized force in the Coast Artillery and are totally unable to fill up the number.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand, from the very lucid statement of the Senator from Wyoming, that the necessity for this legislation grows out of the fact that while infantry men and cavalry men may be improvised, as it were, to handle these guns, it requires a long and careful process of training, which can not be secured in the presence of an emergency.

Mr. WARREN. That is right. Furthermore, I wish to make this point clear: We are not raising the Coast Artillery now to anything like the number it would require if we wished to put all our artillery in operation. We are simply raising it to the point so as to have a sufficient nucleus around which we may rally men from the cavalry, from the infantry, from the State Militia, and from volunteers in case of war. But we are only But we are only attempting to care for this machinery and these guns, and to have, as I say, a nucleus around which to form an army. For instance, the estimate for the men and for the officers necessary, if we shall follow out the Endicott Board plan, or if we shall follow out the National Defense Board plan, which is a later one, would require, in order to have one relief, without anybody being sick or absent, something over 55,000 enlisted men. I think I have the correct number here. Yes; it will require of officers 2,297 and of enlisted men 56,110.

We have expended one hundred and nineteen and odd million dollars upon something that will require about $75,000,000 more to complete; and when completed would require nearly 3,000 officers and more than 55,000 men to give one relief—not three reliefs or four reliefs, as we should have if we were really in action and in war.

Then for the fortifications which we have already got in place, Mr. President, it would require, if we were to undertake to put them into action, 41,833 enlisted men and 1,754 officers for one relief.

Of course we had when the Endicott Board made this estimate the same number that we had cut down to after the civil war. There were something less than 3,000 men—I think it was 2,770 men and 280 officers. That number has been increased from time to time until our maximum now is 14,278 enlisted men in the Coast Artillery and 4,012 in the field. The increase which we propose is for officers, 296—and it takes five years to complete that increase—and of enlisted men, 5,043 for the coast and 998 for the field, making a total of 6,337. When that is done, the maximum of artillery under the proposed law, Coast and Field Artillery together, would be 947 officers and 24,331 en-

Under the present law the President would only be permitted to add in time of war a few privates, amounting to 755, to be exact. Under proposed law the President would have the power of adding 1,620 privates and 360 noncommissioned officers.

of adding 1,620 privates and 360 noncommissioned officers. While the increase of men is important, the increase in pay for these experts is far more important. It might as well be understood now that we here stand and have heretofore acted like a farmer who has six horses and seven wagons, and not a harness; and when the fall crops come, he buys more horses and more wagons, but not a harness. We are engaged here in appropriating money year after year providing for guns and emplacements, the money for which is appropriated by bills which come before the Committee on Appropriations; and I happen to be a member of the subcommittee having charge of that bill. In that we may appropriate five millions and over for more guns and more emplacements, and not a cent for the real motive power—men with which to handle them. As it is now, more than three-quarters of our guns are unused and more than two-thirds of them, I think I am safe in saying, are in charge of care takers, greased over and canvased, lying on the ground. We have in one case a gun that cost over half a million dollars, simply gummed over with grease and canvased, lying like a log of wood by the roadside.

Mr. President, I have some tables here of figures that I will ask to have inserted in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Dakota?
Mr. WARREN. I do.
Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator, if we have so many guns that are not being used, if it would not be rather good economy to quit manufacturing more guns that we have a coast line of many thousand miles. We have always believed that we must in some manner protect that coast line. That fact became impressed upon Congress years ago until they took it up with great consideration. I have here the report of the Endicott Board. It fills two large volumes. It was a Board consisting of experts of the Army and Navy and from civil life, who took testimony all over this country and consulted with other experts in the same line in this country and abroad and decided upon a system of defenses for our coast. Congress, proceeding along the line of that report, has appropriated and expended more than $119,000,000, and if the scheme is carried to its logical conclusion in this country and in the insular possessions it will require some $75,000,000 more. But we have not really effective one-fourth, certainly not one-third, of the defenses, because there are no men to take care of the guns we now have.

I am not pleading, Mr. President, for more guns. is a very pertinent inquiry whether of not we shall make any more guns. I am ready to quit making guns; I am ready to quit putting up emplacements; I am ready to call a halt now in proceeding under the recommendations of the Endicott Board or upon those of the later board. Certainly we ought to call a halt long enough to catch up somewhere in order that proper care may be given to the great works in which we have invested vast millions.

It only requires that a man should go to one of these batteries and see the machinery that we have planted there and how useful it is to convince him of the great need for men to care for them. I am asking here for only a small portion of what would be asked for if we were going to fully complete the manning of the various fortifications that we have now constructed and fully finished.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I feel sure that if Senators will stop to think of this bill there will not be a vote against it, either on this side or on the opposite side of the Chamber. am sure that our friends on the other side have as great a pride in safeguarding this country against any possible attack from a foreign foe as those of us on this side have. I do not believe it requires any argument to convince even my friend, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus], of the necessity for the bill.

As the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has said, we have guns that have cost this Government thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars, and emplacements that we are going ahead and making every day, and yet we have not men, I might say, though it may possibly seem a little extravagant, even to cut the weeds around the emplacements that have been constructed for these great guns.

The Senator from Wyoming has ably presented the subject to the Senate. I agree with him when he says let us quit emplacements, let us quit appropriating money coast defenses and for the manufacture of guns unless we have men to care for the emplacements and guns and to man them in case of emergency.

We do not ask for a number of men sufficient to man these guns in case of war, but we merely ask for a number sufficient so that they may be well drilled and equipped, able to care for the guns, and to educate the militia or the men who may be suddenly called into active service to take part in the defense of our coast. Mr. President, there is no business man in the Senate Chamber who would go on expending thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars in the manufacture of first-class guns and in preparing emplacements for them and then have nobody to care for them. As I once before said on this floor when the bill for coast defenses and for the manufacture of arms and equipment comes before the Senate, unless provision is made for men to care for these expensive guns and emplacements, I shall do everything in my power to prevent any appropriation for the extension of the emplacements and for the manufacture of additional guns.

Mr. President, this is an important question with which we must deal. It not a theory; it is a fact that we have not got the men. As I have heretofore stated, I have visited a number of our coast defenses during the past year, and I found lying absolutely in the brush and in the weeds, because there is nobody to care for them, guns that have cost this Government $150,000 to build. Is that the part of wisdom? I ask my friends on the other side, if it be that they look at the bill as an offert to increase the American transfer of the side of the si effort to increase the Army, to lay aside their prejudice against that proposition and give us a sufficient number of men to care for this ordnance and for these fortifications.

This is one of the most important bills that will come before the Senate at the present session, and I do hope that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to pass it without a dissenting voice. Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to give one example.

Here is the great Puget Sound fortification. There are on the Puget Sound now, mounted, 104 mortars and guns. To operate those mortars and guns and submarine mines and searchlights and power plants, fire control, etc., requires 149 officers and 3.626 men. We only have available there 20 officers and 902

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. Does not the Senator from Wyoming think that light-houses are more needed on that coast than artillery?

Mr. SCOTT. We need them both.

Mr. WARREN. There has been no definite call, I think, for light-houses which has not been responded to.

Mr. FRYE. We are supplying the light-houses as fast as they ask for them.

Mr. KEAN. They have not been given. Mr. FRYE.

They have by my committee.

In the sanother matter that I ought to men-Mr. WARREN. The artillery have had loaded on them, without their asking it, as I understand it, the entire submarine and torpedo planting business, etc., which formerly belonged to the engineers. It is a class of defenses that requires great care and skilled men. All that class of work has passed out from the control of the engineers over to the artillery, but we have not given the artillery the men or a dollar to take care of the additional burden. So that the increase we are now asking for is also to cover the submarine mines and torpedo defenses and all that goes with the coast defenses, as well as to provide for the Field Artillery, which is hereafter to be a part of the mobile Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Have the amendments been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments have all been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KEAN. Now I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will not let the bill go over to another time?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no. Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to permit the bill to pass at this time.

Mr. WARREN. If I felt there was anyone absent who really wished to oppose the bill, and who has asked to have it passed over until present in person, or if I felt that the bill had not had the proper consideration, I certainly would not ask for a vote upon it because I seek no advantage. But I know of no Senator, either present or absent, who has requested further In fact, I gave due notice some weeks ago that I would call it up and press it the very first opportunity. ask that a vote may be taken on the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. Now I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have a little bill here for which I should like to have present consideration.

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 6134.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (8, 6134) providing for the conveyance to the State of North Dakota of certain tracts of land for the use and benefit of the North Dakota State Historical Society.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill from what committee it comes?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It comes with a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was going to ask if it was a unanimous report, but the Senator has answered me.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is a unanimous report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE obtained the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President-

Mr. FRYE. I yield to the Senator from California, who is about to make the same request I would have made.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 21689) to increase the limit of cost of five light-house tenders heretofore authorized.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GALEN E. GREEN.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3393) granting an honorable discharge to Galen E. Green, to report it with an amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire what were the circumstances under which this soldier left the service?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say that the soldier left the service under the finding of a court-martial, which was afterwards set aside by the President. The soldier was paid the full amount of the pay, and the evidence shows beyond question that an error was made in the original verdict. The bill has passed the House.

Mr. BACON. I am satisfied with the statement of the Senator from Indiana. I simply wanted to know whether our action now would throw any light on the various legal propositions which have been discussed here with so much eagerness during the past two weeks

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think not. Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator from Georgia asked under what circumstances this man became detached from the Army. If I remember the case—and the Senator from Indiana will correct me if I am at fault-he was tried by court-martial for refusing to obey the orders of his superior in the face of the enemy. He was ordered to go to the front on the staff of the commanding officer, and he positively refused to obey the order.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Florida will excuse me. That is the Darling case; not this one. This is a mere case of a failure to issue a certificate; that is all.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Oh! I beg pardon.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INFRINGEMENT OF UNITED STATES PATENTS.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7676) to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to provide additional protection for owners of patents of the United States, and for other

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that the section named be amended by adding thereto, after the words "together with the costs," the following:

And whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States shall be used by the United States, without license or authority of the owner thereof, such owner may recover reasonable compensation for such use by suit in the Court of Claims: Provided, however, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, which might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement as set forth in Title LX of the Porrised Statutes Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 21, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Hev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, and to disagree to all of the amendments of the Senate except one, being Senate amendment No.

222, and to agree to that with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill and to disagree to all of the Senate amendments thereto save the one indicated.

there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the Chair to again state the request of the gentle-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take Speaker's table the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to disagree to all of the amendments of the Senate thereto except one, as indicated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And which is that?

Amendment No. 222, being section 4, that Mr. LITTAUER. on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, etc., and as to that I shall make a separate request, in which I shall move to concur in that amendment with an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the gentleman moves to disagree to all of the amendments except that, and later on proposes to offer an amendment to that amendment for the consideration of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be the effect

Mr. WILLIAMS. As to that I have no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman referred to this amendment and he used the word "etc." I would like to have him read just what the "etc." is.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that his colleague, Mr. LITTAUER, submits two propositions in The House will have to act on the first, which is to nonconcur, and then he proposes to state his motion with respect to this amendment, which is not included in the first request.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But I want to know what all that is before I waive my right to object. I would like to have him read it.

Mr. LITTAUER. The amendment that is not objected to is amendment 222, being section 4, as follows:

On and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice-President of the United States shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each.

That is the complete amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will now report Senate amendment 222.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 222: Strike out all of section 4.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I now move to concur in that amendment with an amendment thereto which I have sent to the desk and which I ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to concur with the amendment of the Senate with an amendment thereto, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House agree to amendment of the Senate No. 222, with an amendment as follows:

Omit the matter stricken out by the said amendment and insert the Omit the matter stricken out by the said amendment and his collowing:

"That on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President of the United States, and the heads of Executive Departments, who are members of the President's Cabinet, shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each, and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a minute or two.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield a minute to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that I am opposed to the proposition to increase the salaries of members of Congress in the manner provided in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and I shall vote against it, Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment that the increase as regards the members of the Senate and House take effect from the 4th of March, 1709, instead [Laughter and applause.]

[Cries of "Too far back."]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, of course I mean 1909.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massa-

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Massachusetts has not offered an amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts has not the floor for the purpose. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. GILLETT. I asked the gentleman from New York if he would yield to me for the purpose of offering such an amend-

Mr. LITTAUER. I yielded to him, but not for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Then I simply wish to say, Mr. Speaker, I voted for the salary proposition which was recently before the House, and I should vote for this if my amendment should be adopted, which would leave it as it was then; but I do not feel like voting for a bill which directly affects my own salary, and I therefore shall vote against it.

Mr. LITTAUER. I now yield to my colleague from New York [Mr. Driscoll].

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discuss the merits of this proposed amendment increasing the salaries of Senators and Representatives. I voted against it on the former occasion and gave my reasons, and will vote against it I only wish to say now that this proposed amendment, increasing our salaries, concerns every man who is a Member of this body, and especially every man who was elected to the Sixtieth Congress.

This matter is not important because of an enormous increase of the appropriation. It will amount to only between $1,200,000 and $1,300,000 a year, which is a small item compared with other appropriations made by the Congress. It is important because it concerns every man personally, and it seems to me it should not come up for consideration and determination in this House suddenly and without notice to the Members. A date should be fixed some day next week, so that every Member of this body may have notice of the time, and have an opportunity to be here and vote for or against it.

Again, there should be a roll call and a viva voce vote on this proposition. The question is whether we shall increase our own salaries. Some men on this floor believe in the increase, and on the former occasion spoke for it and voted for it, and went on record on a yea-and-nay vote in favor of it. If the action increasing those salaries commends itself to the sound judgment of the country, those men should have the credit due them. Other gentlemen on this floor spoke against the increase on the former occasion and voted against it on a They should have the privilege of going on record roll call. The country, our constituents, everybody, ought to know how each man votes on this proposition. Therefore every man should, in justice to himself and his fellow-Members, favor a roll call. If this is a meritorious measure, let us stand up without fear or favor and pass it in the open and go on record as supporting it. If it is not a meritorious measure let us not pass it by what is in effect a secret ballot.

The Members of this body can not be proud of their action if they increase their salaries and at the same time refuse to do it in the open, and refuse to let their fellow-Members who are so disposed go on record. Many Members are now absent, some possibly at home; some, perhaps, doing work in the Departments, others in committee rooms, and others engaged in other official duties. They should have an opportunity to vote on this matter, and therefore, in conclusion, I would request the gentleman in charge of this bill, my distinguished colleague from New York, to delay the vote until some day certain next week, so that every man may have notice and an opportunity to be present, and that he favor a viva voce vote, so that each man's record may be made.

Mr. LITTAUER. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas

[Mr. Burleson]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, for the reasons stated by me at the time this bill was under discussion a few days ago, I intend to vote against the amendment now offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER]. When the amendment providing for an increase of the salary paid Members of Congress was first offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] it made the increase take place for the Sixty-first I voted for it because I believed there should be an increase of these salaries, but I stated then that I was unwilling to vote an increase of salary for an office to which I had already been elected. We were candidates for the office of Representative in the Sixtieth Congress, with a full knowledge of what the salary was, and I will not now vote to increase that salary

Mr. LITTAUER. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. MANN] two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House the other day I voted for the proposition. I would now vote for the proposition to increase the salary of Members of Congress, commencing with the next Congress after the one which follows this. We have not yet reached the point where I believe that a Member of Congress can disinterestedly vote for a proposition affecting his own compensation, and while I believe that the salary ought to be increased for Members of Congress, I do not believe that a Member of Congress, with the natural bias in reference to his own compensation, has the right to vote to increase his own compensation, and I can see no difference between Members of this Congress who have been reelected to the next Congress voting to increase the salaries of Members of the next Congress and the Members of this Congress voting to increase the salaries of Members of this Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is not a fact that the logic of his position would prevent for all time to come any increase in compensation of Members of Congress?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so. Mr. TAWNEY. May I state this, then? This has first to be voted upon by the Senate before it can become a law. Twothirds of that vote would always have to vote to increase their own salaries, because they are not going out, or they will be in the next Congress. You would have to defer it six years at least, and that is the objection, I will say, to the proposition that was voted upon in the House before; that is the objection that every Member of Congress makes to the provision which was first proposed in the House of Representative

Mr. MANN. The answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, is very simple and very plain. The Members of the House of Representatives are not the guardians of the conscience of the Senators of the United States. We are responsible to our own consciences, not to them, and if I were a Senator of the United States, which I am not likely to ever be, I would not vote to increase the salary for myself during my term of office, and if they needed my vote it would have to be postponed. But I take it that in the Senate there are always enough members able to vote—that is, two-thirds—in such a way that the salary could be increased without any long postponement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Six years.
Mr. MANN. Not six years. Six years would postpone it and give a complete vote of every Senator. Two-thirds of the Senate of the United States can vote for the proposition to make this apply to the Sixty-first Congress without coming within the prohibition which I referred to. All of the Senate could make it apply to the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous ques-

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the amendment from the Senate with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER].

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the es seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Division, Mr. Speaker. The House divided; and there were—ayes 133, noes 92.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 133, noes 92.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, the yeas and nays.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. All of those who are in favor of demanding the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-four gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number, so the yeas and nays are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Lit-TAUER] asks for a conference with the Senate.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The Speaker announced the following conferees: Messrs.

BINGHAM, LITTAUER, and LIVINGSTON.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote and lay the motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HULL, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 24537) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COUSINS, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 24538) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 24541) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this additional urgent deficiency bill be now considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pending that I will be pleased to make an explanation of its urgency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe we have a rule that these things should lay over for a stated time.

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will make an explanation by which I think he will immediately see that there is necessity for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I will hear an explanation by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for present consideration of the bill of which the title has just been read in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman-

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The request of the gentleman from New York is for immediate consideration, and that it be considered in the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks immediate consideration, and consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Is this not a privileged bill?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the bill would go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and it is to avoid that rule, the Chair takes it, that the gentleman asks unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The parliamentary inquiry that I made was whether it would be in order for the gentleman from New York to immediately move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Upon examination, the Chair finds that the bill covers several items, and can fairly be called, and is, in fact, a general deficiency bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object to listen to an explanation of the gentleman. I have had none. If he is going to make none, I will make the objection peremptorily now.

Mr. LITTAUER. I am going to make it.

The bill carries a total of $329,650. The reason for its urgency to-day is that the legislature of New Mexico is called together January 21-next Monday; that under the law the legislature is only empowered to engage a certain number of clerical assistants to attend upon the legislature. Moreover, the legislative assembly of New Mexico is circumscribed as to the employment of any additional service unless it be the services of a translator and an interpreter, for the law of May 28, 1896, declares:

That no other officer of either house of said legislative assembly shall be elected or appointed or paid out of any moneys appropriated by the Congress of the United States or the legislative assembly of said Territory than such as may be provided for by the laws of the United States, except a translator or an interpreter.

Now, we understand the additional service has been had, so that the legislature could properly conduct its proceedings, in expenses for typewriters and others, who are always called "interpreters" and paid out of the Territorial treasury. The present governor declares that he will not permit that subterfuge to go on. Therefore there is submitted to us the necessity of the additional authorization of $15,000. We have made this additional amount according to the bill submitted, to be paid out of the treasury of the Territory, for the additional $15,000 in order that it can be expended for the additional clerical and other assistants, and they consist of stenographers, clerks to committees, messengers, and various other characters of clerks. Now, as that legislature goes into session next Monday, we deemed that this was urgent and immediate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, suppose this took the usual course, and went over, say, twenty-four hours, which would be the time, who would be hurt and what would be hurt by that delay?

Mr. LITTAUER. The Secretary of the Interior urges that for the proper conduct of that work an immediate provision be made, so that the legislature may convene. Then we have got

Mr. WILLIAMS. They will be delayed just twenty-four hours, and twenty-four hours' delay is not sufficiently great to make it urgent.

Mr. LITTAUER. But we have one other item here, and that is, $250,000 is needed at once to pay for additional equipment in connection with the increase in the Navy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear that.

Mr. LITTAUER. The Navy asks $250,000 to pay for additional equipment necessary for the increase in the Navy, and for this reason: Two years ago a large appropriation was made for equipment in connection with the increase of the Navy.

Last year no estimate was submitted, despite the fact that the balance left over was not more than one-half of the usual requirement. All of that balance has now been expended, and they believe it will take $250,000 to carry them through until next July. If this money is not to be had at this time a great battle ship will be held up for the want to ten or fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the whole gist of the gentle-man's request is that the matter be considered in the House instead of being considered in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me that the House ought to have the opportunity in the Committee of the Whole—

Mr. LITTAUER. It has the same opportunity in the House, has it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand—to have these matters fully elucidated and explained, and with the usual safeguards of consideration in the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to object.

Mr. LITTAUER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves all points of order on the bill, which is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] moves that the House do resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, which has just been reported and referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, with Mr. Lawrence in the chair. Mr. CLARK of Misseuri. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the bill has not been printed, I wish the Chair would have order established in the House, so that we can hear it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri calls for order. The committee will please be in order. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill has been completed.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the bill carries seven provisions. The first one is in connection with the International Water Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Before the gentleman begins to discuss the bill, we have no agreement here as to time or anything about it. What does he propose to do?

Mr. LITTAUER. What suggestion has the gentleman to make in reference to it? I do not want to take up more than probably five minutes, or perhaps ten.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Just let it run along, then, and see what we can do.

Mr. LITTAUER. As I stated, the bill begins with a provision to enable the international water boundary commission to continue its work, and appropriates $5,000. The necessity for the appropriation is that four gauging stations on the Rio Grande, which are necessary in the work of the commission, were washed away in the floods of last summer, with some other work that could not have been contemplated when the annual appropriation for this purpose was made.

The next provision is to provide for four additional rooms in the Munsey Building to accommodate the Auditor for the Navy Department.

This provision has been made already in the legislative bill, and we provide for rent for five months, for four rooms, to carry an appropriation of $1,150. Then comes a provision giving authority to pay out of the treasury of the Territory of New Mexico a sum not exceeding $15,000 for additional employees, for contingent expenses of the legislature of that Territory. I have explained its necessity in the preliminary discussion.

There follows an appropriation of $65,000 to complete the channel of approach to the piers at the Jamestown Exposition. To build these piers an appropriation was asked for larger than was granted by Congress. The length of the piers originally proposed was 2,200 feet, but the piers to be built under the appropriation will be 1,200 feet long. It now develops that in order that ships may reach these piers, where the basin must be dredged under the old appropriation to a depth of 10 feet, an amount must be appropriated in addition thereto, and we must have a small sum of money to dredge out a part of Bush Creek in connection with this exposition, where the life-saving station for the life-saving exhibit will be for the instruction of those who attend the exposition.

Mr. BARTLETT. As the gentleman from New York knows, the cost of building of these piers was thoroughly gone into and investigated by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, and that committee reported the bill at the last session providing an appropriation of $400,000 for the building of these piers. It is true that the bill introduced asked for an appropriation of $500,000, but after that estimate had been submitted to the proper officer of the Government-I do not remember who it was-it was deemed that $400,000 was all that was

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; and all that ought to have been spent. Mr. BARTLETT. I think it was more than ought to have been spent. Mr. LITTAUER. We are up against this proposition: The House appropriated $400,000 for building the piers and dredging the basin between the piers. The gentlemen who framed the legislation evidently did not have the foresight of providing in it that a channel as deep as the basin should be provided for and included within the appropriation of $400,000. We now find that the piers are built and the basin will be dredged out of the appropriation to a depth of 10 feet, but that the boats can not reach the piers unless a channel is dredged.

Mr. BARTLETT. What boats are these?
Mr. LITTAUER. The auxiliary boats; all kinds of boats drawing up to 10 feet of water; the excursion boats; boats that will bring the people and troops and soldiers to land at that I am advised that these piers have not yet been built and that the basin has not yet been dredged, but that the proposal has been issued and that the best we can now procure are piers only 1,200 feet long, and that would land us in water but 4 or 5 feet deep; that if money enough had been appropriated by Congress to extend the piers to 2,200 feet, we would have reached a depth of 10 or 12 feet of water. Now, while we feel the project should be continued and that the appropriation should be made, yet it would be possible, if the committee so insisted, that they should build inferior piers and spend the money for dredging a channel into the piers.

Mr. BARTLETT. The trouble about it is this: After the parties having in charge the Jamestown Exposition had gone into an examination of it and made estimates providing for the piers and the basin it was deemed that $400,000 would be sufficient, and Congress provided all that was asked for.

Mr. LITTAUER. If what the gentleman from Georgia states is true, then the estimates must have been different from the proposals.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not speaking about the estimate, but we went into it-the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions went into the question as to what the piers could be built for and all necessary expenses. It only shows that when we get into aiding one of these expositions what happens-that there is no end to the demands. There is always an additional expense, and Congress is asked to pay it.

Mr. LITTAUER. It shows that when we enter upon an exposition it is like entering into a war, you can never tell what it will cost.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman, further, how about the life-saving exhibit. That appropriation was made in the bill by the committee that reported it, after submitting the proposition to the Light-House Board, the officers of the Government, and the amount that they estimated was provided for in the bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Was dredging provided for in the estimate for the life-saving exhibit?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not able to say, but the committee thought that we had provided for everything that was necessary in order for the Government to make the necessary exhibit for the Life-Saving Service. I will not undertake to say that dredging was included in the estimate, but it looks to me that when the officers were called upon to make the necessary estimate and recommendations that they should have taken into consideration dredging, if that was necessary to the exhibit, as well as other necessary matters.

Mr. SULLIVAN. May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. LITTAUER. I will yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. SULLIVAN. I wish to supplement, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's statement with this remark, that the dredging was provided for in the law last year. Those who were intrusted with the duty of carrying on the work knew the depth of these channels and fully appreciated the necessity of dredging, and on the statement they make themselves the proposition for $65,000 is absolutely indefensible. They proceed on the theory that having got us into a hole we must provide the extra money in order to get out.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to say that I do not think we have got into a hole, because the committee that reported that bill undertook to give all that was necessary for the Government to make the exhibit for the various departments of the Government, and these appropriations were made upon the estimates furnished to the committee both as to the light-house service and the building of these piers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit an inquiry?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am speaking now in the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan].

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that they estimated $500,000 as the amount that the construction of these piers would cost?

Mr. BARTLETT. The estimate was made by the Jamestown exhibition architect, so to speak. I believe that is the proper title to give him.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the engineers of the War Department and the Navy Department.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think so. Mr. TAWNEY. It was carried in the original bill at $500,000, and reduced to $400,000.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, although the estimate may have been $500,000, and I think it was, the law provided for only $400,000, and expressly stipulated that contracts to the extent of $400,000 only were authorized. In other words, the law limited it to $400,000, and the officers in carrying out this enterprise have simply concluded it would be well to have more money, and accordingly they planned the work on the basis of a larger appropriation, and now because we can not leave them there with insufficient money to complete the enterprise they take advantage of us and ask us to provide this $65,000 extra.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this expenditure that is now being made for these excavations was originally contemplated in the appropriation reported by his committee, which passed this House after a very close vote?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman that none of the expenditures that are now provided for or contemplated under this appropriation were thought of when the law was enacted, for the reason that the estimate was to build a pier 2,200 feet long, and the estimate given us was $500,000 for the construction of these two piers at that length. These two piers would have carried them out where they would have been in a stage of water to admit the approach of vessels as large as will be needed and as large as is contemplated, which will necessarily come to the piers during the exposition. When they came to construct the piers on the appropriation of $400,000 they found that it was impossible to extend them to that length, so they built the piers twelve or fourteen hundred feet in length, and with the $60,000 they will dredge up to the pier, and also do some dredging at other places which was not thought of or known, and which the Secretary of War now informs us will be of great value to commercial ships hereafter-a permanent improvement. Some part of this is for a permanent improvement in navigation at Hampton Roads, and the other is for making the necessary approaches to these piers in consequence of their not being able to build them far enough to admit of vessels approaching them as they originally contemplated.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose, so far as this appropriation relates to permanent improvements-

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, that is a mere incident.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; it is a mere incident. I want to put this further question. The bill I refer to as the original bill was the bill that came from the gentleman's own Committee on Industrial Expositions.

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I refer to that now. What was the appropriation carried for that?

Mr. TAWNEY. The authorization was for $500,000, as I now recall it. That was the original estimate.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What was the appropriation passed by the House?

Mr. TAWNEY. The bill never passed the House-that is, the bill reported by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Ex-The Senate put the bill on in the form of an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill in the last session, and the conferees on the part of the House, after numerous conferences with the Senate, finally redrafted the amendment, eliminating a number of appropriations and eliminating a great deal of language that authorized work to be done and expenditures to be made without appropriations, for which we would have to hereafter make appropriations; so that we reduced the aggregate amount, as I now recall it, in the neighborhood of $300,000, $100,000 of which, if I am correct, was the reduction on this appropriation for the construction of these

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What I want to inquire is this: There was a time, I take it, when the House passed initial legislation in connection with the Jamestown Exposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, when the House passed the initial legislation it was for $200,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. For a naval display.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Precisely. Was not the House then given to understand that that would be the extent of the appropriation that would be necessary on the part of the House for the purpose of completing this exposition; that Congress would not be called on for any more appropriations.

Mr. LITTAUER. Many of us had that idea.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that any assurance of that kind was given to anybody, but the gentleman must bear in mind that that appropriation was made and that legislation was for the purpose of enabling the Government itself, independent of the exposition—the purpose of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions-the minority of it, with which I actedwas to prevent the Federal Government being tied up with the Jamestown Exposition.

So at the very last moment the bill which a majority of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions reported could not receive consideration, but it was finally agreed that the Government of the United States ought to celebrate this event in some way, and at the request of the present Speaker of the House I drafted a bill myself, without reference to the committee, but as a Member of the House, which provided for a celebration of this event by authorizing the President of the United States to invite the naval powers of the world to participate in a celebration, to erect a monument at Jamestown, and to improve the harbor at Jamestown, or where Jamestown used to be, and that bill, on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD], was passed under suspension of the rules in the closing hours of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. When there was a good deal of hurry

in legislation, I take it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but there was not anything said about coming back to Congress, because neither the bill itself nor the appropriation related to an exposition—simply to a celebration.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman whether, in his judgment, it was understood that when we passed the original $250,000 for a naval display and the participation of the General Government in that exposition-

Mr. TAWNEY. No; there was no participation in the exposition provided for at all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was it not understood that was all the connection the General Government was to have with it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I so understood it, so far as I was individually concerned, but a subsequent Congress made an appropriation of, I think, $1,200,000; I do not remember the exact amount.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to know into how large a development the original egg of $250,000 has grown. We started with $250,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not know the appropriation of $250,000 was responsible in any way for the appropriation that was made in the last Congress.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, can the gentleman in charge of this urgent deficiency bill tell the House—

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Lat-

TAUER] is in charge of the bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, then. Can the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee tell the House, when we started with the participation either directly or indirectly following an expenditure of $250,000, into how large an expenditure that has developed?

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment. For the objects provided for in the original bill there has been no increase in the appropriation and no additional appropriation.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yet during the last session other appropriations in other bills amounted to $1,325,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I would like to inquire, with the permission of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield. Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Here is an urgent deficiency bill for how much?

Mr. LITTAUER. Sixty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Sixty-five thousand dollars for this purpose, and, as I understand, it is incidental to the Jamestown

Mr. TAWNEY. It is incidental to the authorization made by Congress at the last session in respect to the Jamestown Exposi-

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Incidental to the Jamestown Exposition. And we started with this Jamestown Exposition, so far as Federal aid is concerned, by appropriating two or three years ago $250,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg to differ with the gentleman. We did not start the exposition two or three years ago in that way

Mr. PAYNE. I think I can give the gentleman from Maine little information on the subject if I can get the floor.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me put it this way: We facilitated

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; it was started long before this was

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, we facilitated its start.

Mr. BOUTELL. Lubricated.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. We lubricated the enterprise by an appropriation of $250,000 which it was understood, as I understand now the gentleman from Minnesota, would be the full measure of the charge upon the Treasury of the United States on account of this exposition. Am I right about that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman that if he has ever read the original law, the word "exposition" was not referred to, and the Jamestown Exposition was not referred to; it was entirely an independent celebration provided, a Government celebration of the tercentennial of the settlement of this continent. Now, the nature of that celebration was defined in All expenditures were authorized. The nature of that celebration has been confined, and the authorization in the bill and appropriations have not been increased, and no increase is asked for to carry out the purpose of celebrating the event by the Government of the United States entirely separate from the Jamestown Exposition. Now, that is the initiation of the celebration of the event by the Government of the United States. Following that, in the next Congress, Congress was induced to join the Jamestown Exposition Company and appropriate $250,000 direct aid, and then appropriate—

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Direct?
Mr. TAWNEY. Direct aid to the exposition company, $250,000, the remainder of the appropriation being for other purposes in connection with the Jamestown Exposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I understand that the appropriation was $250,000, and that at the next session it was $250,000 more? Mr. TAWNEY. The Jamestown Exposition did not get $250,000 in the first authorization.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How much did it get?

Mr. TAWNEY. It got nothing. The Jamestown Exposition was not referred to in the first authorization.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was the first authorization in any way connected with the Jamestown Exposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was not. It was independent.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did it tend to promote the enterprise? Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it did. The enterprise was far advanced then.

Mr. LITTLEFIED. I will ask this of the gentleman, as he was chairman of the committee that reported that particular bill, Did the gentleman intend to promote that enterprise?

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And the legislation was—
Mr. TAWNEY. The legislation did not relate to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did not have any connection with it? Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was not dependent upon it?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has it had any connection with it since? Has it merged with it since?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; it has not; only so far as the last law has authorized the merger, with which I had nothing whatever to do.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is not the last law practically the sequel of the first?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not. I have answered that question half a dozen times.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon for having to emphasize that proposition.

Mr. Chairman, briefly, the Jamestown Exposi-Mr. PAYNE. tion was started by the citizens of Virginia largely, and after they had planned the exposition of course they came to Congress to get a bill through to have the Government pay the expenses of it. That bill came from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions after a rough passage, as I remember it, but was not considered in the House: Then, pending that, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was overpersuaded into going into a naval show down there for Jamestown at the same time this exposition was held.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Contemporaneous with it?

Mr. PAYNE. Contemporaneous with it—during the same time the exposition was to be held. I want to say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] when the bill was originally drawn it did refer to the exposition, but after a good deal of trouble I succeeded in eliminating all reference to the Jamestown Exposition. When it came into the House I opposed it on the ground that that was the inception of this grand enterprise that the Government would be appropriating for

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That would be the first step? Mr. PAYNE. That is what I claim.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask another question?
Mr. PAYNE. The answer to that was that the bill did not refer to the exposition, although they were contemporaneous in time. Now, after that, the President of the United States invited all of the nations of the earth to participate in this naval demonstration in accordance with the terms of that bill. That necessitated an appropriation to entertain these people who come here, and that was a little like an entering wedge. Then the proposition came in to spend $250,000 for a Government exhibit at Jamestown.

Not in the original bill. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. PAYNE. It came in afterwards, I say.

Mr. TAWNEY. It came in the next session of Congress. Mr. PAYNE. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the Government exhibit, and at the same time to urge upon Congress that the honor of the nation was at stake, because we had invited all the nations of the world to come over in order to make this exposition a success, just as I had guessed would be done at the inception of this first bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman-Mr. PAYNE. Let me make this statement.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I want to make the inquiry right here. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether at this stage the indefinite scheme that had theretofore been adopted became merged in or connected with the Jamestown Exposition?

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose that the President having invited the navies of the world to help celebrate this great event in that vicinity it was thought, and claimed, that the honor of the United States was at stake to make the show a success independent of the company.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It was still independent?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes; but in another place an amendment was finally put on appropriating a million and a half. that first came over here it gave that for the show itself. In the end the appropriation was made for $400,000 to build a dock. They did not even have an approach to this place where the exposition was to be held, and this money was to be expended on a dock for the purpose of allowing the ships to come up.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In connection with the exposition?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, certainly. They did not have deep enough water to make the approach and they wanted additional dredgg. And now they ask us for a loan of $50,000.

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not want gentlemen to understand that it is to dredge out enough water to float that loan.

Mr. PAYNE. I am sure it will not require much dredging to I want to make that suggestion to the gentleman now. I would hope, and would vainly hope, that they might dredge out enough water to drown the loan; but that could not be done. I only wanted to show how sure it is that these little things grow of getting shows for a town where there really is no town, and how they become international and involve expenditures of millions of dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I see there is reference to rent of rooms in the Munsey Building. How many rooms are rented?

Mr. LITTAUER. Four rooms.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the amount of the rent? Mr. LITTAUER. One thousand one hundred and fifty dollars for five months' rent of four rooms, and the rooms rented at the same rate that we are to rent them after the beginning of the next fiscal year, according to provisions made in the legislative bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, if it is not a fact that it would be good policy for this Government to adopt to build their own buildings instead of renting buildings?

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, decidedly so; but this is necessary nder the exigency that has arisen. Last year we passed a under the exigency that has arisen. Last year we passed a public-building bill for the erection of a good many buildings. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury had to have more room in the Treasury, and consequently moved out the Auditor of the Navy Department, as the rooms that were provided were not sufficient.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Now, there is the House of Representatives building and the Senate building now being erected. Those buildings, I understand, will cost from seven to ten million dollars before they are done. Would it not be good policy for the Government to build sufficient buildings in the city for the use of the clerks, instead of Congress building palaces for ourselves?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not believe my opinion will stop the completion of these buildings, which will probably be used by you and other gentlemen of the next Congress; but I do believe we ought to have a number of very necessary buildings in the District of Columbia to provide for the wants of the various Departments of the Government here. And particularly that of a Hall of Records, in order that great storage facilities might be had for the many records now taking up room in many of the Government buildings.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe that instead of raising our own salaries and building palaces for ourselves that we should rather provide buildings suitable for these offices and suitable wages for these employees of the Government?

Mr. LITTAUER. In my opinion a great and rich government can provide the necessary salaries for its Representatives in Congress and also such buildings as may be needed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Ought we not to be just before we are generous, and begin at the bottom instead of at the top, as we have begun?

Mr. LITTAUER. The gentleman can answer his own question.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask a question about this particular work? As I understand it, this $65,000 that is now to be appropriated as an urgent deficiency appropriation, has no relation whatever to aiding the United States Government or the vessels of the Government in making a naval display that is to take place at the Jamestown Exposition?

Mr. LITTAUER. I take it for granted that the naval display must be made in water of greater depth than 10 feet; but this is simply to make the approach to the piers.

Mr. TAWNEY. You must also take it for granted that the officers and men on the ships that arrive here must have some place for their smaller craft to land.

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes; to get ashore and see the ladies, and all that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then the statements that have been made before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, by these people who had the matter in charge, and who insisted that these expensive piers should be constructed, more for ornament than anything else, as to the sums of money that would be required, were not accurate at all, were they?

Mr. LITTAUER. The sum appropriated was not sufficient to build a 2,200-foot pier or to get out to a depth of 10 feet of water. The sum of $400,000 will simply complete the piers according to the present proposals, 1,200 feet, and if erected according to those proposals the water at the end of the piers will not be more than 3 or 4 or 5 feet deep. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say that such a statement of the conditions was not brought forward before the committee, and we knew nothing about it; and I think the gentlemen who were before the committee presented everything that could induce the committee to be extravagant in the expenditure of the public

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I will now pass on to the item for the increase of the Navy, $250,000, necessary for the completion of equipment of new vessels. I have already explained that.

Next we come to the appropriation of $1,000 for additional expenses of depositing public moneys. The appropriation for the current year was reduced to $2,000, despite the fact that $2,718 was spent for this purpose last year and that the public money to be deposited has increased 25 per cent during the current year. Provision was made that this money should be carried in a more economical fashion, and consequently the reduced appropriation that I have referred to.

Then we come to expenses for hearings by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The sum of $9,000 was appropriated and $8,900 have been already used. There is one particular set of hearings to be held at Great Falls, Mont., that will cost $1,200, and the great number of hearings—nearly 500 since last July, as against 169 for the previous year, because of apparent frauds on the public domain—have made this increase necessary

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should like to ask the gentleman concerning the appropriations for the Interior Depart-I understand an order has been made by the Secretary of the Interior

Mr. LITTAUER. This has nothing to do with that. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Wait a moment.

stand this order has been made by direction of the President suspending from patent all the final proofs that have been made throughout the country and ordering that the patents be withheld until such time as the lands have been examined by a representative of the Department. The Department state that they can give no idea as to the time it will require to make these examinations, because of a lack of force. Now, I want to know if the Committee on Appropriations are considering, or have yet considered, the question of providing an appropriation sufficient to give a force that will enable this work to be done speedily.

The subject has not been brought to our Mr. LITTAUER. consideration, and this provision has no connection therewith.

Mr. Chairman, there is an item for the police court building in this city. The sum of $6,000 was appropriated last year, and it has become necessary to appropriate $2,500 more to provide necessary furniture and equipment for that building.

I should like now to come to an agreement with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston] as to the time for general debate.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest fifteen minutes on a side.
Mr. LITTAUER. Fifteen minutes will be acceptable to me.
Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate close in thirty minutes, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] and the other half by

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate close in thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on a side; fifteen minutes to be controlled by himself and fifteen minutes by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livings-TON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there are two items in the bill to which I think the committee should give some attention. One is the item that has been discussed at such length by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER]; the other is the item in regard to the furnishing of the police court building in the District of Columbia. It was assumed by Members of the House that in the last session of Congress and in a previous session they had impressed upon the different officials in the various Departments in Washington that, regardless of what the opinion of those officials might be as to the advisability of spending money, Congress was the final arbiter and that it determines what should be expended for different projects.

The War Department has been notorious for its disregard of the limits placed by Congress upon its action in the expenditure of money. Members of the House will recollect the action of the Department a few years since regarding the erection of buildings at West Point. So far as this appropriation of $65,000 is concerned, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language of the act providing for the construction of these piers.

The act approved June 30, 1906, provided:

The act approved June 30, 1906, provided:

That to the end that free and ready communication between the ships and the shore may be had, and in order to furnish ample and safe harbor for the small craft necessary to convey the soldiers and exposition visitors from the grounds to the fleet, there shall be constructed from plans to be furnished by the Jamestown Exposition Company and approved by the Secretary of War two piers extending from the exposition grounds into the water of Hampton Roads, the ends of the piers to be surmounted with towers for exhibits, if practicable, of the Light-House Service and the wireless telegraph service; said piers shall be connected by an arch sufficiently high to permit small craft to enter under it into the basin or harbor, which shall be dredged to a sufficient depth to accommodate boats drawing not more than 10 feet of water at mean low tide.

Anybody reading that provision, Mr. Chairman, that had any common sense would have assumed that those piers were to terminate in water of a sufficient depth to accommodate the boats that were to pass under the arch into the basin.

Another part of the act provides that nothing "shall be contain or keep in repair such piers or basin or approaches thereto."

The original estimate for the construction of the piers was $500,000. Congress determined that the piers and basin should be built at an expenditure of $400,000. The same disregard to be built at an expenditure of $400,000. this limitation that has been paid to others has been paid by the Department, but its action has been more ingenious. Instead of saying that they could not complete the piers for the original estimate, they say they have cut down the length of the piers, with the result that they would end in shallow water, so that this appropriation is necessary to give sufficient water to enable boats to approach the piers. It might be just as wise to give the additional $100,000 and to have the piers extend out the original 2,200 feet.

Another item is for furnishings for police court built in the District of Columbia. Last year an estimate was submitted to the committee having charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill asking $5,000 to furnish and equip this building. One of the judges came before the committee and stated that that amount was entirely inadequate and submitted an estimate for $15,000. The committee directed that an investigation be made by the property clerk connected with the Commissioners' office, and from the information furnished from that source the committee allowed $6,000 for furnishing and equipping the building. At this session the Commissioners say that $2,500 additional will be required in order to complete the furnishing of the building.

It seems to me that somebody sometime should be able to estimate accurately what the public service of the various departments of the Government will cost. Congress is entitled to know what the public service will cost. I am opposed to giving additional sums for any purpose when it is apparent that those at the head of the different branches of the Government have disregarded the action of Congress in fixing the limitation upon the cost of the various branches of the public service and have gone ahead and expended money upon the theory that eventually Congress will appropriate in accordance with the original esti-

We succeeded in placing some limitation upon the power of some officials, and there are now drastic provisions of law which make it impossible for officials to create deficiencies except under very exceptional circumstances without subjecting themselves to severe penalties.

It seems that it will be necessary for Congress to go further and to impose a penalty upon those officials who, disregarding the limitations fixed in the various appropriation acts, so plan their expenditures as to require more money than Congress contemplates shall be expended for some particular purpose. Mr. Chairman, I desire to emphasize my dissatisfaction with what has been done in these two instances. Personally I am inclined to believe that we should not make these appropriations, even if there should be some embarrassment to some official for some little time. I know of no other way to teach them that when Congress, upon the investigation that it makes and with the light that it has, determines that the public service in some particular department shall be conducted for a certain sum, that then the officials having charge of that branch of the service must so conform themselves and must so regulate the work to be done that they can do it within the appropriation made for that purpose. I should be glad to vote to strike out both of these appropriations, and I am inclined to believe that if this $65,000 were not appropriated these ingenious officials would find some satisfactory manner of so building the piers that ves-sels could approach them without the dredging that they say is here necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. He has consumed the full ten minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I was engaged otherwise so that I could not hear what the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] has just said about the appropriation for Jamestown in this bill. I presume he expressed my views, and doubtless expressed them better than I can myself, but at the risk of repetition I wish to say a word about that recommendation of the War Department. It seems to me the War Department justly deserves criticism for either stupidity or for sharp practice. Either they have not known what they ought to do or they have attempted willfully to evade and nullify the purpose of They asked for $500,000 to build these piers and to Congress. dredge. Congress gave them $400,000 and told them, therefore, in effect that they should only undertake what they could complete for $400,000; but they have gone on and, instead of observing the spirit of the act of Congress to complete this whole improvement for $400,000, they have expended that $400,000 and have built piers so that they do not go to deep water, so that they are absolutely useless, and so that any vessel that wishes to use these piers could not go there unless this further dredging of In other words, instead of observing our $65,000 is made. obvious intent that this improvement should be effected for $400,000, they have built piers which are useless without the expense of $65,000 more, and so undertook a $465,000 project. We therefore are in the predicament of either leaving the piers useless or of appropriating this $65,000, and this is the practice to which it seems to me the Departments are becoming too habituated. The matter is small; we can not impeach the official for such an action as that. I do not suppose the Secretary of War himself knew of it, but whatever officer or whatever branch of the Department was responsible for it ought to be criticised and ought to be punished, and if this is to continue Congress will have to limit in some way its appropriations.

At present we expect that the different departments will use the money we give them in good faith, but if when we give them less than they ask, they are going to continue to expend that money in such a way that in order to make it useful we must give them the balance they originally asked, it will be neces sary for Congress in some way to tie the hands of the departments and to limit the appropriation so they can not make partial improvements in this manner. It seems to me this is a flagrant case where the War Department has expended the money we gave them not with the purpose with which we gave it, but in such a way that they knew we would have to give more and thus allow them to fulfill their original purpose. I think therefore the War Department is subject to the just and severe criticism of this House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Massachusetts know of any better way to prevent the continuance of this practice than by refusing to make appropriations for alleged deficiency?

Mr. GILLETT. The trouble is that in doing that we do not punish the War Department. If we do not make the appropria-tion we punish the exposition, and the exposition was not at fault as far as I know. Therefore we are not punishing the right persons. It seems to me that we must contrive some way in which we can punish the people who are guilty.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the War Department has expended the entire $400,000 appropriated for those piers?

Mr. GILLETT. I understand it has.
Mr. POLLARD. That is all expended?
-Mr. GILLETT. It is all expended, and now they say the piers are useless unless we give them $65,000 more.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the meany has not yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the money has not yet been expended, but it is contemplated to expend it in such a way that this amount will be needed.

Mr. GILLETT. I understood it had been expended.

Mr. LITTAUER. The $400,000 has not yet been expended, and these piers have yet to be built; at least I am so advised that they have not been built.

Mr. GILLETT. Then I do not see why it is necessary to appropriate the additional $65,000, and I am opposed to it. I understood the $400,000 had not only been allotted by the War Department on paper, but had actually been expended, so that it was beyond our power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. POLLARD. May I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. When we come to debate under the fiveminute rule, the gentleman can ask his question. Mr. Chairman, I move that we proceed with the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The motion was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT-JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Piers, Hampton Roads, Jamestown Exposition: For dredging necessary to complete the channel of approach to said piers from deep water in Hampton Roads and for dredging Bush Creek to accommodate the needs of the life-saving exhibit, $65,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, before that is done I wish to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] a question, for I was expecting to vote in favor of this paragraph on the theory that the $400,000 had been expended and if we did not appropriate this $65,000 the whole expenditure would be useless; but I understand him now, that it has not been expended, and therefore I should like to ask him why, if we refuse to appropriate this, they can not alter their plans and still complete the work on some different plan which will only cost the amount we originally intended?

Mr. LITTAUER. My information in connection with this matter is not positive, but I am informed by the clerk of our committee that the piers are not yet constructed. They may be in course of construction, but I am not fully advised whether they are contracted for; but the advice I did have was that the money had not yet been expended.

Mr. GILLETT. Then let me ask the gentleman if he does not think it is an entirely improper course for the War Department to take in this matter, to exceed their appropriation?

Mr. LITTAUER. I must say, with the information that has been brought forth here, in my own personal opinion we did not perhaps act with as much deliberation as we should have acted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say so long as the money has not been expended, so long as the work of construction has not been commenced, it seems to me that an effective way to check such action on the part of the Department is to refuse to give this appropriation and compel it to so modify the plans that it can accomplish what was intended with the amount originally given. I feel much like other members of the committee that if these piers were there and the water was so shoal that it would be impossible for boats to reach the piers, we should, in order to use them, give the additional money; but if the piers have not been constructed, it is not too late, in my judgment, for the Department to so modify their plans as to enable the construction of the piers, the basin, and the approaches within the amount originally determined upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to. The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 24541) making appropriations for additional urgent deficiencies, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed

On motion of Mr. Littauer, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLAIMS.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar in order for to-day, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

Mr. MILLER. Before reporting the first bill I desire to ask unanimous consent that when the title of the bill is read and there is no objection to its consideration, it may be considered as laid aside with a favorable recommendation. If, however, there is an objection, then a brief statement of the bill may be made by the chairman of the committee or any other member of the committee, when, if objection is still adhered to, the bill may be laid aside without prejudice in order that we may present the unobjected bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman to say that the chairman will make a brief explanation of the bill when the title-is read, and then, if there is no objection, it will be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the committee reserves the right to make an explanation after the bill is read

Mr. SOUTHARD. The proposition was this, as I understand, and I want to understand it now, that if no objection is made to the bill upon the reading of its title, then it is laid aside with a favorable recommendation. If objection is made, then a brief explanation is allowed, and then if no further objection is made, it is laid aside. But if further objection is made, then it is passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the understanding of the Chair in the unanimous consent asked for.

HENRY PHILIPPS SEED AND IMPLEMENT COMPANY.

The first business was the bill (S. 1236) to authorize the payment to the Henry Philipps Seed and Implement Company for seeds furnished to and accepted by the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year 1902.

Mr. MILLER. It may be well, Mr. Chairman, to have the bill read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Henry Philipps Seed and Implement Company, of Toledo, Ohio, for seeds furnished to the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year 1902, accepted by the said Department, and distributed by order of the said Secretary of Agriculture, the sum of $3,633.11, which sum is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have somebody explain that. It is a rather unusual bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say in relation to that bill that the Philipps Seed and Implement Company had a contract with the Secretary of Agriculture for furnishing seed for the year mentioned in this report, and under that contract the seed had to be according to a recognized standard or weight. During that year the Secretary of Agriculture found it was impossible to secure sufficient seed for distribution of that degree or quality, and this company, before they furnished any seed under the contract, notified the Secretary that their seed did not measure up to the quality that was desired under the contract. The Secretary notified them that if they furnished the seed that he would waive that provision of law for a penalty to be attached, so that they might be paid for the seed as though it was up to the usual standard. The seed was furnished and sent out, and the Secretary reports favorably upon the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BECKER BREWING AND MALTING COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (S. 1231) to reimburse the Becker Brewing and Malting Company, of Ogden, Utah, for loss resulting from robbery of the United States mails.

I object to that. I do not think that ought to go through without presentation to the House. I will object then

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside?

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objects. The bill will be passed without prejudice and under the unanimous consent, and the Clerk will report the next

L. BIERTEMPFEL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 12840) for the relief of L. Biertempfel.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill be laid over. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 11676) for the relief of persons who sustained property damage caused by fire at the Rock Island Arsenal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the reading of the bill, but I will have to object to the consideration of it at this time.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection pending an explanation of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I think I understand the bill,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asks if I would reserve the objection. As far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing; but if the committee desires to go through this Cal-endar and pass bills not objected to, it is very evident that purpose will not be accomplished and take up these bills for consideration. This particular bill will probably be reached for consideration.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request. The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

JAMES A. CARROLL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8699) for the relief of James A. Carroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8699) for the relief of James A. Carroll.

A bill (H. R. 8699) for the relief of James A. Carroll.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the accounts of James A. Carroll, postmaster at Randall, State of Kansas, to be credited with the sum of $99, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, being on account of the loss of $99 in postal funds lost in transit, the mail pouch in which same was consigned being stolen from the Jamestown, Kans., post-office and the money abstracted therefrom, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the postmaster; and the said sum of $99 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said claim.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

W. S. HAMMAKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13418) for the relief of W. S. Hammaker.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to this bill.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside without prej-

DAVID C. HAYNES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9298) for the relief of the estate of David C. Haynes,

Mr. PAYNE. I shall object to that bill. It is one of the old post-office cases

P. S. CORBETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1894) for the relief of P. S. Corbett.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that bill be laid aside.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

JOHN B. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15594) for the relief of John B. Brown.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that bill. It gives a man the privilege of citizenship.

Mr. MILLER. This bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, and I do not know anything about it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from New York object? I think he is making a mistake in this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think so. This same committee is reporting bills in favor of people because they are not citizens, and I do not know why we should give the privilege of citizenship to a man who is not.

Mr. MANN. Of this case I know nothing except that which I have learned from examination. I do not know anything about the parties. In this case the person would have the right to have his case adjusted if he was a citizen, and he claims that his citizenship papers were destroyed.

Mr. PAYNE. And when you go to where he says he was made a citizen you find nothing on file.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but in view of the fact that he had acted as a citizen and held office-

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the unanimous agreement was made that if objection was made, the bill should be laid aside. Mr. MANN. If the gentleman objects, why of course the bill will be laid aside.

Mr. WALDO. He has objected. Let us lay it aside.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

CHARLES T. RADER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 538) for the relief of Charles T. Rader.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 538) for the relief of Charles T. Rader. A bill (S. 538) for the relief of Charles T. Rader.

Be it enacted, etc., That Charles T. Rader, of Fort Logan, Mont., be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to select by contiguous legal subdivisions, at such place or places as he may desire in the State of Montana, 480 acres of unoccupied and unappropriated nonmineral public lands, subject to entry under desert-land laws, and when such selection shall be by him certified to the Secretary of the Interior patent shall be issued to said Rader for the same.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

J. TENNANT STEEB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1371) to refund to J. Tennant Steeb certain duties erroneously paid by him, without protest, on goods of domestic production shipped from the United States to Hawaii and thereafter returned.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1371) to refund to J. Tennant Steeb certain duties erroneously paid by him, without protest, on goods of domestic production shipped from the United States to Hawaii and thereafter returned.

shipped from the United States to Hawaii and thereafter returned. Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund and repay from the appropriation "To repay to importers the excess of deposits for unascertained duty or duties or other moneys paid under protest," made by section 6689 of the Revised Statutes, the sum of $2,360.83, paid without protest by J. Tennant Steeb as duties upon certain scrap iron and pig lead, products of the industry of the United States, shipped to Hawaii and thereafter returned to the United States by the American schooner F. S. Redifield, and entered at the subport of Tacoma, State of Washington, on September 25, 1901, and subsequent to the passage of the act approved April 30, 1900, entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii."

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this is the unanimous report of the committee on this particular bill? It is from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PAYNE. My recollection is that it was. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] reported the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was a unanimous report.

Mr. PAYNE. That is my recollection, and that it had been recommended by the Department on the facts stated by them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ARMY MANEUVERS AT WEST POINT, KY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6602) providing for the payment of certain claims growing out of the Army maneuvers at West Point, Ky., in 1903.

Mr. MILLER. I want to inquire if that is not a bill the item for which is covered in the military appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. Let it pass.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think this bill ought to lie on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be allowed to lie on the table.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the Senate might strike out the appropriation.

I do not think there is any danger of that. Mr. PAYNE. Mr. MILLER. I suggest that the bill be laid aside without prejudice

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH CABLE COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7028) for the relief of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that bill be laid aside. The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

PAY DIRECTOR E. B. ROGERS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The next business was the bill (S. 2262) for the relief of Pay Director E. B. Rogers, United States Navy.

The bill was read.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Under the rule it is so ordered.

DELIA B. STUART.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 14232) for the relief of Delia B. Stuart, widow of John Stuart.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Committee on Claims has no jurisdiction to report this bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Why not object to it, and let it go by without debate?

Mr. MANN. No; the question might as well be settled now as at any other time. This is a war claim and ought to go to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been referred both to the Committee on War Claims and to the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on War Claims have already fa-vorably reported it to the House. The Committee on Claims have also favorably reported it.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am objecting to, letting a man have two days in court when he is only entitled to one.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Illinois evidently does not want him to have any day in court at all.

Mr. MANN. I do not propose to dispute with my very eminent and distinguished friend from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas concede that the bill arises out of a war claim?

Mr. MILLER. I am inclined to think that technically it does.
Mr. MANN. It could only arise out of a war claim. It is for the repayment of bounties. Bounties have never been offered under the law, except in case of war.

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman is techincally correct, and if he insists on it he has the right to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the bill should be referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The bill will be reported to the House for reference to the Committee on War Claims.

JOSEPH W. I. KEMPA.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9212) for the relief of Joseph W. I. Kempa, executor of the last will and testament of William J. Grutza, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause all assessment of inheritance tax against J. W. I. Kempa, executor of the last will and testament of William J. Grutza, deceased, to be abated; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund the inheritance tax so collected by reason of the assessment made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue against the said estate, and that the said executor be relieved from the payment of any such tax which may have attached to the said property by reason of the operation of the said law of June 13, 1898.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CERTAIN TONNAGE DUTIES.

The next business was the bill (S. 1169) for the refund of certain tonnage duties.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, additional tonnage taxes at the rate of $1 per ton, amounting to $908, levied before May 15, 1905, on the steamer Banes, under the flag of Panama.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HEIRS OF M. A. PHELPS ET AL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 12009) for the relief of the heirs at law of M. A. Phelps and the heirs at law of John W. Renner.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to that, Mr. MILLER. Let it be laid aside

Mr. MILLER. Let it be laid aside.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. Under the order the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

FRANKLIN PATTERSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3462) for the relief of Franklin Patterson.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time,
I will ask consent that I may be permitted to object now, and that the bill be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri objects.
The bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

MATTHEW J. DAVIS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1563) for the relief of Matthew J. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,588.24 be, and is hereby, appropriated to Matthew J. Davis, for damages to his schooner Lillie, caused by fire on the 21st day of January, 1902, while she was in charge of the United States quarantine officer at Ship Island, near Biloxi, Miss.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to object to the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. MANN. I wish to ask the gentleman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?
Mr. MILLER, Certainly.
Mr. MANN. This bill provides not only for the payment of damages caused by a fire which it is claimed the quarantine officers, through negligence or otherwise, permitted to be started on board a British ship, but also provides for the payment of a large sum for demurrage.

Does the gentleman think, in matters of this sort, the Government ought to pay the damages which have accrued and then pay the profits that might have accrued? That is what demurrage means. It seems to me like a dangerous proposition.

Mr. MILLER. I am inclined to think this is all right, and the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. MANN. If it were not for the fact that the State Department was on edge about this bill and seemed to think it involves the good relations between this country and Great Britain, between Maine and Canada—

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That it is an international proposition.

Mr. MANN. Yes. Mr. PAYNE. I h I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object to this bill.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to; it is too late to object. The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HARPSWELL STEAMBOAT COMPANY, OF PORTLAND, ME.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4233) to reimburse the Harpswell Steamboat Company, of Portland, Me., for expenses incurred and for repairing damages sustained by its steamer Sebascodegan in collision with the U. S. S. Woodbury.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it cnacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Harpswell Steamboat Company, of Portland, Me., the sum of $2,016.25 cents for expenses incurred and for repairing damages sustained by its steamer Sebascodegan in collision with the U. S. S. Woodbury, July 18, 1904, as ascertained and reported to the Secretary of the Treasury by a board of officers constituted to ascertain the same.

The Clerk read the amendments recommended by the committee, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "pay," insert the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

In lines 10 and 11 strike out the words "a board of officers constituted to ascertain the same" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the chief of the Revenue-Cutter Service, the liability having been found by a board of officers constituted to ascertain the same."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want any misunderstanding in the committee. I intended to ask unanimous con-sent in the beginning that when a bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation that the amendments were also to be favorably recommended.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that ought to be done, because the amendments are most always in the shape of limitations.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be agreed to.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, as amended, with a favorable recommendation.

W. B. SUTTER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5169) for the relief of W. B. Sutter. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow on the accounts of W. B. Sutter, postmaster at Lindsey, Pa., a credit of $218.19, for postage stamps and money stolen from said post-office by burglars March 15-16, 1898.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

L. L. ARRINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

The flext business of the Trivate Calculat was the bill (1.12).

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to this unless the chairman of the committee can assure us that this claim has been referred to the Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. That, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure about, Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the report to indicate it. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be Without objection, the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

There was no objection.

HOLTZER-CABOT ELECTRIC COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14381) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Holtzer-Cabot Electric Company the amount due said company from the Post-Office Department.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,656, together with such amount for interest as may be found to be due, to the Holtzer-Cabot Electric Company, of Brookline, Mass., the same being the balance due said company from the Post-Office Department for electric motors sold that Department between June 2, 1902, and March 24, 1903.

The Clerk read the amendments recommended by the committee, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "dollars," strike out the words "together with such amount."
In line 7 strike out the words "for interest as may be found to be due."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

M. D. WRIGHT AND ROBERT NEILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5022) for the relief of M. D. Wright and Robert Neill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $60 to M. D. Wright and Robert Neill. This appropriation is made to reimburse M. D. Wright and Robert Neill for a like amount of money deposited May 26, 1903, in the Boise City National Bank to the credit of the United States to cover cost of survey of Waterloo and Victoria placer-mining claims, per certificate No. 537, which survey has been abandoned by the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may Lack the contlement from

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Kansas why he did not incorporate in this bill the amendment asked for by the Commissioner of Lands, and if there be any objection to putting that in now?

Mr. MILLER. I do not know; I have no objection at all.

Mr. MANN. It would be much better as a matter of bookkeeping. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Strike out the words, in line 4, "of any money" and insert in place thereof the words "out of the funds standing to the credit of the United States from deposits made by individuals for the survey of public land."

Mr. MILLER. There is no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "of any money" and insert in place thereof the words "out of the fund standing to the credit of the United States from deposits made by individuals for the survey of public land."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside and reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

M. A. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15850) for the relief of M. A. Johnson, of Stoughton, Dane County, Wis.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to M. A. Johnson, of Stoughton, Dane County, Wis., the sum of $180, being the unused balance of a deposit made by the said M. A. Johnson and his associates with the surveyor-general of the State of Idaho for the survey of certain mining claims in the Halley, Idaho, land district, which sum of $180 was carried into the Treasury of the United States.

With the following amendment:

In line 4, after the word "pay," insert the words "out of the fund standing to the credit of the United States from deposits made by individuals for the survey of public lands."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2926) for the relief of the heirs of John Smith.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object and ask that that bill go over.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

COPIAH COUNTY, MISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3518) for the relief of Copiah County, Miss.

Mr. MANN. I make the same request as to that bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

AUGUSTUS TRABING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4348) for the relief of Augustus Trabing.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Augustus Trabing, having served in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, and on guard duty in the forts surrounding the city of Washington, and as black-smith and wagon repairer with Government trains at Springfield, Ill., and Leavenworth, Kans., in 1865 and 1886, be, and he is hereby, relieved from any disability under the laws of the United States and from any defect of naturalization, and that his case, No. 1432 on the Indian depredations docket of the Court of Claims, which was dismissed for want of such naturalization, may be reinstated, and said Angustus Trabing is authorized to prosecute his said case and to receive judgment thereon the same as if he had been naturalized under the laws of the United States at the date of the loss; and to that end that the Court of Claims be, and hereby is, vested with jurisdiction as if the case were on original trial.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HARBISON-WALKER COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8) for the relief of the Harbison-Walker Company, of Pitts-

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury (notwithstanding any statutory bar of limitation, and notwithstanding the requirements of the statutes as to payment under protest) be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen and reconsider all claims of W. N. Reardon, of New York City, N. Y., or the Harbison-Walker Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., for the refunding to them or either of them, as their interest may appear, the sum of $1,820, alleged to have been improperly or illegally collected in the year 1901 by the collector of the port of New York, as assessed by the appraiser of the port of New York, and paid without protest by one or both of the shove-named parties as duties upon five importations of magnesite, namely; Entry No. 35982, paid May 14, 1901, $131.540; entry No. 45764, paid May 14, 1901, $99; entry No. 45293, paid May 14, 1901, $131.60; entry No. 67884, paid June 1, 1901, $100; entry No. 83599, paid October 7, 1901, $174; total, $1,820; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,820, as shall be shown to have been improperly or illegally collected as duties as aforesaid.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

T. J. H. HARRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6417) for the relief of T. J. H. Harris.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to that, and ask that it be put over without prejudice.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes to make a statement in regard to that bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the gentleman ought to break up this order in that way. We will return to most of these bills if we can get along without interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been simply laid aside without prejudice and may be returned to. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES S. BLOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

2702) for the relief of Charles S. Blood.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Committee on Claims has no jurisdiction to report this bill, it being a war claim and properly referable to the Committee on War Claims. It shows on its face that it is a war

Mr. MILLER. I shall not take up the time of the committee in discussing the matter, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that the Committee on Claims has no jurisdiction of this particular bill, and the point of order is sustained. The bill will be referred back to the House to be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

JOHN HUDGINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13357) for the relief of John Hudgins.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to that. The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill is ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

JOHN WALLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6104) to reimburse John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, Y., for moneys expended in carrying the mails.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to that and ask that it go over.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

REFUNDING OF CERTAIN MONEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5) to provide for the refunding of certain money, etc.

Mr. GARRETT. I would ask the number of the bill? The CHAIRMAN. The bill is H. R. 5.

Mr. GARRETT. In order to save time I will ask now that that bill go over.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

C. A. BERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

8365) for the relief of C. A. Berry.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that that bill be laid aside without prejudice.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

GEORGE W. SCHROYER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

16581) for the relief of George W. Schroyer.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request in connection with that bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH CABLE COMPANY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2368) for the relief of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill be laid aside without prejudice.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

ALICE M. STAFFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2578) for the relief of Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Would it be in order to object to all of the bills on the Private Calendar en bloc?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, under the unanimous consent agreed to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this to the gentleman from Kansas: There is a sifting process in operation here by which some discrimination may be worked. Let us put all on the contested calendar and have all on the same footing.

Mr. BURLESON. Some Members have claims to which there is no objection. I have no objection to explaining mine.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN CUSTOMS INSPECTORS OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17957) for the relief of certain customs inspectors of the port of New York. Mr. MANN.

Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that bill. The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

J. W. BAUER AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2326) for the relief of J. W. Bauer and others.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the following-named persons, citizens of Louisville, Ky., the respective sums following their names, to wit: J. W. Bauer, $24; Frank Bleemer, $24; C. J. Finnegan, $24; Samuel Goldsmith, $16; John Hopmeister, $24; L. A. Kissel, $24; M. J. Madden, $6; W. J. Schieber, $24; T. J. Wathen, $24; Windhorst & Grimmer, $24; I. Schafer, $24; J. A. Hess, $12; Daniel Scherer, $24; Sebastian Weisbach, $12; John Heinz & Co., $24; Oscar E. Rehn, $24; John W. Kleier, $24; Mrs. G. Caudel, $24; Frank E. Muth, $24; Mrs. E. C. Jansen, $24; G. H. Young, $24; Charles Boeswald, $24; Fred Keller, $24; Frank Zeigler, $24; Joseph Kaelin, $24; G. Schlange, $24; J. B. King, $24; Woodford Blanton, $24; C. W. Hall, $6; C. A. Henson, $24: John L. Gruber, $12; C. A. Culver, $8; Fred Gausmann, $16.80; H. B. Kruse, $10.50; J. S. Reynolds, $18.90; Christ Keller, $16, being the amount assessed against and paid by said parties to the United States Government as penalty for failure to make return for special tax as retail dealers of oleomargarine.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. RUCKER. I would like to know if under the unanimous consent to-day it is in order here for Members to sit and arbitrarily object to bills which are unobjectionable, or to make objection to bills which are objectionable?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter that rests with the discretion of the Member.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not desire to antagonize any legitimate bills, but if a bill of mine should be antagonized I would want to know some reason why it should be antagonized.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state I have examined some of these bills by request, and to those which seem plainly just I shall not object.

Mr. RUCKER. I have a bill on this Calendar which if any gentleman thinks is unjust, if I am permitted to explain or even have it read to this committee, I know there will be no objection, but I do object to this arbitrary proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri, under unanimous consent bills to which objection is not made will be passed with a favorable recommendation, those to which objection is made will be laid aside without prejudice, and taken up for discussion afterwards.

Mr. RUCKER. That means to be laid aside for some other

Congress, and that in the meantime my old constituent-80 years old—will have passed from this life.

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion of the Chair is that as soon as the unobjectionable bills have been disposed of those to which objection is made will be taken up as rapidly as possible.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 2829 for just one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 2829.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that if he will wait until after we get through with the unobjected bills, I will not object; otherwise I will object now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes to make a statement.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois if after the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] has been heard for two minutes, the gentleman from Illinois-will object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. MILLER. There is no objection to letting the gentleman be heard for two minutes, as his bill is a meritorious one and ought to pass, but I object to him taking the two minutes now.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to trespass upon the committee. I supposed we had a right to vote. I do not suppose that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will be arbitrary enough to defeat this Congress in doing what is right, and so far as I am concerned I would like to put the question to the House.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, the gentleman will have an opportunity to put it to the House.

Mr. MILLER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

MATTHEW J. DAVIS.

The next business upon the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5560) for the relief of Matthew J. Davis.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,588.24 be, and is hereby, appropriated to Matthew J. Davis, for damages to his schooner Lillie, caused by fire on the 21st day of January, 1902, while she was in charge of the United States quarantine officer at Ship Island, near Biloxi,

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the committee just passed a bill like that, or agreed to it, a few moments ago—a House bill. I suggest now that the Senate bill be agreed to, and that the action of the committee in agreeing to the House bill be reconsidered, and that the House bill do lie on the table.

Mr. MANN. That can be done by unanimous consent. unanimous consent to reconsider the action by which the House bill was agreed to. The House bill could be laid on the table when in the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The committee could move to lay it aside, with recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that if this bill is recommended favorably the rest of it could be done in the House. That is all we could do. Mr. CRUMPACKER. We have already laid it aside.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside and reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

M. A. JOHNSON.

The next business upon the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4819) for the relief of M. A. Johnson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to M. A. Johnson, of Stoughton, Dane County, Wis., the sum of $180, being the unused balance of a deposit made by the said M. A. Johnson and his associates with the surveyor-general of the State of Idaho for the survey of certain mining claims in the Halley, Idaho, land district, which sum of $180 was carried into the Treasury of the United States.

Also the following amendment:

In line 4, after the word "pay," insert the words "out of the fund standing to the credit of the United States from deposits made by individuals for the survey of public lands," striking out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if that is not the same bill, this being a Senate bill for the relief of M. A. Johnson?

Mr. MILLER. The House bill was favorably recommended, and now we are asking that the Senate bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation, so that in the House we may move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside and reported to the House with a favorable recommendation,

ELI PETTIJOHN.

The next business was resolution (H. Res. 406) for the relief of Eli Pettijohn.

The Clerk reported the resolution, as follows:

The Clerk reported the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 10553) for the relief of Eli Pettijohn, now pending in the House of Representatives, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said act and report to the House of Representatives in accordance therewith their findings of fact and law, and especially the value of the property taken from the said Eli Pettijohn by the United States, and whether said Pettijohn's claim is or was properly against the United States or against one Franklin Steele or some other person or corporation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the resolution on the ground that the Committee on Claims has no authority to report it. This is a matter that relates to the no authority to report it. This is a matter that relates to the War Claims Committee, being for the payment of lands seized for a fort in 1861, during the war.

The section of the report in this bill would indicate Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better lay this bill aside and let it come up for discussion afterwards. I think it was properly referred to the committee.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to let it take that course, provided that I do not lose the right to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside without preju-

GOTLOB GROEZINGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1668) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of Gotlob Groezinger.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1668) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of Gotlob Groezinger.

Gotlob Groezinger.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund and pay back, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. A. Groezinger, administrator of the estate of the late Gotlob Groezinger, the sum of $1,047.60$, taxes collected upon 1,164 gallons of grape brandy which had been destroyed by fire in the distillery of said Gotlob Groezinger. Provided, That it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary that said brandy had been accidently destroyed by fire in the distillery before the tax thereon had been paid, and without the fraud, collusion, or negligence of the owner thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid asside with a favorable recommendation.

aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

REFUND OF CERTAIN MONEY.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I objected to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5) to provide for the refunding of certain money, and so forth. I have since looked at the report, and I shall not object now to the bill being considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read, and if there is no objection it will be laid aside with a favorable recommedation.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request for unanimous consent to return to the claim, Calendar No. 2829. not want to obstruct this procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13357. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, but-

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say that if there is any assurance that we can reach the bill during the day I will have no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he wait until we get through the bills to which no objection is offered, and then we can reach his bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me modify my request. Let me ask unanimous consent that after we shall have passed all the bills not objected to that we shall return to the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I will make no objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, but in view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois insisted upon his objection, I must object.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think the gentleman heard my request.

quest.

Mr. MILLER. What is it?

Mr. RUCKER. My request is that after we have gone through the Calendar and disposed of all bills unobjected to that we return to Calendar No. 2829.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is it not agreed by the committee that we should return to the beginning of the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Let the agreement of the committee be enforced.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to ask unanimous consent— Mr. MILLER. I shall object to unanimous consent. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri and would have none to that of the gentleman from South Carolina, but if we were to continue here making these requests we will not report any of these bills. I will not object when we come to the consideration of these bills, after we have gone through the Calendar, that those two claims may be taken up, but I object to doing it now.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Let the consideration of the Calendar stand as it is.

Mr. WALDO. Regular order. Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to know what disposition was made of the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas announced his objection.

UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17431) granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma section No. 36, in township No. 9 north of range No. 3 west of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how does that bill happen to be on the Calendar? That is from the Committee on Ter-

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides that all private bills except bills reported from the Committee on Pensions and Invalid Pensions shall be in order for consideration at this time.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I shall object to the consideration of

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

DONATING LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18850) donating lands in Oklahoma Territory for educational

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to object to the consideration of this bill at this time.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

COMPAÑIA DE LOS FERROCARRILES DE PUERTO RICO.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18134) for the relief of the Compañia de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico.

Mr. Chairman, I shall object to the consideration Mr. MANN. of this bill at this time.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

THE SNARE & TRIEST COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18020) for the relief of Snare & Triest.

The bill was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18020) for the relief of Snare & Triest.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Snare & Triest.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Snare & Triest for reimbursement for loss and damage to barge, tools, and machinery, resulting from a collision with the U.S. S. Colorado on the night of April 9, 1905, at the League Island Navy-Yard, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment: Provided, That the petition is filed within six months from the passage of this act.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read,

In line 3, after the word "of," strike out the words "Snare & Triest" and Insert in lieu thereof "the Snare & Triest Company;" and amend the title so that it will read: "For the relief of the Snare & Triest Company."

In line 6 strike out "April" and insert "February."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to object to the bill. I wish to know from the gentleman whether he thinks the bill will accomplish anything under the law? This does not seem to change the law as to torts. The Court of Claims can render no judgment or findings against the Government for a tort. This provides that the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the case to judgment. Does that change the law about the responsibility of the United States for torts? I do not think that the gentleman has considered it very well.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Benner of New York having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16944. An act to amend section 878 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

H. R. 14900. An act to extend Fourth street NE.;

H. R. 14815. An act for the extension of Harvard street, Columbia Heights, District of Columbia

H. R. 10843. An act authorizing the extension of Kenyon street NW.

H. R. 8435. An act for the opening of Fessenden street NW., District of Columbia;

H. R. 128. An act for the opening of a connecting highway between Waterside drive and Park road, District of Columbia;

H. R. 121. An act authorizing the extension of Seventeenth street NW.

The committee resumed its session.

HENRY HIRSCHBERG.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9386) for the relief of Henry Hirschberg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $410, to Henry Hirschberg, of St. Louis, Mo., the same being balance due him on salary as inspector of leather goods and hardware for the Indian Service.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

DAVISON CHEMICAL COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8670) for the relief of the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

T. B. STACKHOUSE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6418) for the relief of T. B. Stackhouse, a deputy collector of internal revenue for the district of South Carolina during the fiscal year 1894 and 1895.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas T. B. Stackhouse, a deputy collector of internal revenue for the district of South Carolina during the fiscal year 1894 and 1895, failed to receive balance due him on account of traveling expenses for that year, his claim for such having miscarried between the offices of the collector of internal revenue, Columbia, S. C., and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C., for which no blame could attach to him; and

Whereas, while said claim is justly due and owing said T. B. Stackhouse, it is now barred by the statute of limitations: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to T. B. Stackhouse the sum of $72.32, being the balance due for necessary traveling expenses as deputy collector of internal revenue for the district of South Carolina for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895.

The following committee amendment was read:

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

JAMES W. KENNEY AND OTHERS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8727) for the relief of James W. Kenney and the Union Brewing Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay James W. Kenney, proprietor of the Park Brewery, the sum of $337.50, with interest from September 28, 1897, and to James W. Kenney, treasurer of the Union Brewing Company, the sum of $440.62, with interest from September 28, 1897, said sums having been paid by said James W. Kenney under an illegal assessment for short-tax beer.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Claims, were read:

In line 6, after the word "cents," strike out the words "with interest from September 28, 1897."
In line 10 strike out the words "with interest from September 28, 1897."

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, was there any objection made to that bill?

The CHAIRMAN. No objection has been heard.

Mr. RUCKER. I merely want to express my surprise that that bill was not objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the bill will be laid sside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BARCLAY H. WARBURTON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3577) for the relief of Barclay H. Warburton.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Committee on Claims has no jurisdiction to report this bill. It shows on its face that it grows out of the war with Spain.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman permit me?
Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires.

Mr. GRAHAM. If you please. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I will make the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Missouri make the point of order or object?

Mr. RUCKER. I want to do whatever is most effective in disposing of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Making the point of order is most effective Mr. RUCKER. If I am forced to help the gentleman from Illinois, I will do so.

Mr. MANN. I am delighted to have such able assistance. I was about to say that if the point of order will lie, that is most The objection would simply pass the bill without prejudice.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the gentleman does not understand the bill.

Mr. RUCKER. I am sure I know as much about it as some other gentlemen who have objected here.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is not a claim growing out of the civil ar. It arises out of the Spanish war.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri does not make the point of order.

Mr. GRAHAM. He reserves it.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid the gentleman from Missouri has gone back on me.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman from Illinois has any doubt about it, I want to proclaim publicly that I have gone back on

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made, as the Chair understands.

Mr. GRAHAM. The point of order was reserved.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order if the gentleman wishes to take time.

Mr. GRAHAM. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not a civil-war claim. This grows out of the Spanish-American war, and all such claims have been referred to the Claims Committee and not the War Claims Committee

Mr. RUCKER. I want to ask by what right one gentleman is allowed to speak here in advocacy of a claim, while other gentlemen are not?

I am only replying to the point of order. Mr. GRAHAM.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The rule makes no distinction, whether a claim arises out of the civil war or the war with Spain or any other war. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is it not too late to make the point of order after the committee has acted on it?

Mr. MILLER. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it, the committee has not acted on it. The point of order was reserved. The Chair has ruled on the point of order. Under the ruling of the Chair the bill will be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

JOHN EFFINGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10305) to provide for the repayment of certain customs dues.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $111.70 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the repayment of the customs duties wrongfully collected at the port of Honolula, in the Territory of Hawaii, on entries Nos. 185, 357, 480, 896, 1154, and 2705, in the months of February, April, July, August, September, and October, of the year 1901, made by John Effinger.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if these taxes were paid under protest?

Mr. MILLER. The bill is favorably reported by the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That does not answer my question.

Mr. MILLER. These were paid under protest.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILEY CORBETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14464) for the relief of Wiley Corbett.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $303.38 to Wiley

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "Corbett," in line 7, add the following: "On account of unused revenue stamps for whisky produced by the said Corbett and destroyed by fire before such stamps were issued."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS P. MORGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12881) to pay Thomas P. Morgan the amount found due to him by Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I believe that bill ought to go over and I object to it.

The bill was laid aside without prejudice.

PETER FAIRLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4860) for the relief of Peter Fairley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay and return to Peter Fairley the sum of $450 paid by said Peter Fairley to the United States on a judgment against him on the ball bond of John C. Lott, who was afterwards captured and returned to the United States officers by said Peter Fairley. The said sum of $450 is hereby appropriated for said payment and return of said sum to said Peter Fairley.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL AND DR. A. E. BOOZER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7746) for the relief of Columbia Hospital and Dr. A. E. Boozer. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $125 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the claim of the Columbia Hospital, of the city of Columbia, S. C., and Dr. A. E. Boozer, of said city, for nursing, board, and medical attention to Henry Hofar, a civilian teamster of the United States Army, in said city, for the period extending from November 7 to December 12, 1898, at the request of Brigadier-General Cole, of Third Brigade, Second Division, Second Army Corps, United States Army.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM H. GOWDY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4629) for the relief of William H. Gowdy.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Alfred S. Andrew, Leander H. Gowdy, G. Morrison Taylor, C. C. Engleman, Jacob C. McCoy, Orlander F. Ralston, L. W. Ralston, J. R. McKinnie, Henry Chatillon, James M. Parker, F. B. Wortman, Alphonse F. Perrier, and M. A. Dickinson, sureties of William H. Gowdy, late postmaster at Cripple Creek, Colo., by bonds to the United States dated August 7, in the year of our Lord 1891; December 19, in the year of our Lord 1891; March 10, in the year of our Lord 1892, and July S, in the year of our Lord 1892, be, and they are hereby, released from their liability arising from any deficiency that may have occurred in the accounts of said William H. Gowdy as postmaster during the term covered by the transcripts of accounts from the Treasury Department and from any judgment which may have been obtained thereon in favor of the United States; and the proper officer of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to direct the cancellation and satisfaction of any and all judgments that may have been rendered against the said William H. Gowdy and the sureties aforesaid upon the said bonds or any of them.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to said William H. Gowdy, out of any unappropriated money in the United States Treasury, the sum of $1,500, being the amount advanced and disbursed by him while acting as such postmaster and being absolutely necessary in performing his duties as such postmaster.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as

In line 8, after the word "postmaster," insert the words "Fremont, Moreland, Fremont and;" and in the same line, after the word "Colorado," insert the word "respectively."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of this committee if he would not be willing to strike out sec-

Mr. MILLER. No; I would not.

Mr. MANN. One is to relieve from a bond, and there might be some equity in that, and the other is to pay money.

Mr. MILLER. If there is any equity in either part there is equity in both. This is a clear case where the postmaster spent his own money for the benefit of the United States, and it ought to be repaid.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to take the time of this committee at this time. I can see some merit in this claim, but I can not see any in those I have objected to. I do not desire to object to this claim, but I think it ought to be considered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

J. J. L. PEEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1808) for the relief of J. J. L. Peel.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill go over.

The bill was laid aside without prejudice.

SOTIE R, MATHILDA R, AND HELEN R.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17099) to authorize the refund of parts of fines imposed on the vessels Sotic R, Mathilda R, and Helen R.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, for repayment Schoonmaker & Rice, of New York, N. Y., owners of the barges Sotie R. Mathilda R, and Helen R, part of the amount of fines aggregating $230 paid by them to the collector of customs at New Haven, Conn., on or about September 19, 1905, for violation of the laws of the United States relating to the enrollment and licensing of vessels, the amount having been deposited by the collector to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States August 31, 1965, prior to his receipt of instructions from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor conditionally mitigating the fines to $50, $180.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DEPOSIT SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, MOBILE, ALA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4190) for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, Ala.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to that.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

PATRICK J. MADDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4271) for the relief of Patrick J. Madden.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Patrick J. Madden the sum of $223.71, being the amount of money which was stolen from the Cambridgeport, Mass., station of the Boston post-office and paid to the Post-Office Department by said Madden, under protest, on March 31, 1891, at which time said Madden was a clerk in said station, said robbery being through no fault or negligence on the part of said

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ARTHUR A. UNDERWOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4350) for the relief of Arthur A. Underwood.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill be laid aside

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

CHARLES D. SOUTHERLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9131) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles D. Southerlin.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to that bill. The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice,

W. A. M'LEAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4948) for the relief of W. A. McLean. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to W. A. McLean, of Wilkesboro, N. C., the sum of $117.69, for money due him under a judgment of the United States court for the western district of North Carolina, rendered at November term, 1904, at Wilkesboro, N. C.

Mr. Chairman, I will make no objection to that Mr. MANN. bill, if they will correct it and make it say what they say it says. The bill says it is to pay a judgment of the United States court. when the judgment provides that that sum should be paid less the fees of the marshal,

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to that amendment. Mr. CRUMPACKER. The amount of the bill subtracts it, I think.

No; it does not. Mr. MANN.

Mr. MILLER. The amount is all right.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me, but it is not. The amount named in the bill was the amount which was paid. but that included the costs of the marshal, and the judgment of the court was that the money to be returned, so far as it remained in the hands of the United States marshal, less his fees for collecting the same. I know of no reason why the Government should pay it. I am willing to have the bill recurred to, but at present I ask that it go over.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

MILBURN WAGON COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5195) for the relief of the Milburn Wagon Company, of Toledo,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill go over. Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, under the rule I desire to make a brief statement of the facts in this case.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman does not understand the rule. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the unanimous consent agreed to was that the chairman of the committee could make a brief statement.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Then, I ask the chairman of the committee to yield to me in order that I may make a brief statement of the facts in the case.

Mr. MILLER. I would like very much to yield to the gentleman, but that will merely defeat a whole lot of these bills that ought to be paid.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for.

Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state it. Mr. SOUTHARD.

The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. SOUTHARD. As I understand the rule it is this: That if the bill is objected to, after reading, it has to be laid aside without prejudice. I may say, however, that a brief statement of the claim will be allowed and if any further objection is made it is then to be laid aside, but to be laid aside at all events without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the rule, when a bill is read, a brief statement of the chairman of the committee

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is the chairman of the committee the only person allowed to make a statement?

The CHAIRMAN. That was the unanimous consent that was agreed to.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Then I did not understand the rule that

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair. The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

A. J. STINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4300) for the relief of A. J. Stinson.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $468 to A. J. Stinson, being the amount of permanent improvements, including fee and commission for entry, made on a homestead entered in Alabama under the laws of the United States, of which he was afterwards dispossessed and his entry canceled on account of a prior claim of entry granted by the United States.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN STINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4299) for the relief of John Stinson.

The Clerk read as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $318 to John Stinson, being the amount of permanent improvements, including fee and commission for entry, made on a homestead entered in Alabama under the laws of the United States, of which he was afterwards dispossessed and his entry canceled on account of a prior claim of entry granted by the United States.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

A. J., C. C., AND T. W. HODGES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16166) for the relief of A. J., C. C., and T. W. Hodges. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Committee on Claims have no jurisdiction to report this bill, it being a war claim. It is a claim that grows out of the civil war.

Mr. MILLER. I would ask the Chairman to have that laid aside.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. If the Chair is prepared to dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to dispose of it. It is evidently a war claim, and, the Committee on Claims having no jurisdiction, the bill will be referred back to the House.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chairman to this rule:

The erroneous reference of a bill, if it remains uncorrected, in effect gives jurisdiction to the committee receiving it.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule just read by the gentleman from Ohio refers to an erroneous reference of a public bill, not a bill on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EDWIN S. HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1050) for the relief of Edwin S. Hall.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,028.58, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Edwin S. Hall, of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn., the said sum of $2,028.58.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ABRAM JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 319) to reimburse Abram Johnson, formerly postmaster at Mount Pleasant, Utah.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that go over.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

BENJAMIN F. PETTIT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9132) for the relief of the legal representatives of Benjamin F. Pettit.

Mr. MANN. I make the same objection to this bill. There are a large number of these bills just alike.

NEW YORK MARINE REPAIR COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3581) providing for the payment to the New York Marine Repair Company, of Brooklyn, N. Y., of the cost of the repairs to the steamship Lindesfarne, necessitated by injuries received from being fouled by the U. S. Army transport Crook in May,

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the New York Marine Repair Company, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the sum of $850.13 in full for the cost of the repairs made by said company upon the steamship Lindesfarne, necessitated by the damages done to that vessel by the U. S. Army transport Crook in collision in May, 1900.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN H. POTTER.

Te next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3574) for the relief of John H. Potfer.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that go over, Mr. Chairman. The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

HENRY O. BASSETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3268) for the relief of Henry O. Bassett, heir of Henry Opeman Bassett, deceased.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection to that. They are on all fours with a number of others.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

MARY V. SHAW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7548) for the relief of Mary V. Shaw.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill go over. The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

C. W. STURTEVANT ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 639) for the relief of C. W. Sturtevant, Rolla Brown, Alice Brown, M. L. Kelly, Robert G. Duffy, Fread Gehring, T. H. Ross, and L. C. Partee.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe I will ask that that be laid aside without prejudice.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

JOHN M. BURKS.

The next business was the bill (S. 1344) for the relief of John M. Burks.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, to save time, I ask that the bill be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks that the bill be laid aside, and it is so ordered.

GEORGE T. PETTENGILL

The next business was the bill (S. 1933) for the relief of George T. Pettengill, lieutenant, United States Navy.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks that the bill be laid aside, and it is so ordered.

F. S. BOWKER.

The next business was the House resolution 427 (in lieu of H. R. 15810) referring to Court of Claims the claim of F. S. Bowker, managing owner of the schooner William H. Davenport.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time, I ask that the resolution be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] asks that the resolution be laid aside without prejudice, and it is so ordered.

NYE & SCHNEIDER COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10595) for the relief of Nye & Schneider Company.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bonynge] makes objection, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

MITSUI BUSSAN KAISHA.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9289) for the relief of Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Colorado. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MILLER. My question is this—
The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if it is his intention to object to the further consideration of any of these bills?

Mr. BONYNGE. I shall have to do so. If I had felt that the gentieman had examined the bill and desired to make any objection to the merits of the bill, I should not adopt this procedure.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman intend to object to all other bills?

Mr. BONYNGE. I shall feel compelled to do so. Mr. MILLER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

GEORGE T. LARKIN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 12188) for the relief of George T. Larkin.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the objection is premature, because under the special order it is provided that all bills should be read. I insist that the bill should be read, and the gentleman can make his objection. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for. Objection is made, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

NAVY DEPARTMENT CLAIMS.

The next bill (H. R. 13605) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado objects, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

JOSE RAMOS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 19641) for the relief of Jose Ramos.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado objects, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

WILLIAM B. TODD.

The next business was the bill (S. 2138) for the relief of the estate of William B. Todd, deceased.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same objection. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado objects, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

L. S. WATSON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (S. 2964) for the relief of the L. S. Watson Manufacturing Company, of Leicester, Mass. Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to object. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska objects, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice.

The next business was the House resolution 561 (in lieu of H. R. 13870) referring to Court of Claims the claim of Hans Peter Guttormsen.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish to say to my good friend, the objector, that this does not appropriate any money. [Cries of "Regular order!"]
The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, and the bill will be laid aside without prejudice, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

LOUISE POWERS M'KEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1218) for the relief of Louise Powers McKee, administratrix.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that that bill be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. RUCKER. In the absence of the gentleman from Colorado, I object

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside without preju-

ROBERT D. BENEDICT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1443) for the payment of Robert D. Benedict for services rendered.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

MAJ. SEYMOUR HOWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5675) for the relief of Maj. Seymour Howell, United States Army, retired.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I ask that the bill be passed without

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

JOSEPH SIERRA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 350) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Sierra, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 350) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Sierra, deceased. Be it conocted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. W. Hargis, Mary Hargis, Mrs. Belle McConnoughby, Mrs. Kate Anderson, Modeste Hargis, Mrs. Virginia Craig, Petronilla Leonard, Steven Leonard, and Joseph Sierra, heirs of Joseph Sierra, deceased, late collector of customs at Pensacola, Fla., the sum of $3.679.19, and the said sum is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GERMAN M. ROUSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6430) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to German M. Rouse informer's fees for certain opium seizures.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

CHARLES E. DANNER & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8685) for the relief of Charles E. Danner & Co.

Mr. MADDEN. I object, Mr. Chairman. The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

JAMES M. M'GEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 503) to reimburse James M. McGee for expenses incurred in the burial of Mary J. De Lange.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 503) to reimburse James M. McGee for expenses incurred in the burial of Mary J. De Lange.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay James M. McGee the sum of $76.75, for funeral expenses incurred in the burial of Mary J. De Lange, who was pensioned on certificate No. 290818 as the widow of Augustus De Lange, late captain Company C, One hundred and forty-fourth Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I object to that bill.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania and others. Give her funeral expenses

Mr. RUCKER. I withdraw my objection. The CHAIRMAN. The objection is withdrawn.

The bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

REFUND TO TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10103) to refund to the Territory of Hawaii the amount expended in maintaining light-house service on its coasts from the time of the organization of the Territory until said light-house service was taken over by the Federal Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman explain that bill.

Mr. MACON. I object.
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not object.

Mr. MACON. I did make objection.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think we had better lay aside our personal prejudices instead of laying aside bills. I have no bills, but I am trying to help everybody. [Cries of "Regular order!'

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that I stand recorded as objecting to the bill S. 5675. I did not object to that, and if I am so recorded I am improperly recorded.

Mr. RUCKER. Regular order!

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If I am so recorded, I desire to withdraw the objection.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now that the gentleman has withdrawn that objection to the bill, I want the gentleman to explain it.

Mr. MILLER. Regular order!

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is regular order.
[Cries of "Regular order!"]
The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Missouri has just stated that he did not make objection to the Senate bill referred to-S. 5675. The Chair has kept no record of who has made objection to the bills, and does not know who did so.

Mr. SNAPP. I renew the objection. Mr. MADDEN. I object to the consideration of this bill. The bill was laid aside without prejudice.

OSCAR FULGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19493) to reimburse Oscar Fulgham, ex-sheriff of Madison County, Ala., for judgment and costs rendered against him when acting in the service of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I object, Mr. Chairman. Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to explain that bill just for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent. Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask that. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to make an explanation of the bill just read.

Mr. MILLER. I object.

A. L. FLACK & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5196) to refund to A. L. Flack & Co., of Tiffin, Ohio, money paid for internal-revenue stamps lost in the mails.

Mr. SNAPP. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. GARRETT. It would seem that the expectation of further progress in this matter, when we know in advance that every bill is to be objected to, is idle; and I ask unanimous consent that every bill may be considered as objected to that re-mains on the Calendar, and that we return and take up the bills in their regular order. [Loud applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the remaining bills on the Calendar be considered as objected to, and that the remaining bills upon the Calendar be taken up in regular order.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know whether that is the request. I think the Chairman made a mistake. It is not that the remaining bills be taken up in order, but we are to go back to the beginning of the Calendar and take them up.

The CHAIRMAN. They are to be taken up in the regular order.

Mr. GARRETT. That was the request. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Mr. SNAPP. What is the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Tennessee that all bills not reached on the Calendar be considered as objected to, and that the bills be taken up in their regular order, and the bills that have not been objected to would still remain to be read.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I object.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I move that we now recur to the beginning of the Calendar, if it is in order to make that Mr. PAYNE. That motion is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. If it is in order I desire to make it, and if not I will not.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). Will the gentleman from New York state his point of order against the mo-tion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PAYNE. That the committee having made an order to go through the Calendar and find out the unobjected bills, and having proceeded in part execution of that order, it is not now in order for a motion to go back to the beginning of the Calendar except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the committee has power to make and unmake rules by which it shall be governed during its sessions as to the order of its business.

Mr. PAYNE. The committee has made the rule by unanimous consent, and having made it by unanimous consent, the motion is not now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that a committee that has power to make rules has power to unmake them. The Chair will read section 4, page 284, of the Manual.

In committees of the Whole House business on their Calendars may taken up in regular order, or in such order as the committee may determine, unless the bill to be considered was to be determined by the House at the time of going into committee, but bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall have precedence.

It appears from the rule that the Committee has control of its procedure.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, this rule was made by unanimous consent, and now it can not be changed without unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio contend that a rule adopted by unanimous consent has any more force than a rule adopted by the majority?

KEIFER. After it has been partly executed, yes; it has been so held in former years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is now in order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACON. The committee having adopted the rule that nothing will be in order during the proceeding we are now engaged in except that the chairman of the committee shall have a right to make a brief statement of the bills as they are presented, what right has the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a motion that we now go back to the beginning of the Cal-

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule that the Chair has just read the Chair is of opinion that it is very plain that the committee has power to alter or amend any rule that it has adopted for its control under that rule.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not desire to take the time to discuss the point of order, and will withdraw it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I ask for the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the committee now recur to the beginning of the Private Calendar for the purpose of considering bills under the standing rules of the House.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is that motion subject to discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much whether that motion is in order. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order now. The order of the House is to proceed in a certain way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has overruled that point of order heretofore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the committee proceed with the Private Calendar in order for to-day.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill in order.

BECKER BREWING AND MALTING COMPANY.

The first business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 1231) to reimburse the Becker Brewing and Malting Company, of Ogden, Utah, for loss resulting from robbery of the United States mails. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the Becker Brewing and Malting Company, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $92.50, for loss incurred through the transmission in the United States mails of certain revenue stamps.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

L. BIERTEMPFEL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 12840) for the relief of L. Biertempfel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse L. Biertempfel, a German subject, for loss sustained by him through the action of Louis Stern, United States commercial agent at Bamberg, Germany, in collecting the sum of $871.08 belonging to Biertempfel and converting it to his own use, and said sum is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CRUMPACKER and Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] is entitled to the floor. To whom does he yield.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

CRUMPACKER]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, this bill is quite an important one, because it involves a very important principle, which is the responsibility of the Federal Government to private individuals for the delinquencies and peccadillos of public officers. If a citizen advances money, or if he has transactions of a quasi public character with a ministerial officer of the Government, and that officer, in the course of the transaction, appropriates money coming to him to his own use which he ought to have applied to the use of the citizen, this bill establishes the principle that the Government shall be responsible. If the Government is called upon to pay claims of this character, it ought to protect itself by requiring adequate official bonds from its consular agents and all other officers for whom it stands sponsor under this principle. Here was a consular offi-cer who, in the course of his official duty, came into possession of some seven or eight hundred dollars belonging to a subject of Germany, and the report states that the officer appropriated the money to his own use and absconded. I do not understand that in accordance with the principles of law or according to usage the Government can be held responsible for the thievery of its consular agents. The only reason advanced in the report why the bill ought to pass is the fact that the claimant is a subject of the Kaiser, that he is a German subject. If he were an American citizen there would be absolutely no claim of right, as it seems to me, that the Government ought to make good to private citizens for the stealings of public officers. make that statement to the committee in order that they may know of the principle involved in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside-Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire the floor.

Mr. MILLER. In the gentleman's own right?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. 1es.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the claims which I objected to before. If the claim is good, the amount appropriated is insufficient. If the claim is bad, then no portion of the money should be appropriated.

A consul of the United States located at Bamberg, Bavaria, defrauded the people of that locality, said in large number of instances to be poor farmers, out of more than $4,000. One of the claimants, probably having the largest claim, presented his case through his attorney, as he had threatened to do before, to the department of state in Germany, and it was transmitted to the Department of State of the United States,

The committee recommends payment of that one claim in favor of this one farmer of eight hundred and odd dollars. The other poor farmers, who had been defrauded of their money by the United States consul, but not in sufficient sums to enable them to employ attorneys, are not proposed to be reimbursed. If it is the duty of the United States to stand for the defraudments and thievery of its consuls, then it ought to pay all of the people who are defrauded by this consul, and not merely pay this one. Let us see what the recommendation of the consul's successor was:

Unless some unheard-of larger amount should come up yet I venture to say that his debts, incurred by misleading people about his position, amount to within $4,000. This is not exactly a very large amount, but it was stolen out of a lot of poor people's pockets in such a villalnous, mean way that it is a big enough amount to cause a great deal of unpleasant comment in my district. For the sake of the good name of our Government, for the sake of maintaining the honor of the consular service in general and the consular office I have the honor to hold in particular, I dare to make the suggestion to you that these amounts should be taken particular, I da should be taken-out of Stern's bond. In making this suggestion I will say that I have not, with one syllable, allowed anyone to hope that the Government will see to it that this infamous outrage is righted; on the contrary, I have made them all understand that they have no claim against the Government, but it seems to me, notwithstanding all existing rules about such cases, that those who eight years ago have ventured to go on a man's bond who has never been anything but a liter and a fraud should be made to pay for this error, and not those poor people who had all reasons to think that our Government would guarantee these doings of its consul.

Out of the Treasury of the United States? No-

I gave you proper and due notice of Stern's death by cable, so as to guard the Government against loss and against releasing the bond. I hope the Government will decide to utilize this bond to pay for the sins of the man in whose favor it was issued.

I don't undertake to say whether the Govenrment could collect anything out of the bond on account of these sums or not, but if the Government is under any liability, if it is the intention of the Government to maintain the integrity of the consular service, if it is the purpose of the Government to pay one of the persons who was defrauded by this consul, then the Government ought to pay the little fellow as well as the big fellow; and if $800 should be paid to one, then all of the claims ought to be paid to the others. I do not understand the theory upon which our Government proceeds when an attorney in a foreign country threatens it, as was done in this case by the attorney for this man, and we thereupon yield to the threats and pay that person and refuse to pay the other persons in similar circumstances where the amounts involved are small. Is it the duty of our Government to pay only the large claims, assuming that $800 is large, comparing it with a small sum of money? If anything is to be paid by the Government in this case, then the Government ought to pay to all of the people defrauded the amounts which they loaned or gave to this man.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FIRE AT ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11676) for the relief of persons who sustained property damage caused by fire at the Rock Island Arsenal.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, namely: O. A. Artz, $20; Benjamin Bragdon, $2.85; W. H. Bragdon, $3; U. J. Beliveau, $12; Henry Brockmann, $23; W. B. Barker, $15; S. D. Brownewell, $14.20; Carl Brown, $4.75; W. S. Brooks, $3.50; H. P. Bertelsen, $20; Hugh Conwell, $7; E. W. Cook, $7.10; George Cottrell, $16; James Cox, $35; Ernst Drott, $2; James Dougherty, $10; George Duggan, $40; W. H. Deters, $37; K. H. Dauber, $13.90; C. J. Danielson, $21.50; Charles Erickson, $20.75; F. A. Felske, $14.25; George D. Gillette, $40; Richard Hermann, $5; Louis Heuer, $15; W. S. Hill, $40; T. R. Herkner, $2.50; Frank Helder, $35; Gust Hirstein, $35; M. N. Hart, $5; F. W. Hoffmann, $8.75; J. C. Jacobson, $13.50; Harry Jager, $30; C. P. Jensen, $13.25; William Kennedy, $19; W. F. Kubik, $5.45; Frank Knox, $20.50; L. A. Kindy, $2.50; C. W. Krueger, $14.50; William Langenhagen, $20; Rudy Lichal, $40; George W. Lee, $10; Robert Q. Lehman, $2; F. W. Miller, $53.30; Joseph Mrugalski, $5.25; Henry Miller, $19.85; C. K. Merriman, $30; Albert Moeblus, $25; George Nelson, $26; Charles Nahrgang, $35; A. B. Othmer, $5; John Olson, $23.75; F. M. Poole, $2.95; R. A. Peters, $1.90; William Feterson, $2; F. G. Prucha, $32.50; W. J. Reese, $18.25; L. E. Rees, $2.50; Charles Seeman, 60 cents; W. J. Singer, $12; Max Sugar, $8.15; C. L. Speckhart, $4.30; H. von Seggern, $8.75; George Schwenker, $9.90; J. E. Sullivan, $27.50; Louis Schwab, $10; J. F. Schmidt, $17.50; O. W. Schwenker, $8.25; H. W. Trafford, $25; C. H. Talbot, $22; B. E. Talbot, $17; Harry Thompson, $2.5; John Vrtyna, $6.25; M. J. Valiquette, $14.50; G. H. Welch, $13.95; E. A. Wood, $8.75; O. J. Wedertz, $27.25; Basil Williamson, $18; F. C. Williams, $7.75; Almon Widen, $19; Charles White, $19.30; W. A. Young, $1.50; for payment of damage sustained by employees by reason of fire in building aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that in the present condition of the temper of the committee it makes but little difference as to the character of the claim or the reasons for it. Gentlemen who have introduced bills which have been reported favorably and which have not yet been reached upon the Calendar are so anxious for the consideration and passage of their bills that they are unwilling to raise a question about bills which precede them, and gentlemen who have bills passed are unwilling in graciousness to the balance of the committee to raise any question about bills which succeed them.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the merits of the bill before the committee

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I shall confine myself to the merits of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I objected to this bill when it was up before. I made no objection to this bill or any other bill without a careful examination of the bill and the report. This bill proposes to pay to a large number of Government employees losses incurred by them in a fire at the Rock Island There have been times when the Government has reimbursed Government employees for losses incurred by fire. In this case the fire was caused by the negligence of the Government employees. The report says that the origin of the fire was unknown

Mr. DAWSON. If that is so, how does the gentleman know that it was incurred by the negligence of the employees?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, even though the report does say so, everything in the report is not to be considered as absolute facts. The report says that the cause of the fire was unknown, but the report also goes on to say that the people in the Rock Island Arsenal were engaged in a most dangerous occupation, in a place unsuited for the work, and that the men had been cautioned to be extremely careful in reference to the work.

Mr. DAWSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman if he desires, though I do not desire to consume any unneces-

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if that fact should be charged up to the workingmen who were engaged in the work?

Mr. MANN. The fact is that the fire must have occurred in this case through the negligence of some of the workingmen themselves. There is no other possible cause for the fire.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is there any proof here showing that these particular employees, these claimants, were the persons who were guilty of negligence that caused the fire?

Mr. MANN. These employees were the ones who had their tools where the fire occurred. They were working where the fire occurred.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is a pretty strong presumption if the gentleman charges them with negligence.

Mr. MANN. I do not say they were all guilty of negligence, do not intend to. I don't know anything about whose negligence it was, but I do know that they were working in a dangerous occupation in a place in a building where they knew that unless the utmost diligence was observed a fire was liable to break out.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Suppose it was because of negligence on the Mr. PAYNE. part of anybody that fire was caused, does the gentleman think the United States ought to be the insurer of people in its employ against their property being destroyed by fire?

Mr. MANN. I do not. I was about to come to that, Mr. Chairman. In the first place, I think the report shows that the fire occurred there through the negligence of people who are now seeking reimbursement out of the Treasury of the United States. In the second place, a workman who goes into a shop of the Government of the United States with his tools can insure them if he desires. There is no law to prevent it. He has the opif he desires. portunity to obtain insurance if he applies for it just as anyone else, and if he desires to have his tools protected against fire he should insure the tools in a proper way. In this case nobody knows what the tools were worth, there is no way of ascertaining what the tools were worth except the mere statement of the men who are asking payment from the Government. they desire to have their tools protected from fire they should have taken out insurance, and it is a very dangerous precedent for the United States to say that it will pay every employee of the Government wherever loss is caused by fire, when their property is destroyed by fire. Suppose the Capitol, suppose any building in Washington, is burned and some one has some property belonging to himself. It is an unheard-of proposition that the Government of the United States is to be asked to reimburse them. Those people are as much the insurer of their property as the Government is the insurer of its property. The Government loses its property; these people lose their property. They were upon even terms for the care and conduct of the building. were upon even terms for the care and conduct of the building. The Government had to rely upon these people for the Government's protection, and then when they or some of them have failed in proper diligence and a fire has occurred they want the Government to stand all the expense. What would be thought if the Government should turn around and ask these gentlemen to reimburse the Government for its loss? It would be ridicu-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Certainly.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Does the gentleman contend if the Government should neglect to provide the ordinary protection against fire that it ought not to be held responsible to somebody who loses by reason of that fire?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Government makes it a rule in all of these cases not to reimburse people who lose through the negligence of the Government. If it is the policy of Congress to pay such claims, why do not we provide by general law for payment caused by negligence of the Government in the navy-yard here and in establishments throughout the country conducted by the Government's

Mr. SOUTHARD. Does the gentleman hold that the Government ought not to be held responsible in a case where an individual or corporation would be held responsible?

Mr. MANN. Certainly I say that. Does the gentleman claim that the Government bught to be liable as an individual or corporation is liable, and if he does, has he introduced a bill to make the Government liable? If he claims so and has not introduced a bill, he has not given that diligent attention to his duty which he usually gives.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I will say in answer to that it has been the policy of the Committee on Claims, since I have known anything about it, to hold the Government responsible where an individual would be responsible.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield to me two minutes?

Mr. MILLER. I would like to have a vote taken as soon as possible, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Proceeding upon the reasoning which the gentleman from Illinois has just laid down, I opposed this bill in committee, and shall vote against it here. I believe it is a

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.
Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill came before this House in an unusual manner. In the first place, it does not come here simply as a claim. It was first submitted to this House as an estimate from the Treasury Department of the United States, having first been approved by the War Department, every one of these claims having been made under oath and investigated by a competent board of Army officers. estimate of an appropriation to pay this claim was presented to the House in the regular way. With regard to the employment of these men, they were under orders and were assigned to a dangerous undertaking in the Rock Island Arsenal, and while in the performance of that duty the fire occurred and these things were destroyed. The aggregate amount is only $1,269, and it is to be paid to eighty-two workingmen who were employed at that arsenal. They are all small amounts, none of them for more than $40, and thirty-two of them are for sums in less than $10. There is no claim attorney interested in any way in these claims.

As precedents for favorable action, I cite that in the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress a bill was enacted into law paying Charles Blake, a paymaster's clerk, United States Navy. $1,015 for articles destroyed by fire at the time of the burning of the Windsor House, at Yokohama, Japan. In the first session of the present Congress a bill passed this House (H. R. 9528) to reimburse Fred Dickson for loss of his tools through a fire which destroyed the engine house at Fort Duchesne, Utah, on September 19, 1902. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

W. S. HAMMAKER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 13418) for the relief of W. S. Hammaker.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. S. Hammaker, late postmaster of the city of Findlay, Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2.251.28, to reimburse said W. S. Hammaker for moneys by him actually expended and paid for necessary clerical assistance in carrying on the operation of the post-office at said city during his official term as postmaster, from 1885 to 1889, in excess of the amount provided and allowed by the Post-Office Department for said purpose during said term.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order against the consideration of the present bill at this time

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH].
The CHAIRMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] state his point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I know nothing about this bill, but I make the point of order against the consideration of this or any other bill at the beginning of this Calendar or up to the time we stopped the consideration of the Calendar, for the following reasons: I understand that before going into the consideration of the Private Calendar this afternoon it was agreed, possibly by the House

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that the Chair has already ruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I would like to state my reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has passed upon that point of order heretofore.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I think I have the privilege under the rules of this House when a point of order is made to state my reasons for making the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes that right of the gentleman, but the Chair has passed upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. For the consideration of this bill? I make it to this bill.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the Chair—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order applying to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Does the Chair deny me the right of stating my reasons?

that the amount of argument that the Chair desires to hear upon a point of order is within the discretion of the Chair, and the Chair is now ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. If the Chair is ready to rule without an argument, of course "the gentleman from Illinois" can not prevent the Chair from doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled, and, without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that has no merit as to the major part of the claim. The bill proposes to pay $2,251 and some odd cents to a man who was postmaster in Ohio during the first Cleveland Administration. It is barely possible that a new Democratic Administration, endeavoring to cut down the expenses of the Government, declined to make a sufficient allowance for clerk hire in that post-office. A Republican Congress is now asked, after this lapse of time, to appropriate the money for a Democratic officeholder which the Democratic Administration refused to provide for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman sure that was a Democratic official?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, in the midst of the demand for Democratic plunder at that time this gentleman was appointed by President Cleveland as postmaster at this town. do not think it admits of any question of doubt as to his policy. but, whatever that may be, they have now asked the Post-Office Department for its judgment. Mind you, this is not one of the cases where a little town sprung up rapidly, as it did at Cripple Creek or some other claims that are on the Calendar here. This is a case of a town where a request was made for additional salary and for additional clerk hire. It was passed upon by the Department upon its merits. His salary was increased to $2,400 a year, and clerk-hire allowance was made of $1,372.22 It seems now that the average clerk-hire salary allowance at that time would be a little bit greater, and the Department, which has given full consideration to this case in the report to the Committee on Claims on the subject, recommends the allowance of $650.55, while the committee, in that exuberant desire to grant what anybody asks, brings in a bill for more than $2,200. Is there to be no attention paid to the facts in these cases? Is the mere fact that a Member of Congress is working for a claim, and polls probably each member of the committee before it meets, a sufficient reason for taking this money out of the Treasury? The committee recommends $2,250 be paid now.

Mr. WALDO. I suggest a discussion of the merits or demerits of the committee is not a discussion of this claim, and the gentleman ought to be called to order. He has no business to make such a statement.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well-

Mr. WALDO. He intimates that the committee desires to throw away the money of the United States on an improper claim. He has no business to make any such statement here. [Cries of "Right!"] I want to give notice now, if this thing is to be continued by members of the committee, I desire to tender my resignation, and I will not act upon it any more if such talk as that is allowed. [Cries of "Vote!"] such talk as that is allowed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not to be led into making a statement through any hasty matter of temper. No word that the gentleman can say to me will lead me to say anything that reflects upon the Committee on Claims or the members of the Committee on Claims. The gentleman can not through taunts lead me to say anything hasty upon that subject. I have great consideration both for the gentleman himself and for the other members of the Committee on Claims, and for the committee as a whole; but I have not yet reached the point where I consider any committee of the House when it presents a bill before the House is to be considered as being without possibility of an error, and if any gentleman is in that condition to refuse to permit a report to be criticised, because he is too touchy, he had better resign from the committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I address myself to the merits of the case. Here is a report from the Department suggesting that possibly--that possibly-there should be allowed the sum of $650. I defy the gentlemen on the committee to give any good reason for bringing a bill here appropriating $2,250. Vote!"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside

with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. In justice to the committee I want to say just a word—— [Cries of "Vote!"] a word-

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.
Mr. MILLER. In justice to the committee I desire to just state this: That claimant was postmaster of the town of Find-The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois well knows lay, Ohio, at the time of the discovery of oil and gas in that community. Immediately the population of that town of Findlay increased more than three times, and the business of the post-office increased within less than a year from $7,147.46 to $19,269.40.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry? Mr. MILLER (continuing). And notwithstanding this enormous increase this postmaster had to pay money out of his own pocket for clerk hire, paying $3,862.32, and there is now due him a balance of $2,251.28 that he paid out of his own pocket. We ask that he shall be paid back this sum, and we do not care whether the man was a Democrat or a Republican. [Cries of "Vote!"] with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. By reason of the increase of receipts at this office, was not the postmaster allowed additional clerk hire during this time under the regulation of the Department? And does not Perry S. Heath, First Assistant Postmaster-General, in a letter addressed to your committee dated Washington, January 29, 1900, say: "As the Department did not have then, and does not have now, authority to make allowances for the local work of a third-class post-office, Mr. Hammaker's claim for clerk hire prior to July 1, 1887, should not be considered?"

Mr. MILLER. Yes; and they did not make any appropria-

Mr. STAFFORD. And further than that, does it not show that the clerical allowance which was $540 up to July 1, 1887, was increased thereafter, as your own report shows?

Mr. MILLER. And the Department in addition to that made an allowance, in this same report, of $650, the very same report the gentleman refers to.

Mr. STAFFORD. And if this should be done in this case, there are thousands of offices where there should be a corresponding allowance.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID C. HAYNES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9298) for the relief of the estate of David C. Haynes, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,349.99 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the legal representatives of David C. Haynes, a deceased contractor, for services rendered by the said Haynes in transporting the United States mails in the State of Texas prior and up to the 1st day of June, 1891.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Claims were read, as follows:

In lines 3 and 4 of the bill strike out the words "three hundred and forty-nine dollars and ninety-nine" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and twelve dollars and fifty."

In line 7 therein strike out the words "legal representatives" and insert in lieu thereof the words "heirs at law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. As many as favor agreeing to the amendments will say "aye;" those opposed "no." The ayes appear -the ayes have it, and the amendments are agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman— Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois rose in time and addressed the Chair before the vote was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intended to recognize the gentleman from Illinois and does now recognize him. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the bills which I have had some doubt about. There are a number of them upon this Calendar which are for the payment of claims of star-route contractors for services rendered practically after the civil war commenced; after various of the States had seceded.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, not after the war commenced.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Kansas will allow me Mr. MILLER. I will allow the gentleman if he will state the facts, but I will not allow him to make misstatements before this committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois is not engaged in making misstatements.

Mr. MILLER. He does make a misstatement if he says this was after the war commenced, and he knows it.

The CHAIRMAN. Both gentlemen must be in order.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman refers to the formal opening of the war, that may be a matter of question; but the real war between the States commenced before the 1st day of June. 1861: and much as I should delight to yield to the gentleman for instruction, I do not ask him for his knowledge of history on that point.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. This bill is for services rendered before the 31st of March, 1861. Mr. MANN. The bill says:

For services rendered by the said Haynes in transporting the United ates mails in the State of Texas prior and up to the 1st day of States mail June, 1861.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The bill carries no appropriation for any services rendered after the 31st of March, 1861. [Cries of "Vote."]

Mr. MANN. Then the bill ought to be corrected. I will say to gentlemen that I do not think they will expedite matters by being discourteous in this way. I understand my rights. Is it the policy of the Government to pay to these contractors, if they were disloyal to the Government during the war, money which otherwise would have been due to them?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois asks that question of me, I desire to answer that these men were loyal to the Government and were rendering service to the Government for which they have never been paid. As to whether they afterwards became disloyal or not is a question that I care nothing about. I am in favor of this Government paying its honest debts to men who were loyal to it at the time the service was rendered. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. That is good talk for the hustings and good anywhere, I may say to the gentleman. He never says anything that is not good; but if this had been a piece of property belonging to this man and had been seized by the Government of the United States, then he would have no claim against the Government unless he proved his loyalty. In what does the distinction exist between services and property? Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will allow me, the distinction is this: If this had been property and had been taken, it would have been taken during the war. It could not have been taken at any other time. Now, the service was rendered before the beginning of the war.

Mr. MANN. It may be considered as having been taken during the war. If this man was disloyal to the Government, any claim which he had against the Government, unless I am mistaken, lapsed, and he has no right to assert it. In order to assert a claim against the Government he must prove his loyalty, and if he had commenced a suit in the Court of Claims he would be required to prove his loyalty.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me-

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I am inclined to think the gentleman from Illinois is on a wrong scent in this case, although he is right in opposing this bill.

Mr. MANN. I was endeavoring to obtain information as to the law.

Mr. PAYNE. Perhaps I can give the gentleman a little information. A great many claims of this class have arisen for the carrying of the mails in the Confederate States up to June 1, 1861. Of course hostilities commenced before that time. Texas had seceded before that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York does not undertake to correct the gentleman from Kansas in his history, does he? He will throw the gentleman from Kansas into hysterics.

[Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that the Confederate States took up this matter early in the history of that government. They made an appropriation of $750,000 to pay the claims, and Postmaster-General Regan paid five or six hundred thousand dollars of that money on claims of this kind. The gentleman when he came to Congress had forgotten all about it. One of the most pathetic things that ever occurred was his effort to remember that he had paid out this money. The Government of the United States got hold of the book and they found that the book showed that he had paid out of this appropriation five or six hundred thousand dollars. That book when it came into the possession of the United States was mutilated; a large number of pages had been cut out, but the remaining pages showed to whom the money was paid.

Of course the pages cut out did not show what claims had been paid. Claims came in, and under the law these claims were met by evidence that they had been paid, by evidence from the Confederate books. Although honorable gentlemen came in and swore that they had never received any pay on account of the claims before that book was discovered, it was shown afterwards that they had received money for those claims. After the book was discovered all claims had been cleaned up which the claim agents could find. Some gentleman in another branch of Congress introduced a resolution that the Post-Office Department should report the contents of the book to Congress. That was a few years ago. All the Post-Office officials could do was to report a copy of the book, at the same time saying that it had been mutilated. Since that time a number of claims had passed both Houses and become laws. They are claims not enumerated on the pages that remain in the book, but whether on the pages that have been eliminated for some purpose or other or not it does not appear.

The committee ought not to bring in any claim and recommend it unless they have the most positive proof that the claim has not been paid; proof that establishes the fact beyond any dispute, in order to protect the Government of the United States. have looked over the reports made in two or three cases, and I have failed to discover the proof in any of the cases, and therefore I think the payment should not be made. The service was rendered largely before the war, the Confederate States paid for it, and the men are not entitled to payment twice, and if this individual case was paid he ought not to be paid twice. It is a fact that his name does not appear on the book, but whether it appeared on the mutilated pages or not I do not know. I can not discover in the report or in the papers any evidence showing that he has not been paid.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, now that the gentleman from New York has furnished the gentleman from Illinois with information along that line, I want to furnish him with a little along another line. This bill, whatever it may provide for the payment of this claim, the facts are that the services were rendered prior to March 31, 1861, as this report shows. Fort Sumter was fired on April 12, 1861, and the President's proclamation was issued on the 15th day of April, 1861, nearly half a month after the services were rendered.

Now, as to the question of proof. The committee has before it affidavits, all that it was possible to get, in reference to this The mutilated records in the Treasury Department do not show that the claim was paid. The affidavits before the committee show that the claim was never paid, and the record in the Post-Office Department shows that this amount of money is now standing to the credit of this gentleman, showing that the Government of the United States has never paid it, and so I say that it ought to be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

P. S. CORBETT.

The next business was the bill (S. 1894) for the relief of P. S. Corbett.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounts of P. S. Corbett, formerly United States marshal for the State of Nevada, be readjusted by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the said Secretary is hereby directed to allow and credit to the said Corbett, under the head of "Fees and expenses of marshals, United States courts, 1883 and 1884," the sum of $1.533.64 now charged against said Corbett on the books of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, most of these bills have been read one time. Is it necessary that they should be read a second time in full?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that they come up under a different rule of procedure. Many of them contain different items, and it would be difficult for a person to recall the The Chair will hold that each bill should be former reading. read as it is called up.

The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. Chairman, I do not see how anybody can Mr. MANN defend this bill. Of course I know it will pass. It is a Senate bill. The amount will be taken out of the Treasury of the United States

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Does this bill require an appropriation of any I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is simply for squaring the accounts of this man, who is dead, and it does not require a dollar from the Treasury of the United [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when I said it would take money out of the Treasury of the United States I meant exactly what I said, though possibly not in the exact language of putting the hands in and taking the cash out. In fact I never have known people to do it in exactly that way. The Government of the United States has a claim against this man which is in process of collection. What are the facts? The man-or his bondsman or his heirs; I don't remember now-desires relief. This man wants a claim paid to him on this basis, and let the gentleman understand it: In the old Territory of Nevada the United States marshal was allowed double mileage. Where marshals elsewhere were allowed 10 cents a mile for coming with the prisoner, this marshal was allowed 20 cents a mile in the Territory of Nevada. The reasons were good. Travel was difficult There was good reason for allowing him 20 and expensive. cents a mile. He was directed to bring a man from California to Washington. He came here with three in his party, not traveling in Nevada, but traveling all the way from California or Nevada to Washington. He was paid by the Government 10 cents a mile for three different persons for that trip, a very profitable trip for him to make. His cost did not equal 5 cents a mile. The Government already has paid him a profit on that transaction, and now they want the Government, because he happens to be a marshal in Nevada, to pay him 20 cents a mile all the way there and back again for three people for bringing a man down here to testify. Upon what basis can such a claim be maintained? If he were legally entitled to it he would have received it, but the Comptroller held that, although he was allowed double mileage within the Territory of Nevada, he was not allowed double mileage this side of there. He received his full 10 cents a mile for all the distance between Nevada and Washington and back again and 20 cents a mile for the distance traveled in the Territory of Nevada. Now he wants 20 cents a mile for the distance between Nevada and this capital. On what basis can such a claim be sustained?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want this record to go out with the statement such as has been made by the gentleman from Illinois without any denial of it. The Congress of the United States in 1899 passed a law for the purpose of squaring the accounts of this same marshal, but under that law, because they had used certain words in reference to extraordinary expenses, the Comptroller of the Currency held that he could not swear his accounts. The Attorney-General of the United States, Benjamin H. Brewster, approved this bill, and I want to read just what he says in relation to it:

These expenses were incurred by an officer of the United States who endeavored in good faith to carry out the instructions imparted to him. I desire, therefore, if proper, to have this account of expenses allowed under section 837. If you adhere, however, to the decision that $2 is the maximum expense for each day that can be officially allowed in his case, then I request that the account of Mr. Corbett may be sent to this department that steps may be taken to have the account approved as an extraordinary expense.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know that under the act of 1899 the expenses that were recommended by Attorney-General Brewster have been paid, and that it is the balance that was never recommended by him that this bill proposes to pay?

Mr. MILLER. Oh no; it is the entire amount recommended by Attorney-General Brewster.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know that part of this money was paid under the act of 1899?

Mr. MILLER. A part was paid under that act, and because the Comptroller of the Currency was not willing to recommend the whole amount, this act was desired. I desire further to say that the bondsmen of this man are all dead with the exception of one, and he is an old man over 80 years old, without any property. I do not know of any reason for trying to keep this any longer before the country. It ought to have been settled

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN B. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15594) for the relief of John B. Brown.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims be, and the same is hereby, authorized and directed to entertain jurisdiction in the Indian depredation claims Nos. 4997 and 8639, filed in the Court of Claims during the terms of 1890 and 1891 and during the November term, 1892, without reference to the citizenship of John B. Brown, of San Antonio, Tex., now deceased, who originally filed said claims; and for the purposes of said action, based on said claims, said John B. Brown shall be assumed to have been a citizen of the United States at the date of said Indian depredation; the proof of loss and evidence in the case having been printed by the order of the court to which reference is made, which proof shows there is nothing wanting to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction except the question of citizenship.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the hill be laid.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, if I remember this bill correctly, it is an endeavor to make a citizen out of a man because he had voted a number of times. That is the case, is it not?

Mr. BURLESON. Not solely upon the ground that he had voted several times.

Mr. PAYNE. So far as proof is concerned, he is not a citizen. Mr. BURLESON. So far as proof is concerned, I think it is conclusive he was.

Mr. PAYNE. I think I have got hold of the right case. There was no proof the man was a citizen, except he had voted. He stated that he had been naturalized at two different places, but that his naturalization papers had been burned up; and when they came to search the records at each of those places they could not find any such naturalization papers. In order to have standing in the court he was required to be a citizen of the United States, because this is an Indian depredation claim. Now, that is the thing in a nutshell. The question is whether a man can avail himself of the privilege of citizenship simply because he voted but was never naturalized. When they went to the place where he said he was naturalized they found the records did not show it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not state nearly all the facts in the case; it is much stronger in this case. The gentleman is correct as far as he has gone, but he could go a good deal further.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of Mr. BURLESON. I would like to make a short statement about the matter. The parties at interest here are the heirs of John B. Brown, who was a native of Scotland. He came to this country in 1837, being about 22 years of age. He remained in Virginia for a short while and then went to Texas, at a time when it was a republic. He remained in Texas until he was past 80 years of age, and long after he had filed this suit against the Government, occasioned by Indian depredation committed against his property, the issue of his citizenship was raised. Under the act of March 3, 1891, the fact of citizenship was made a jurisdictional issue, or, rather, a jurisdictional fact. This worthy man had in the meantime grown old and his memory had failed him. His house had been destroyed by fire, and not-withstanding he stated under oath that he had been naturalized, he was unable to state where he had taken out his naturalization papers. There is no question of these facts; he had held office in Texas; he had presided as a judge of elections; a certificate for land as a citizen of Texas had been issued to him, and as a citizen of the republic of Texas a patent to the land had been issued to him. Under the laws of Texas every man who was in Texas during the days of the republic and rendered service during that period became a citizen of the republic of Texas, and under the enabling act admitting Texas to the Union every man who was a citizen of the republic of Texas became a citizen of the United States. I do not have the least doubt of this man's citizenship.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries not a single dollar of appropriation. A gentleman near me has intimated that there are millions of dollars involved if this bill becomes law. I feel sure he is mistaken. As a matter of fact there is not one dollar of appropriation carried in the bill, only the right to sue in court.

Mr. PAYNE. What gentleman?

Mr. BURLESON. Well, not you, but somebody around here on this side.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Another gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. Some gentleman near me intimated it. want to state that citizenship, as I understand it, is the only question that has been raised against the plaintiffs who assert this claim in the Court of Claims against the Government. The issue of citizenship was not raised until this honest old Scotchman, this Texan, this worthy citizen of the Republic of Texas, had grown so old that his memory was failing him, and, Mr. Chairman, I contend that an honest Government should not undertake to raise or insist on any such technicality. these people have a just and virtuous claim, and I am profoundly astounded at the distinguished gentleman from New York in raising this objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am not acquainted with the facts regarding this particular individual citizenship, but I do know something about the claims arising out of Indian depredations that are made by persons asserting that they were citizens of the United States at the time of the depredations. There is to-day a statute under which persons who were citizens and whose property has been destroyed by Indians in amity with the United States can go to the Court of Claims. few years ago a bill was reported to this House by one of its committees which permitted persons, regardless of their citizenship at the time of the depredation and regardless of whether the Indians were in amity with the United States, to prosecute claims for the destruction of property. My recollection is that the attorney of the United States in charge of those cases

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman let me make a suggestion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just one minute, please.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not think the gentleman is discussing the real case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman may not think I am, but I believe I am, and the attorney-general of the United States The gentleman may not think I am, but in charge of the Indian depredation claims stated that if that bill were enacted into law, it would vitalize claims amounting to something like, as I recall, $10,000,000. Whether this case is one of that class I am unable to say.

Mr. BURLESON. It is not. Mr. FITZGERALD. I do know a great many men, who asserted that they were citizens of the United States, either through failure of memory or lapse of time or for some other peculiar reason were unable to point out the particular place at which they were naturalized. They have been knocking at the doors of Congress ever since in an effort to obtain a legal standing given so as to enable them to go into the Court of Claims, which they can not do now under the general law.

[Cries of "Vote!"]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and it was so ordered.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6602) providing for the payment of claims growing out of the Army maneuvers at West Point, Ky., in 1903.

Mr. MANN. That bill was ordered laid on the table. That was the bill that passed the House-

Mr. MILLER. Some days ago, as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this bill has never been acted upon.

Mr. MANN. The bill was recommended to be reported back and laid upon the table.

Mr. MILLER. That bill was adopted as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill some days ago, and it has already passed.

The CHAIRMAN. My understanding at that time was that that action was not to be taken, but that the action can be taken at this time on the bill.

Let the bill be passed without prejudice. Mr. MILLER. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH CABLE COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7028) for the relief of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Whereas the Postal Telegraph Cable Company rendered telegraph service to the Post-Office Department from July 1, 1889, to June 30, 1893, during which period the bills of the company were properly rendered, with a protest against the rate fixed by the Postmaster-General attached, and the same was disallowed and returned with the vouchers, owing to the accompanying protest: and

Whereas the rate fixed by the Postmaster-General was subsequently declared illegal by the United States Court of Claims and the protest fied with the bills sustained. Pending the decision of the Court of Claims sufficient time elapsed as to place this claim beyond the jurisdiction of that court: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal office at No. 253 Broadway, New York City, the sum of $2,155.19, for telegraph service rendered to the Post-Office Department from July 1, 1889, to June 30, 1893.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that we take up the Senate bill which is on this Calendar, in place of the House bill.

Senate bill which is on this Calendar, in place of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gen-tleman from Kansas [Mr. Miller] that action be taken upon the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the report on this bill states that a similar claim of the Western Union Telegraph Company

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will suspend. The bill has not been read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, the report says a similar claim of the Western Union Telegraph Company, arising from the same cause, was decided by the Court of Claims November 22, 1897, in favor of the claimant. Pending the decision of the Court of Claims sufficient time elapsed to place this claim beyond the jurisdiction of the court in the decision of the Court of Claims in the case of the Western Union Telegraph Company. The rate of toll upon the claim referred to in the bill now under consideration was adjudged to be fair and reasonable. I do not think the Committee on Claims intended to mislead the House, but I leave it to anyone who heard the reading of this report if he would not think that the Court of Claims had considered and decided a claim against the Government. And yet I find in the report itself a statement that the decision of the Court of Claims was one by agreement between the parties, without any consideration by the court whatever, and a finding by the court upon an agreement between counsel is not entitled to any respect so far as a decision of the law is con-We would suppose from the report of the committee that the Court of Claims, having decided the Western Union case as a matter of law, that the Postal Telegraph Company as a matter of law was entitled to this decision. But the Court of Claims decided nothing as a matter of law. It had referred the case in the Court of Claims to Perry Heath as a referee, and the whole action that was taken in the case was by agreement of counsel upon the facts in that case and entitled to no credit so far as the law points are concerned.

Now, there is nothing in the report in this case to show how they arrive at this amount. This is a proposition to pay for telegrams sent out by the Post-Office Department. There is a long communication in the report, which is lengthy, but not a line from the Post-Office Department to indicate whether this claim ought to be paid or the amount of the claim ought to be paid. Upon what does the gentleman base the claim? Upon the sum claimed by the telegraph company? The Post-Office Department would be able to verify the figures; but the Post-Office Department has not been asked to say what should be the amount, even if we allowed the claim. In this case the Postmaster-General fixed the rate for telegraphing, as he does from year to year. The Western Union and the Postal Telegraph Company claim that the rate was too low. The Western Union Company filed a claim against the Government. The Administration changed. That distinguished gentleman, Perry Heath, who has been connected with various articles in the newspapers of somewhat savory tone, was appointed as referee to decide the case. He came to the conclusion that, upon no findings which were made or shown, the Western Union Company ought to be paid the extra amount. I do not criticise his opinion. There is nothing to indicate what it is based upon. The record in the court was made wholly by agreement of counsel, and not the slightest thing indicated that upon the merits of the case the Western Union had any claim; and there is nothing in this report to show that even if the Western Union had the most valid claim the Postal Telegraph Company has any claim at all.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman during how long a period these claims had accumulated along between the first and the last of these claims?

Mr. GRAHAM. Three or four years.
Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know why they were not adjusted from year to year?

Mr. WALDO. It was agreed between the Post-Office Department and this company that these claims should await the decision of the Western Union case.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And the Post-Office Department refused to pay any more than was agreed to be paid from time to time?

Mr. WALDO. The Government refused to pay except at the minimum rate; but it was left with the Postmaster-General, and he held they were entitled to this additional amount, and the Western Union was paid, but the Postal Telegraph Company never did receive pay.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did the Postmaster-General agree to reserve the question as to whether the Postal Telegraph Company should be paid?

It is claimed that that was done.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not believe that any person rendering service from time to time ought to make greater claims for the service than is right, and then at the end come in and ask additional compensation, when apparently he was satisfied with the compensation fixed at the time that the service was rendered.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My understanding is that this claim is one for additional pay; that the Postmaster-General fixed a rate against which the telegraph companies protested earnestly; that the Postmaster-General acted arbitrarily, and subsequently the same rate was fixed for the Western Union Company. the Western Union Company went into court in an action to determine between the ruinous and confiscatory rate fixed by the Postmaster-General and what they believed to be a reasonable rate, and that the Post-Office Department and the Postal Company agreed that the Postal Company should abide the suit of the Western Union and the Government; and when that company was successful and recovered the difference between the confiscatory rate fixed by the Postmaster-General and the reasonable rate, the Postal Company asks that it be paid for the same kind of service in the same way as the Western Union Company was paid. That is the case as I understand.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Was the Postal Telegraph Company obliged to continue a service which it regarded as confiscatory?

Mr. MILLER. It certainly was. Mr. DRISCOLL. Could it not have discontinued the service if the compensation was not satisfactory?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, from a somewhat hasty reading of the report I observe that Postmaster-General Wanamaker fixed the rate at 1 mill per word, on the ground that the company was charging that rate to large corporations at the same time, and that the company showed the Postmaster-General that that information was not correct. That was one of the points litigated in the Western Union suit. The Western Union recovered for the rate claimed by the Postal company, and the papers show that the Postal company was to receive the same rate, as the result of the litigation, or the arbitration, whatever it was, that the Western Union company received.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York does not mean to say that the rate was really fixed at 1 mill per word?

Mr. PAYNE. That is what I understand from a hasty reading of what Mr. Wanamaker said; but whatever that rate was that Mr. Wanamaker fixed, whether it was 1 mill per word or otherwise, he fixed that rate because he said he understood that that was the rate paid by large corporations to these telegraph companies for similar service. It turned out that his information was incorrect—that they were getting a larger rate from the large corporations.

Mr. MANN. He claimed, up to the end, that he was correct, and that he had fixed a rate above the rate that large corporations paid.

Mr. PAYNE. He claimed that, but the proof was otherwise. Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I did not hear very distinctly the statements of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber in an expression of their views, but after looking at this report of the Committee on Claims for a moment, it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that if the allegations of the report are true-and I do not hesitate to accept them as being the truththat the Court of Claims in the Western Union case have passed on exactly the items claimed in this bill. The Court of Claims decided the charges to be reasonable and just. It seems that the Postmaster-General had occasion to make a contract in 1889 in which he limited the charges of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies for certain public services to 1 mill per word. That was not deemed by these companies to be fair, just, and reasonable. The matter was adjudicated on the part of the Western Union Telegraph Company and the rate decided to be so unreasonably low that the company could not earn a fair profit and make expenses at the rate of 1 mill per word, and the Court of Claims held that the charge that they claimed was reasonable and just, and so allowed it. Now, the Postal Telegraph Company comes up, the Western Union Company having already been paid, with the same claim, the same items, under the same contract, under the same conditions, and if that statement contained in the report is admitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], it seems to me that this is a just and fair claim, and that it ought to be paid, and we ought not to consume further time on it. I was simply taking the statement of the report of the Committee on Claims and nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the House bill of like character (H. R. 7028) is still on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLER. In the House we will ask that that lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the House bill will be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection.

PAY DIRECTOR E. B. ROGERS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The next business was the bill (S. 2262) for the relief of Pay Director E. B. Rogers, United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. B. Rogers, pay director, United States Navy, the sum of $1,000, said sum to be a payment in full for all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the Windsor House, at Yokohama, Japan, on the morning of February S, 1886.

Mr. MANN. A similar House bill has already been favorably acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that it might be well to act on the Senate bill, and lay the House bill on the table, or let the House lay it on the table.

Mr. MILLER. I move to lay this bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the bill S. 2262 was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I move that the House bill

Mr. MILLER. We will ask that in the House. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the House may properly lay the House bill on the table.

M. A. PHELPS AND JOHN W. RENNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12009) for the relief of the heirs at law of M. A. Phelps and the heirs at law of John W. Renner.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $416.20 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated from any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be paid into the registry of the United States district court in bankruptcy for the southern district of Ohio, western division, to be used and disposed of under the direction of the United States district judge in Cincinnati, Ohio, to be applied in the payment of final dividends as follows: In case No. 1100 in bankruptcy in said United States district court in the matter of the involuntary bankruptcy of Benjamin Homans, jr., to the personal representatives of M. A. Phelps, deceased, $315; to the personal representatives of John W. Renner, $101.20; said amounts having been, by misapprehension, paid the assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill proceeds mean the theory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill proceeds upon the theory that certain money was paid under a misapprehension. bill says "said amount having been by misapprehension paid the assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati, Ohio." The fact is that this is an old claim in bankruptcy which some attorney has dug up, as appears by what the clerk of the court says upon the subject. I respectfully suggest that there was no misapprehension whatever in regard to that deposit.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me?
Mr. MANN. I always allow the gentleman anything he wants.

Mr. MILLER. What the gentleman from Illinois states is absolutely true, that it was under no misapprehension. The clerk was compelled under the law to turn the money into the Treasury of the United States, and the only way that it can be got out and paid to the men to whom it rightfully belongs is by this method.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman having admitted that the bill passed his scrutinizing eye with something in it that ought not to be in it, permit me to call his attention to something else in regard to it. Here was a bankruptcy estate, and a time was provided for filing claims and proving up claims. More than thirty years have elapsed since that time has passed, and no effort has ever been made to prove those claims in the bankruptcy case. Now comes the record in the case showing that because an attorney found there was a surplus of funds in the bankrupt estate, and under the law, no one appearing to claim those funds, they were turned into the Treasury of the United States, and the attorney goes up and digs out these claims which were rightfully filed but never have been proved up, and comes before the Congress of the United States and says that these claims ought to be paid out of this surplus fund, thirty years after they had been abandoned, without any proof what-ever that the people ever had valid claims against the bankrunt estate.

I do not believe that the gentleman from Kansas, even with an assurance made on his part, can hardly persuade himself that if he had his way about it he would recommend the payment of such a claim.

In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I de-Mr. MILLER. sire to call the gentleman's attention, for the purpose of information only, to what is stated by the clerk of courts for the purpose of showing that this matter had not been settled for thirty years. He said:

In reply you are respectfully informed that a petition in bankruptcy was filed by Benjamin Homans, jr., No. 1100, September 13, 1869. Said matter was prosecuted from time to time, and deposits were made to meet certain claims that had been adjudicated up to May 24, 1901, when it appearing to the court that a balance in said matter of $834.41 had been in the registry since May 16, 1888, being for more than ten years, the same was deposited with the assistant freasurer at this place to the credit of the United States.

Mr. MANN. I said that the claims were thirty years old. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommenda-

FRANKLIN PATTERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3462) for the relief of Franklin Patterson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Franklin Patterson, of Atlantic Highlands. N. J., the sum of $1,992, said payment when made to be in full satisfaction of the claim of said Franklin Patterson, as an applying creditor, and also as care taker of the property levied upon, and also to be in full satisfaction of all interest, costs, and expenses, under a certain attachment issued on the 4th day of September, A. D., 1891, out of the inferior court of common pleas of the county of Monmouth and State of New Jersey, at the suit of Eusebius W. Arrowsmith, jr., plaintiff, against The Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company, defendant, and levied upon the said Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company plant, on the United States reservation at Sandy Hook, N. J., which plant was afterwards purchased by the United States of America while still subject to the lien of said attachment; said claim, although prior to the title of the United States of America while still unpaid, although the plaintiff has been settled with and said Franklin Patterson and Frederick Parker, the duly appointed auditor in said attachment, having been enjoined and prevented from selling said plant on the ground that the same was a necessary part of the defenses of the city of New York and that there was no appropriation for the payment of said claim, but said plant having been afterwards, to wit, in the year 1902, condemned by the United States of America as no longer useful, and having been sold by the United States of America to a private individual or corporation for the sum of $20,000 or thereabouts, which has been paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the said United States of America having prevented the said Franklin Patterson from making sale of said plant so attached, although the said injunction from selling the same was dissolved by the United States circuit

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 7, erase words "one thousand nine hundred and ninety-two" and substitute therefor the words "one thousand one hundred and forty-eight."

On page 1, line 9, erase word "as" and words "and also as."

On page 1, line 10, erase words "caretaker of the property levied upon and also to be."

On page 1, line 11, erase words "interest, costs, and expenses" and substitute therefor the words "claim against the United States of America."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DELIA B. STUART.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 2811, to which a point of order was made, and I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. The Clerk might read the bill again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the bill was ruled out on a point of order and that it is not now in order to move to lay it aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. I have asked unanimous consent that we may now take it up. The point of order against the bill will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is hardly right as to his par-liamentary proposition. So far as the bill is concerned, I made the point of order that it should come from the Committee on War Claims. I happened to miss a minute which I had in connection with the bill, having revised my own opinion of the bill. I desire, so far as I am concerned, to withdraw the point of order, if I may. Simply to present the matter in an orderly way, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to withdraw the point of order which was made against the bill, and that the bill may be again presented to the committee for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that proceedings taken under the point of order may be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Delia B. Stuart, widow of John Stuart, late a private of Company H, Second United States Artillery, the sum of $150$, this sum being due her as the widow of the said John Stuart as a balance of bounty still unpaid.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

L. L. ARRINGTON AND L. S. ARRINGTON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5666) for the relief of L. L. Arrington and L. S. Arrington.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120.30 to L. L. Arrington and L. S. Arrington, for certain witness fees due by the United States Government to witnesses who were duly subpenned to attend, and did attend, the United States district court for the north-eastern division of the southern district of Georgia and the court of the United States commissioner, George K. Calvin, in the division and district aforesaid, in the year 1894, and who did not, at any time, receive the fees to which they were entitled, but transferred their claim therefor under the aforesaid subpens to L. L. Arrington and L. S. Arrington, who in like manner have never been paid.

With the following committee amendment:

Add the following words:

"Provided. That the appropriation herein made shall not be available until the said L. L. Arrington and L. S. Arrington shall file with the deputy clerk of the United States court for the division and district aforesaid a bond, with good and sufficient security, to be approved by said clerk, in double the amount of the appropriation, conditioned to protect the United States from any claim that may be made for said fees by said witnesses."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I stated to the gentleman in charge of the bill that if this matter had been referred to the Attorney-General I had no objection to the bill, and I can see no reason why the Committee on Claims should report on paying witness fees to somebody who did not earn the fees, without any certificate from the marshal, without any report from the Attorney-General, without any statement from anyone that the fees were earned. If the fees were earned, very well. It seems that in this case some gentleman engaged in trade in the city, as a matter of accommodation, purchased certificates from the witnesses, and I would be very far from wanting to throw any difficulty in the way of their collecting the claims, but we have absolutely nothing but their statements in reference to these fees as to a part of the fees. As to another part of the fees there is a certificate in which the United States marshal certifies that the fees are correct; but we ought to have, it seems to me, a report from either the Attorney-General, as to whether these fees were due from the United States, or a certificate from the proper officials. I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has a certificate to that effect.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to be misunderstood about

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, this matter was referred to the Department of Justice, and Mr. Purdy, Acting Attorney-General, just simply said that he was opposed to it because the transfers were not made under section 3477 of the Revised Statutes; in other words, because they were not collectible under the general law. When he made that objection to the committee I immediately said that we would never have any claim allowed, nor have any Committee on Claims, if we fol-That is what the Committee on Claims is for, to lowed him. pass bills for which provision is not made in the general existing law. There is no doubt in the world about the accuracy of these claims. These people have sworn to them. I do not see why they should not pass.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman from Georgia would not say claims against the Government were just because somebody swears to them. We have a process of ascertaining the facts. We ought to have some process of ascertaining the validity besides the oath of the claimant. As far as the opinion of the Attorney-General is concerned, as cited by the gentleman, I do not care anything about that. I think we ought to know whether the witness fees are due at all or not.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that there is no question about the fact that these parties were entitled to their fees and they were paid their fees by the parties making this claim here.

Mr. HARDWICK. The marshal being sick at the time.
Mr. MILLER. Of course the people could not stay there. They were from a long distance and were compelled to go. These parties paid them their fees as a mere matter of accom-There is a certificate of the commissioner here to the modation. effect that these fees were due these men, and the Government of the United States is not to lose anything by it, as in the bill we make provision that the appropriation shall not be available until these patries shall file with the deputy clerk of the United States court for the division and district aforesaid a bond with good and sufficient security, to be approved by said clerk, in double the amount of the appropriation, conditioned to protect the United States from any claim that may be made for said fees by said witnesses.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2926) for the relief of the heirs of John Smith.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas John Smith, deceased, who died at the Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., on July 30, 1891, at the time of his death had in the custody of the National Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., $1.998.50; and

Whereas the officers of said Home claim that $1,788 of this sum has escheated to the said Home, under section 4 of act of Congress, 1883, but that they have held the full sum of $1,998.50, and have paid no part thereof to his heirs, who are Charles J. Smith. of Jackson, Mich.; Mary E. Carey, of Jackson, Mich., and Kittie Schilling, of Valley City, S. Dak., who are his lawful heirs: and

Whereas the officers of said Home require instructions before they will pay over said sum: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to nay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles J. Smith, Mary E. Carey, and Kittie Schilling, in equal proportions, the sum of $1,998.50, and legal interest thereon since July 30, 1891, in full for said money so deposited with said Home and officers thereof and the use thereof.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 strike out "and legal interest thereon since July 30. 1891;" and in line 7 strike out "and the use thereof."
On page 2, line 2, strike out the word "Charles" and insert the word "Charley;" same line strike out the letter "E.," after the word "Mary." and insert in lieu thereof the words "Ann Smith."
In line 3, after the word "Carey," insert "of 432 Backus street, Jackson, Mich.;" same line strike out the words "Kittle Schilling" and insert the words "Catherine Smith Schillings, of Valley City, N. Dak."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to pay money out of the Treasury of the United States which the report shows is in the hands of the managers of the Soldiers' Home. It seems to be a queer proposition. There was a conflict in reference to the ownership or heirship of property left by a man who died at the Soldiers' Home. The trustees of the Soldiers' Home have the money. They have it in their hands and claim the money. This bill does not propose to take the money out of their hands, it does not propose to pay to these people the money in the hands of the Soldiers' Home, but it proposes to pay an equal amount out of the Treasury of the United States and let the Soldiers' Home retain the money there. Under the law, under certain conditions, if a person dies at a Soldiers' Home and leaves an estate, they become his heirs or the estate escheats to them. There was a long contest over this proposition.

An effort was made to get the people connected with the Soldiers' Home to turn over the money. They claim that they were entitled to the money, and the matter went before the Judge-Advocate-General, and it has been before various officials. The money is now not in the Treasury of the United States, as shown by the report. General Lieber says the money amounted to nineteen hundred and ninety-eight dollars and fifty cents, and it now belongs to the Home. The money is in the hands of the Home. The bill recites a claim against the Home, and thereupon proceeds to provide that there shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated this sum of money. The money in the hands of the Home, which they claim is their own, will still remain in their possession. Under what theory is it that we propose to pay out of the Treasury money which does not belong to the Government of the United States, which is not in the Treasury of the United States, with which we have nothing to do? A dispute between the Soldiers' Home and people who claim to be heirs of the man, and while the fund is in contest, without any exercise of authority over the fund by us at all, we are supposed to pay money out of the Treasury. do not see how the gentleman can justify such a position. reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the committee justifies its position upon the strength of the report of the Judge-Advocate-General, which clearly pointed out the manner in which this money could be taken from the Soldiers' Home and put into the Treasury of the United States, and it is the duty of the Government of the United States to look after this matter and get it into the Treasury, and it is our province to get it into the hands of the people to whom it legitimately belongs, and then let the Government of the United States protect itself as suggested by the Judge-Advocate-General; and then it will get into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Ah, but, Mr. Chairman, the Judge-Advocate-General suggests how the question can be brought and the manner in which the money shall go into the Treasury of the United States. That matter has never been tested in accordance with the suggestion of the Judge-Advocate-General. The money is now in the hands of the managers of the Soldiers' Home. This bill does not seek to try the title to that money;

it does not provide in any way for the control of that money; it leaves that money in their hands, and proposes to appropriate out of the Treasury of the United States a sum equal

COPIAH COUNTY, MISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3518) for the relief of Copiah County, Miss.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the board of supervisors of Copiah County, Miss., the sum of $164.50, in full compensation for costs incurred in defending the suit of The United States against the board of supervisors of Copiah County and The Virginia Bridge and Iron Company in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Mississippi, at May term, 1899, held at Jackson, Miss., said suit being instituted to enjoin the board of supervisors of, Copiah County from constructing a bridge over Pearl River at Rockport, Miss., which injunction was dissolved by the court and costs adjudged against the United States.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill purports to be a bill to pay to a county in Mississippi full compensation for the cost incurred by that county in a suit. The fact is a bridge was built by that county across a river in that county. There came a con-test between the Government of the United States and the county as to the authority of the county to build this bridge. suit was instituted in the United States courts. Before that suit was settled the Congress of the United States passed an act validating the construction of the bridge. There is no question raised but that the suit was properly brought and that the suit was in good faith, that the question properly existed, but Congress afterwards provided that these people should be relieved from any trouble by reason of having built the bridge without authority. Now, the bill purports to be a bill to pay costs. There are no taxed costs in the case. This is not for the payment of costs taxed by the court.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Was the bridge built across a navigable stream?

Mr. MANN. It was for a bridge built across a stream which the Government claimed was navigable. I do not know what the facts may have been about the navigability of it, but the fact that Congress afterwards passed an act authorizing the structure seemed to assume that Congress took the position that it was a navigable stream. Now, even if we were to repay the costs there are no taxed costs in the case. Why, whenever the Government of the United States has a controversy with somebody in a law suit, does it propose to pay, when they settle the case, all of the costs, of the attorneys' fees, and the expenses of the other party

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If this was not a navigable stream, and had not been so declared by the Government, then the Government would have been in error in causing the other party to be put to that expense. I am advised that the Government never declared it a navigable stream.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is a member of the committee that I have the honor to belong to-the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—and is one of its principal lights. gentleman surely would not for a moment contend that the Gov-ernment has to declare that a certain stream is navigable before the Government has authority over the construction of bridges across that stream; because the Government does not undertake to say that certain streams are navigable. That is a question of fact. And if the stream be navigable the Government has the jurisdiction.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The Government has declared a great many streams navigable that have never been navigable, and the Government does it because of certain policies and certain views, and in my opinion the Government has never declared that stream navigable. The bridge was probably put up there by the State.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the bridge was properly put there or not. That is a matter that never was determined. That was in litigation. That was a question that was serious enough to attract the attention of the Government of the United States and litigation ensued. It is not likely that litigation ensued at the suggestion of the United States Government. That litigation ensued at the suggestion of the navigation interests, and pending that suit, before its determination, Congress authorized the structure. That was a compromise between the two litigants. On what theory do we now propose to pay them all the expenses, the attorneys' fees, or anything else that you please to name, not taxed against the Government at all? There were stenographers' fees and various fees taxed as costs-just the fees that a board of supervisors choose to say they have expended or incurred.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside

with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee now to the facts in this case. This was an action commenced by the United States against this county, and it was tried and judgment rendered against the Government, and the Government took an appeal to the court of appeals. Pending that appeal to the court of appeals the Congress of the United States legalized the action of that county in building the bridge. Judgment had been rendered against the Government for the costs in the case. This committee simply asks that the costs of witnesses, $164, be paid.

[Cries of "Vote."]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and it was so ordered.

T. J. H. HARRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6417) for the relief of T. J. H. Harris.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6417) for the relief of T. J. H. Harris.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to T. J. H. Harris, of Union, S. C., $341.55, the same being the balance due said T. J. H. Harris for services rendered the United States in enumerating the population of Union County, S. C., in the year 1860.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DELIA B. STUART.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the Senate bill 2724 that it may be considered now. This is a bill for the relief of Delia B. Stuart.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. MILLER. Three thousand five hundred and twentyeight. I simply want to ask that the Senate bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation, so I can move to substitute it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. The House bill has been favorably acted on. Is this the Senate bill?

Mr. MILLER. I ask now that the Senate bill be favorably acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the Calendar number?
Mr. MILLER. Three thousand five hundred and twenty-eight.
Mr. MANN. What is the number of the report on the Senate

Mr. MILLER. Four thousand and ninety-four.
Mr. PAYNE. It is reported from the Committee on War Claims, I understand. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. BURLESON. I demand the regular order.

JOHN HUDGINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13357) for the relief of John Hudgins.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13357) for the relief of John Hudgins.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Hudgins, of Chillicothe, Mo., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $246.57, being the balance due said John Hudgins as late contractor on mail route No. 10511.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "Chillicothe" and insert the word Mooresville."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN WALLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6104) to reimburse John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for moneys expended in carrying the mails.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6104) to reimburse John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for moneys expended in carrying the mails.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $426.25, to reimburse him for moneys expended in carrying the United States mails and for damages consequent therefrom.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, here is a bill it is claimed that the postmaster incurred in order to have the mail carried when snow upon the ground prevented trains from running. Now, the postmaster incurred bills to the amount of $215. Thereupon, it is proposed to pay him $426.25, although the Department reported against the claim. At the time these claims were made the Post-Office Department turned down the claims. When the first claim was presented, the postmaster was notified that the Government of the United States would not pay these bills. He went on incurring claims, and did not stop when his bills were disallowed. He did not stop when he was notified by the Post-Office Department that he had no authority to incur these bills. He went ahead incurring bills. Then, having incurred bills for $215 and some expenses, it is true, in defending a suit, it is proposed to pay him over $400. It seems to me that that is beyond all reason.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN HUDGINS.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute Senate bill 5446 for the House bill just passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill 5446 be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the Senate bill been reported?

Mr. MILLER. The Senate bill has been reported.
Mr. PAYNE. Then this committee has no authority to do This bill is not in this committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This can be done in the House when this bill comes up for passage. Then the Senate bill can be sub-

I have no objection at all to that being done. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the committee should report the Senate bill here with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I beg to ask the gentleman whether the Senate and House bills are identical?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know that I can state that they are identical in terms, but they carry the same amount.

The amount is identically the same?

Mr. MANN. The amount is identically the same?
Mr. RUCKER. Absolutely so.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to its being considered now; if it had been reported, I would have no objection to it.

Mr. MANN. This is not a substitute. This is simply to report the Senate bill favorably.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is on the Calendar.
Mr. PAYNE. I asked the question if the Senate bill had been reported from the committee, meaning the Committee on Claims. Mr. MILLER. Oh, yes.

Mr. PAYNE. So that it is before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.
The SPEAKER. The Chair states to the gentleman from New York that the Senate bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well, then, I have no objection.
The CHAIRMAN. It is pending before the committee at this time.

Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken; the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommenda-

C. A. BERRY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8365) for the relief of C. A. Berry.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid to C. A. Berry, of Casey, Iowa, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150, being the amount paid by C. A. Berry and J. G. Berry for Ruth C. Berry, as shown by cash receipt No. 21616 of the Des Moines, Iowa, land office, the entry under which said payment was made having been canceled, and the said C. A. Berry being the sole heir and legatee of the said Ruth C. Berry.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. SCHROYER

The next business was the bill (H. R. 16581) for the relief of George W. Schroyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George W. Schroyer, of Lancaster, Pa., the sum of $102.30, being duty paid on certain bulbs which when received were found to be damaged and worthless.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BARCLAY H. WARBURTON.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the point of order raised against the bill (H. R. 3577) for the relief of Barclay H. Warburton be reconsidered, and that the action of the committee in reference to that bill be vacated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the proceedings taken under the point of order raised against the bill H. R. 3577 be vacated.

Mr. GRAHAM. The point was raised by Mr. Mann, and he has decided to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will not insist upon the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. Proceedings under the point of order are therefore vacated.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, the bill has already been read. I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES S. BLOOD.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the point of order raised in regard to the bill (H. R. 2702) for the relief of Charles S. Blood (Calendar No. 2828) be set aside, and that the bill be now considered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Flor-

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Florida if that is the bill he spoke to me about?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; that is the same bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I am sorry to say I shall have to object to that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then it is of no use for me to make this request.

REPORT FROM THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the several bills and amendments to the House for its action.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Campell of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills, and had directed him to report to the House the bills H. R. 6602 and H. R. 7028 with recommendation that they lie on the table; also that they had directed him to report the bills H. R. and 16166 as having been reported from the Committee on War Claims without jurisdiction; also that they had directed him to report sundry other bills, some with and some without amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that they be referred to the Committee on War Claims-H. R. 2702, for the relief of Charles S. Blood, and H. R. 16166, for the relief of A. J., C. C., and T. W. Hodges—without objection, will be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be ordered on all bills and amendments to their final passage.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MILLER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 'on all bills and amendments unobjected to the previous question be ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first

GEORGE GRAY.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution 221.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, shall be filled by the reappointment of George Gray, a citizen of Delaware, whose term expired January 14, 1907.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I do not oppose that, but I would like to ask the gentleman if that is the usual modus operandi?

Mr. DALZELL. This is the customary proceeding; yes. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. For the House to suggest the name of the person?

Mr. DALZELL. By joint resolution; yes. Judge Gray's term expired on the 14th of this month, and the Regents are to meet on next Wednesday for the selection of a successor to Professor Langley, and of course it is desirable that there shall be a full board.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is all right, if that is the way it is usually done.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

FORT WRIGHT MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24048) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Spokane Inland Empire Railroad Company, its successors and assigns.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to locate a right of way, not exceeding 100 feet in width, through the lands of the Fort Wright Military Reservation, if in his judgment it can be done in such a manner as not to interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes by the United States; and when said right of way shall be so located it is hereby granted during the pleasure of Congress to the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraph line thereon: Provided, That the said right of way and the width and location thereof through said lands, the compensation therefor, and the regulations for operating said railroad within the limits of the said military reservation, so as to prevent all damage to public property or for public uses, shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War prior to any entry upon said lands or the commencement of the construction of said works: Provided also, That whenever said right of way shall cease to be used for the purposes aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Reserving the right to object-

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object

The SPEAKER. Whom does the gentleman recognize? Mr. JONES of Washington. The gentleman from Missouri

[Mr. CLARK]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does this take any property of the United States?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It allows the Secretary of War, if in his judgment public interests will not be interfered with, to allow the railroad a right of way through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, simply to be used for railroad purposes. I will read just two or three sentences of the report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much land does this take?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is only a small strip; only 100 feet wide—not to exceed that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How large?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It runs around a ravine, I suppose probably 30 or 40 rods-not more than that, and possibly

Mr. PAYNE. In the act passed heretofore generally the right to revoke is given to the Secretary of War. I see this bill places it in Congress

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is an exact copy of a previous act that we passed with reference to the Vancouver Reservation in our State-the only difference being in the name of the company-and which was framed by Secretary Root.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not know the change was made, but formerly the right was to be in the Secretary of War, and I have known some instances where the Secretary revoked the right and required them to remove their tracks because the land occupied was necessary for the use of the Army. Is this bill approved by the Secretary of War?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is. I will read the letter from the War Department:

The inclosed bill vests authority in the Secretary of War to allow the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad Company to cross the Fort Wright Military Reservation if, in his judgment, it can be done in such a manner as not to interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes by the United States. The inclosed bill vests sufficient authority in the Department to fully protect public interests, including the power to locate the right of way, to fix the compensation therefor, and to prescribe such regulations as it may deem proper for the operation of said railroad within the limits of the military reservation. It is therefore recommended that the committee be advised that the Department favors the passage of the bill.

That is signed by George B. Davis, the Judge-Advocate-General. The bill was framed exactly in line with the previous bill, two or three years ago, that was framed by Secretary Roof.

bill, two or three years ago, that was framed by Secretary Root.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see any reason for departing from the old practice of leaving it with the Secretary of War, and not to come back to Congress to revoke it, if necessary, in the future; but I shall not object to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman another question: Is this piece of land being granted close to any settlement, waterfall, hot springs, minerals, or anything else that

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; not at all; but it will be of great benefit to the Government, as it has to haul its supplies 3 or 4 miles around this ravine This is an electric railroad and will connect the reservation with the city of Spokane.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How close is it to Spokane?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The houses in town run pretty ear to the river. This is on the other side of the river. There near to the river. is a ravine of 150 or 200 feet between that and the city, and they have to go 3 or 4 miles around. So, as a matter of fact, the building of this road will be of very great benefit to the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Will it stop anybody else from building a railroad along that ravine?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any map showing the country where this ravine is?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The map was submitted to the Secretary of War.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have this matter postponed until I can look over the bill more carefully.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The committee's report is unani-No other road could run through there without the consent of Congress,

Mr. MADDEN. But no other road could go through there with the consent of Congress if this road occupies all the space there is

Mr. JONES of Washington. Another road could run through This only gives them 100 feet. there.

Mr. MADDEN. But if you go along a mountain side

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is not a mountain. There is a slope of three or four hundred feet. It is plenty wide enough for another railroad, if there was one to be built there.

Mr. MADDEN. How far does the valley run? Mr. JONES of Washington. It runs down to the river's edge. Mr. MADDEN. How much of a level place is there at the

Mr. JONES of Washington. This does not go on to any of the level space. This does not go to the bottom at all.

the level space.

Mr. MADDEN. Where does it go?
Mr. JONES of Washington. It goes along the margin of the hill about 50 feet below the top of the plateau. They would not let it go to the bottom, as it would injure the fort.
Mr. MADDEN. How high is the plateau?

Mr. JONES of Washington. About 150 or 200 feet perpendicularly.

Mr. MADDEN. How far is the road away from the river? Mr. JONES of Washington. Well the slope I suppose would be 300 or 400 feet, and it is 50 feet from the top, leaving it about 200 or 250 feet from the bottom.

Mr. MADDEN. Would that leave room for another road to run between that and the river if there was one projected?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not suppose there would be any run; but if so, there will be plenty of room without interfering with that.

I will ask the gentleman if I understand Mr. OLMSTED.

that the Government is to lay out this road?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Secretary of War is to determine whether the road can be laid out so as not to injure the Government property. The expense is to be borne by the company.

Mr. OLMSTED. And the expense of all that is to be borne by the railroad company?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Jones of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS FLINT RIVER.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24275) permitting the building of a dam across the Flint River at Porter Shoals. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Albany Power and Manufacturing Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Georgia, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a dam across the Flint River at a point in Dougherty County, Ga., about one-fourth mile above the Georgia Northern Railway bridge across said river, upon or in the vicinity of Porter Shoals, and all works incident thereto in the utilization of the power thereby developed, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to amend or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object—Mr. MANN. This bill is in the regular form.

Mr. PAYNE. I know it is, but I want to inquire whether the Government has done anything toward the improvement of the navigation of this river in the locality mentioned in this bill?

Mr. GRIGGS. Not at this point. Mr. PAYNE. I remember we passed a bill some time ago where they had done so and we got into trouble about it.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that even if they had, this matter is left under the control of the War Department under the general dam bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Griggs, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUBPORT OF BELLINGHAM, WASH.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23114) extending to the subport of Bellingham, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the subport of Bellingham, in the State of Washington.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is this bill reported from the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Unanimously reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time;

and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. Humphrey of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PHELPS COUNTY, MO.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24104) transferring Phelps County to the eastern division of the eastern judicial district of Missouri.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Phelps, in the State of Missouri, be detached from the western judicial district and attached to the eastern judicial district of the State of Missouri: Provided, That the courts of the western district shall retain and exercise jurisdiction over all causes and proceedings, civil and criminal, arising in or coming from said county and begun at the date of the taking effect of this act, and of all criminal offenses committed in said county prior to the date this act goes into effect, the prosecution of which has not been begun, as completely as if this act were not passed.

Sec. 2. That all attorneys at law in said county of Phelps who have been admitted to practice and enrolled in the western judicial district be, and hereby are, admitted to practice in and sign the roll of attorneys in the eastern judicial district of said State of Missouri.

Sec. 3. That this act shall take effect on and from the date of its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. MURPHY. There is an amendment.

The Clerk reported the following committee amendment:

Strike out sections 2 and 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LICENSED OFFICERS OF VESSELS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6898) concerning licensed officers of vessels

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4438 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4438. The boards of local inspectors shall license and classify the masters, chief mates, and second and third mates, if in charge of a watch, engineers, and pilots of all steam vessels, and the masters of sail vessels of over 700 gross tons, and all other vessels of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire. It shall be unlawful to employ any person, or for any person to serve, as a master, chief mate, engineer in charge of a watch, or pilot of any steamer or as master of any sail vessel of over 700 gross tons, or of any other vessel of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire, who is not licensed by the inspectors; and anyone violating this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this requires licenses for yachts and other pleasure crafts?

Mr. GROSVENOR, It has nothing to do with that subject. It only relates to steam vessels, to sailing vessels of over 700 gross tons, and other vessels of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire. The bill unanimously passed both branches of Congress in the last session. It went to the President, but in the hurry of adjournment was not signed, by oversight. It has now passed the Senate unanimously and is unanimously reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state what change the bill makes in the law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It adds to the power of the local inspecting boards to make second mates capable of taking a place on watch; nothing more than that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Grosvenor, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CALUMET RIVER, INDIANA.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23039) to au-thorize the board of commissioners of Lake County, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Calumet River in the State of Indiana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

He detail teau the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of commissioners of Lake County, Ind., be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a public bridge and approaches thereto across the Calumet River at the intersection of Columbia avenue, a public street in the city of Hammond, in the State of Indiana, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Crumpacker, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OBSOLETE CANNON FOR UNIVERSITY OF IDAHO.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (8, 4423) providing for the donation of obsolete cannon with their carriages and equipments to the University of Idaho.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to turn over to the University of Idaho, at Moscow, Idaho, two obsolete cannon, with their carriages and equipments, now in possession of said University of Idaho, to become the property of the said university for ornamentation of the grounds of the said university.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to deliver to the University of Idaho, at Moscow, Idaho, two obsolete cannon, with their carriages and equipments, now in possession of said University of Idaho, to become the property of the said university for ornamentation of the grounds of the said university: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of said cannon."

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR PRESTON, IOWA.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 195, authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two condemned cannon to the mayor of the town of Preston, Iowa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to deliver to the mayor of the town of Preston, Jackson County, Iowa, if the same can be done without detriment to the public service, two bronze or brass condemned cannon now at the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., the same to be used and mounted in the public park in said town of Preston: Provided, That the Government shall be at no expense in connection with this gift.

The following amendment recommended by the committee was

"and to be taken care of by said city and to be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of the cannon."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure that I caught the reading of the amendment correctly. Does the bill provide for an outright gift or merely that the cannon shall be loaned? Mr. DAWSON. The bill provides for the loan of the cannon and not a gift. The amendment was to meet the regular form of your committee.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not the policy of the Government to give away brass or bronze cannon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Dawson, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FRANCISCO KREBS.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5531) for the relief of Francisco Krebs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Francisco Krebs be, and he is hereby, confirmed in his title to a tract of land known as Round Island, in the State of Mississippi, situated in sections 33 and 34, township 8 south, range 6 west, and sections 3 and 4, township 9 south, range 6 west, granted by the Spanish governor, Grimarest, to Francisco Krebs on December 13, 1783, and recorded in translated records, book No. 2, page 51, in the probate court at Mobile, Ala.: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall affect the claim or claims of any other person or persons to the said land, or any part thereof, derived from the United States or any source whatever: Provided further, That the site comprising 400 feet square upon which the light-house is now situated shall be excepted from this confirmation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if this is on the Private Calendar?

Mr. BOWERS. It is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that it is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

EXCEPTING LANDS FROM FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23927) excepting certain lands in Pennington County, S. Dak., from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it exacted, etc., That the following described townships in the Black Hills Forest Reserve, in Pennington County, S. Dak., to wit: Townships 1 north, 1 east; 2 north, 1 east; 1 north, 2 east; 2 north, 2 east; 1 south, 1 east; 2 south, 1 east; 1 south, 2 east; and 2 south, 2 east, Black Hills meridian, are hereby excepted from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves," approved June 11, 1906. The lands within the said townships to remain subject to all other provisions of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of this bill. I understand it is making an exception of something insisted upon by Congress a short time ago.

Mr. MARTIN. It is not to make an exception of anything insisted upon by Congress at any time. The bill is this: In June, 1906, Congress passed an act permitting settlement upon agricultural lands in forest reserves in the country. At that time I asked that two counties in the Black Hill Forest Reservation in South Dakota, in one of which I live, the counties of Lawrence and Pennington, be excepted from the general opera-tion of the act so far as it would permit the making of new settlements, but giving settlers up to that time an opportunity to complete their titles. I asked this for the purpose of careful investigation as to whether there were any further agricultural lands that could properly be settled upon. That investigation shows that there are two tiers of townships on the west side of Pennington County, agricultural in their character, and containing a considerable amount of land that would make good homes for new settlers. The purpose is to permit these two townships to be settled upon by new settlers the same as was adopted by Congress at the last session to be the general policy pertaining to agricultural lands in forest reserves

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that this is in his home county?

Mr. MARTIN. It adjoins the county in which I live.
Mr. MANN. The home county in which the gentleman lives is not covered by this provision, but still remains excepted from the general statute?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; and the reason of that— Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no doubt there is a good reason. want simply to ask another question. I understood when the exception was made from the general statute when the act was passed that it was made because there was some conflict up there between people who wanted to settle on the lands for agricultural purposes and the miners who wished to have either the use of the timber on the land or to have the use of the mines under the land at that time, and that that was the reason the exception was made. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he has gone all over that subject and is now satisfied that the agricultural interests ought to be taken care of, and also, if they be, whether there will be any injury to the mining in-

Mr. MARTIN. I have been satisfied all the time that all of the lands within the forest reserves that are agricultural in character and not mineral should be opened to agricultural settlement, in order that homesteaders may have additional opportunity to make homes, and, as a rule, the agricultural lands in forest reserves are the best unappropriated public lands at the present time for home building, because within the forest reserves there are large areas of land well watered because of their proximity to growing vegetation. The reason I suggested the exception of those two counties out of the general policy was that the county in which I live is largely a gold-mining Some gold mines have been prospected and found in county. Pennington County, the county to the south, and as I desired also the further opportunity to look into the question as to whether there was any agricultural land in the county that could be taken; and the result of that inquiry is that I am entirely satisfied that these two west tiers of townships in Pennington County are agricultural in character, and that many good homes could be made there without any detriment to any public interest. I therefore have now simply asked the exception of those townships from the reservation which was made at my request, and the making of those townships to apply to the general law which we passed at the last session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman if this is rather in the nature of a private bill.

Mr. MARTIN. It is not in any sense.
Mr. WILLIAMS. It is to except two certain townships from the operation of the general law, is it not?

Mr. MARTIN. No, sir; it is to restore two certain townships to the operation of the general law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand there is a general law setting aside a certain territory for forest reserves.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes. Mr. WILLIAMS. And this is to except these two townships that were included in that law from its operation.

Mr. MARTIN. No; these two townships were not included in the law, and this is to permit them to be included in the law. Mr. WILLIAMS. This is to put them in the forest reserves?

Mr. MARTIN. They are within the forest reserves, but that general law permitted agricultural settlement within two forest reserves; but these two townships were excepted at that time from the general law, and this makes them subject to the gen-

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, but you got a bill through putting certain territory in a forest reserve, and that included these two townships, did it not?

Mr. MARTIN. No; the gentleman misunderstands the situation. The forest reserves were already established, and that bill of June 11, 1906, provided generally for all of the forest reserves of the United States that agricultural settlement might be made within those reserves wherever there were agricultural lands suitable for that purpose. Two counties in this particular reservation, the Black Hills Forest Reserve, were excepted at that time from the operation of that statute. This bill at this time extends the operation of that general law to these two tiers of townships in one of those counties.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Martin, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REGULATING INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of House Report No. 2337, made in the Fifty-eighth Congress. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for a reprint of a report, which the Clerk will

Mr. CLAYTON. It relates to interstate traffic in alcoholic

The Clerk read as follows: .

Report No. 2337.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in any event the form of the gentleman's request is not correct. I have no objection if he ask unanimous consent that the report be printed as a document of the Fifty-ninth Congress

Mr. CLAYTON. I have no objection to that modification of the request

Mr. MANN. We can not reprint a report of the Fifty-eighth

Mr. CLAYTON. I say I have no objection to a modification of the request as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama modifies his request and asks that the report be printed as a document.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether this is a report on one of the bills on which a great many hearings were had?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir; it was on what was known in the Fifty-eighth Congress as the "Hepburn-Dolliver bill."

Mr. SHERLEY. As I recall, there were hearings had and printed by order of the committee, and they have long since been exhausted, which contained the arguments against the bill as well as for it, and I would like for the gentleman to couple with his request a reprint of those, as I have many requests for them.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to do that, but I am acting under direction of the committee, and the direction of the committee was not as comprehensive as the gentleman from Kentucky indicates.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I make the request, and coupled with the request made by the gentleman from Alabama, I ask that unanimous consent be given that there be printed with the report the special hearings which were had on the subject-matter

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 23383.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23383) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved June 25, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That the said city of St. Louis shall have authority to construct said bridge mentioned in said act across the Mississippi River, under and subject to the limitations and restrictions mentioned in said act, if the actual construction of the bridge therein authorized shall be commenced within one year from the approval of this act and completed within three years from same date.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 3 strike out the word "said."
In line 4, before the word "bridge," strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the."
In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "said act across the Mississippi River" and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"The act entitled 'An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, approved June 25, 1906."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Bartholdt, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House proceed now to consider bills on the Private Calendar, such as were in order yesterday; that in considering these bills they be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole; that the title of the bill be read, and those that are not objected to be acted upon immediately, and this order include only those to which there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask whether that means the House is to go over the bills which were gone over yesterday in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not understand the gentleman's suggestion. Mr. MANN. The gentleman's request is to take up bills on the Private Calendar. A number of them were objected to yesterday in the Committee of the Whole. Does the gentleman propose to have those gone over again?

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state the request so the House may understand it. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to ask unanimous consent that bills now on the Private Calendar, which were in order yesterday, shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House; that is, bills to which there is no objection. The Chair will state it again. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar to which there is no

Mr. WILLIAMS. Shall be in order to-day as of yesterday? The SPEAKER. That the chairman of the committee report said bills to the House as in Committee of the Whole, and they shall be in order for consideration. In other words, as the Chair understands the proposition of the gentleman from New York, it enables the House in the House as in Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar which were in order yesterday to which there is no objection by any Member in the House. Is that correct?

Mr. PAYNE. That is correct. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] in answer to his suggestion that there were some bills yesterday that were objected to on their merits and some were objected to when there was no merit in the objection, except perhaps a little—I will not say what. There was no merit in the objection.

Mr. MANN. Whatever objections I made yesterday were based upon merit. I would not charge any Member of the House as being so discourteous as to object without reason.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the only way to get along with it is to go over them in the regular order. I would say this: That I objected to two myself, and I objected because I did not believe in the merits of the bill and I should renew the objection to those bills to-day, but my object was to take the unobjected bills on the Private Calendar that were in order yesterday and get through with them to-day and pass them through the House.

Mr. MANN. If the request is to take up bills on the Private Calendar, and where no objection is made to consider those bills to the final passage, I shall make no objection; that is, if it does not include the taking of the time of the House on the bills which are objected to.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will modify it to satisfy the gentleman from Illinois, not to include any bill objected to in the Committee of the Whole yesterday.

Mr. MANN, I do not mean that. I have not any objection to taking all the bills up.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman no objection to the statement I made in the first place?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to it.
Mr. PAYNE. Very well, I will not modify it.
Mr. JOHNSON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Is it contemplated that when we get through with the Calendar, calling up bills that there is no objection to, that we will go back to the beginning?

Mr. PAYNE. It does not, because there is evidently not time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It will take no new bills from the Calendar?

Mr. PAYNE. No.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shackie-

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. We propose to commence at the beginning of the Private Calendar and take them in their order?

Mr. PAYNE. That was my proposition; yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the arrangement that is proposed. I insist on taking the Private Calendar in its order. I will say to the gentleman that under the method judgment upon all of these bills. He can say that certain bills shall pass and certain bills shall not.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman will see that it means the same thing as unanimous consent. That is all there is of it, and my object is to get unanimous consent on each one of these bills or an objection from any Member of the House. A great deal of legislation is passed in this way, and the gentleman ought not, if he is interested in any bill, throw any stumbling block in the way of this order.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The objection I have to it is this, that the gentleman confesses now that on yesterday these bills were objected to without any reason in the world. They sit here and impede legislation.

Mr. PAYNE. We go over those same bills again, and I trust the gentleman will not object to them to-day for the reason that they did yesterday.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Some other Member will take the same method of objecting to those bills. Let us take the Calendar in its order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I submit the proposition.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection now, but-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will make his objection now or not at all.

The SPEAKER. The question is that the bills in order shall be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House, by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NEW YORK CUSTOMS INSPECTORS.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 17957) for the relief of certain customs inspectors of the port of New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, that bill has been provided for in the deficiency bill. I object to it, and I ask now that the bill be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves to lay the bill on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELI PETTIJOHN.

The next business reported from the Private Calendar was H. Res. 406, resolution (in lieu of H. R. 10553) referring to Court of Claims the claim of Eli Pettijohn. Mr. MANN. On yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order upon that bill, and it was to be referred to the Committee on War Claims. It ought to have been reported to the House to go to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it was not in fact reported to the House; but the point of order can be renewed now if the gentleman sees proper.

Mr. MANN. I object. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17431) granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma section No. 36, in township No. 9 north of range No. 3 west of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that bill and the next bill—I do not see the gentleman from Oklahoma here—ought to refer to the new State of Oklahoma; and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to this and the next bill. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COMPAÑÍA DE LOS FERROCARRILES DE PUERTO RICO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18134) for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Bico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. This is one of the bills I objected to for reasons.

DAVISON CHEMICAL COMPANY, BALTIMORE, MD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8670) for the relief of the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md.

Mr. MANN. I make the same objection to that bill.

THOMAS P. MORGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12881) to pay Thomas P. Morgan amount found due to him by Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. I make the same objection.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1808) for the relief of J. J. L. Peel.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1808) for the relief of J. J. L. Peel.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to J. J. L. Peel, of Spokane, Wash., the sum of $1,041.76, being the amount advanced by him for necessary clerk hire and expenses while acting as postmaster at Spokane, Wash.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and

DEPOSIT SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, OF MOBILE, ALA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4190) for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, Ala.

Mr. MANN. I make objection to that bill.

ARTHUR A. UNDERWOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4350) for the relief of Arthur A. Underwood.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 4350) for the relief of Arthur A. Underwood.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur A. Underwood, for expenses incurred en route to and from the national rifle competition, which was held at Sea Girt, N. J., August 24 to September 9, 1905, and while in attendance there, $277.48.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the allotment of the State of Wyoming under section 1661 of the Revised Statutes."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES D. SOUTHERLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9131) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles D. Southerlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9131) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles D. Southerlin.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the legal representatives of Charles D. Southerlin, of Greenville, S. C., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $537.52, being for services rendered the United States in carrying the mails in 1860 and

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that I have objected to these bills heretofore, but the House voted almost unanimously in favor of the passage of a bill of that character yesterday, and I do not propose to object to them.

Mr. MANN. I wish to add that I shall not object to any bill along the line of those passed yesterday by the House.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

W. A. M'LEAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4948) for the relief of W. A. McLean.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 4948) for the relief of W. A. McLean. .

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to W. A. McLean, of Wilkesboro, N. C., the sum of $117.69, for money due him under a judgment of the United States court for the western district of North Carolina, rendered at November term, 1904, at Wilkesboro, N. C.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILBURN WAGON COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5195) for the relief of the Milburn Wagon Company, of Toledo, Ohio.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5195) for the relief of the Milburn Wagon Company, of Toledo, Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Milburn Wagon Company, of Toledo. Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,150, the said sum being the balance of an amount justly due said company for the construction and delivery of 100 Army wagon beds, under a contract for the same entered into between said company and the Quartermaster-General of the Army during the year 1893.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as

In line 11 strike out the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-three" and insert the words "nineteen hundred and three."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 319) to reimburse Abram Johnson, formerly postmaster at Mount Pleasant, Utah.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 319) to reimburse Abram Johnson, formerly postmaster at Mount Pleasant, Utah.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the reimbursement of Abram Johnson, formerly postmaster at Mount Pleasant, in the State of Utah, for amount expended by him for rent, light, and fuel, from January 1 to July 1, 1901, $73.50.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. PETTIT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9132) for the relief of the legal representatives of Benjamin F. Pettit.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9132) for the relief of the legal representatives of Benjamin F. Pettit,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the legal representatives of Benjamin F. Petitit, of Spartanburg, S. C., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $146.97, being for services rendered the United States in carrying the mails in 1860 and

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. POTTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3574) for the relief of John H. Potter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that bill.

HENRY O. BASSETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3268) for the relief of Henry O. Bassett, heir of Henry Opeman Bassett, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3268) for the relief of Henry O. Bassett, heir of Henry Opeman Bassett, deceased.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry O. Bassett, sole surviving heir of Henry Opeman Bassett, deceased, the sum of $142.59.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and

MARY V. SHAW.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7548) for the relief of Mary V. Shaw.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary V. Shaw, widow of Hon. W. Irvin Shaw, late consul-general to Singapore, Straits Settlements, India, the sum of $3,000, a sum representing one year's salary, and an allowance of $300 additional to defray the cost of the funeral expenses of the said Hon. W. Irvin Shaw, who died while in the service.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Claims were read:

In line 7 strike out the words "three thousand" and insert the words "one thousand five hundred."

In line 8 strike out the words "one year's" and insert the words "six months'."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill

Mr. GRAHAM. I can state the facts about the bill.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not want to ask you. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Miller] whether it is the policy of the House to pay six months' salary to the widow of a consul who dies in the service-whether that is the established policy?

Mr. MILLER. That is not the established policy, and this is an exceptional case, and the only case of the kind that has been reported by the Committee on Claims, and probably the only case of the kind that will be reported.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was one exception, a bill of similar character, that passed in the last Congress.

Mr. MILLER. This is the only one that I remember the Committee on Claims having before it. The statement of the gentleman no doubt is correct; but that is not the policy of the committee, and there is a determination on the part of a good many members of the committee not to go any further in this direction.

Mr. MANN. This is a matter which requires consideration. I have read the facts in this case, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

C. W. STURTEVANT ET AL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 639) for the relief of C. W. Sturtevant, Rolla Brown, Alice Brown, M. L. Kelly, Robert G. Duffy, Fread Gehring, T. H. Ross, and L. C. Partee,

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. W. Sturtevant, $213.50; to Rolla Brown, $17.25; to Alice Brown, $72.75; to M. L. Kelly, $44; to Robert G. Duffy, $6.75; to Fread Gehring, $9.65; to T. H. Ross, $246; to L. C. Partee, $45.50, as a reimbursement to the aforesaid Sturtevant, Rolla Brown, Alice Brown, Kelly, Duffy, Gehring, Ross, and Partee for the loss of personal property sustained by them while in the service of the United States and acting as the crew of the aforesaid steamer Wynoka, belonging to the Mississippi River Commission, the aforesaid steamer having been destroyed by fire on the night of October 15, 1901, through no negligence or fault of the above-named employees. The above-named appropriation shall be in full for all claims against the United States Government.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the consid-

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I desire to state that I opposed it in the committee, and I shall vote against it now.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. BURKS.

The next business was the bill (S. 1344) for the relief of John M. Burks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John M. Burks, of Lincoln, Nebr., the sum of $50, for fine unlawfully collected from him; and to make said payment there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $50.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE T. PETTENGILL.

The next business was the bill (S. 1933) for the relief of George T. Pettengill, lieutenant, United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers in settling and adjusting the accounts of George T. Pettengill, lieutenant, United States Navy, are hereby directed to credit said George T. Pettengill with the sum of $748$, which amount of Government funds he intrusted to George Head, a mail orderly on the U. S. S. Newark, while that vessel was at Kure, Japan, August 7, 1900, for the purpose of sending an official telegram for Admiral Kempff, United States Navy, senior squadron commander, Asiatic Squadron, with which money the orderly absconded.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time and passed read the third time, and passed.

F. S. BOWKER.

The next business was the joint resolution H. Res. 427; which was read, as follows:

Was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 15810) entitled "A bill for the relief of F. S. Bowker, managing owner of the schooner William H. Davenport and agent for the owners of said schooner and for the owners of the cargo of lumber on board said schooner on October 2, 1899," now pending in the House of Representatives, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the tringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the House of Representatives their findings of fact and law.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Claims, was read:

In line 8 strike out all after the word "claims" and insert in lieu thereof "with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask why the committee struck out the provision referring the case to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts and law and inserting instead thereof jurisdiction to render a judgment? I should have no objection to the original resolution, and if that is allowed to go through as originally drawn without the amendment, I will not object to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As far as I am concerned—and I drew the original resolution to which the committee made the amendment-I should be satisfied to have it disagreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the resolution be passed without the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I will accept that on the part of the committee, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to. The resolution was agreed to.

NYE & SCHNEIDER COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10595) for the relief of Nye & Schneider Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $61.13 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purpose of paying to Nye & Schneider Company, of Fremont, Nebr., the said sum of money, being an unpaid balance on bill rendered for fuel furnished the United States Government by that company during the years 1893 and 1894 for the purpose of heating the post-office building at Hastings, Nebr., which said amount has remained unpaid by reason of the appropriation for such purpose having been exhausted.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall have to object to Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what his reasons are for objecting to the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Because postmasters are allowed so much for rent, for heat, and fuel and light throughout the country. have often had cases where the postmaster said that was not sufficient, and he had to pay part of it out of his salary. I do not know why we should make an exception in this case. If we do we shall have thousands of such cases, and I think it is a bad precedent to establish.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, the facts in this case are as follows: The Nye & Schneider Company furnished coal which was necessary to heat the post-office building in Hastings, Nebr. The weather was such that they had to have the coal. Postmasters-General have recommended the passage of this bill. It has once passed the Senate, and it is full of merit. It is ten or twelve years old, and the people have waited all this time for their money, and there is no reason why it should not have been paid long ago.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I see in the report of the Postmaster-General that he says the bill would have been paid if there had been an appropriation. I withdraw the objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF THE MITSUI BUSSAN KAISHA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9289) for the relief of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $600 be, and is hereby, appropriated to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha for damages to their steamer Hikosan Maru, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States Quartermaster's Department on July 31, 1902; and that the further sum of $948.27 be, and is hereby, appropriated to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha for damages to their chartered steamer Shirley, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States Quartermaster's Department in Manila Bay on March 23, 1902, making altogether the sum of $1.548.27.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman whether the amount appropriated in the bill contains the amount for demurrage which was rejected by the War Department? I am unable to figure it out myself.

Mr. MILLER. I did not prepare the report and I have not the report with me.

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to submit to the gentleman a report in the case. This was damage caused by two collisions, and the damage was allowed by the War Department, but the claim for demurrage was rejected. I can not tell whether the claim for demurrage is included in the total amount here or

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that think it is not, but I am not sure about it.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the bill laid aside temporarily. The bill was laid aside without prejudice.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT. The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13605) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The next business on the litivate Calendar was the only (11. K.) 13605) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, ctc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the claims arising under the Navy Department hereinafter stated, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final release and discharge of the respective claims, namely:

To reimburse Passed Asst. Paymaster Henry de F. Mel the amount paid by him for an ash lighter tost while in the service of the Government of the Common texpended by him in assisting a supposed deserter from the Navy to return to the United States for the purpose of surrendering to the naval authorities, $82.63.

To pay for services rendered and for expenses incurred by Dowdall, Hanson & McNeill, of Nanghal, China, in connection with proceedings against the British us Rocket, $2,915.45.

JOSE RAMOS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 19641) for the relief of Jose Ramos.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

WILLIAM B. TODD.

The next business was the bill (S. 2138) for the relief of the estate of William B. Todd, deceased.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that is a bill reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is it not in order for that committee to call it up on District day?

The SPEAKER. I think it will depend upon the nature of the

Mr. MANN. I think, under the rule, they can call up any bill they have reported on District day regardless of what Calendar it is on. They frequently do call up Private Calendar bills. save time, I object.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside without prejudice.

L. S. WATSON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (S. 2964) for the relief of the L. S. Watson Manufacturing Company, of Leicester, Mass.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be allowed and paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the L. S. Watsen Manufacturing Company, of Leicester, Mass., the sum of $423.17, being the amount of the fines paid by them on the 5th and 24th of August, 1903, by reason of an undervaluation of certain heddles imported by them, the said undervaluation being due to mistake for which they were not in fault, they having proceeded in the matter under the direction of an official in the Treasury Department, to whom they communicated all the facts, and they having voluntarily and of their own accord brought the fact of the undervaluation to the knowledge of the Department officials and made good the amount of said undervaluation.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

HANS PETER GUTTORMSEN.

The next business was the House resolution 561.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will not the gentleman reserve his objection for a time?

Mr. MANN. I shall reserve it.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved. That the bill (H. R. 13870) entitled "A bill for the relief of Hans Peter Guttormsen," now pending in the House of Representatives, together with all the accompanying papers be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims to find the facts and find and determine—

First. Whether the United States was guilty of negligence; Second. Whether the claimant, Hans Peter Guttormsen, was guilty of contributory negligence;

Third. Whether upon the facts found, the United States, if a private corporation, would be liable to the claimant for damages by reason of his injuries.

his injuries.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that this resolution amounts to this: It is a reference back of a decision already rendered by the Court of Claims, asking that court to explain an ambiguity in its decision. The Committee on Claims was unable to tell whether the Court of Claims intended by its findings of fact to hold that the claimant was guilty of contributory negligence, and therefore has sent the claim back simply to make a new decision on the facts they have already found. This man has already run once the gantlet of this House. The claim has already been referred to the Court of Claims, the Court of Claims has made its findings of fact, and because of an ambiguity in that decision the Committee on Claims seeks to have that ambiguity explained. That is all. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that I don't know that I am particular about insisting on the objection. I have no doubt that this case will result in the payment to this man of $5,000, if the resolution goes through. I think there are facts in it already before the House sufficient to act upon. It is one of those cases where, when it is presented to Congress, if the vote is taken it is invariably paid, but the Government constantly takes the position that unless a man is lucky enough to have a Representative in Congress who appears before the committee and presents his particular claim it will not pay damages to him for personal injuries. I do not think it is a fair position for the Government to take. I would just as soon vote to pay this man $5,000 now as to vote to postpone it for two or three years and pay it to him at the end of that time, because that is what it amounts to, whatever the Court of Claims finds.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection?

I will not make the objection. Mr. MANN.

Danner & Co., the sum of $720, the amount paid by them for a wholesale dealer's license for the sale of oleomargarine, and the penalty thereon.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "seven hundred and twenty" and in-rt in lieu thereof the words "two hundred and forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REFUND TO TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10103) to refund to the Territory of Hawaii the amount expended in maintaining light-house service on its coasts from the time of the organization of the Territory until said lighthouse service was taken over by the Federal Government. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for that to go over.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

OSCAR FULGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19493) to reimburse Oscar Fulgham, ex-sheriff of Madison County, Ala., for judgment and costs rendered against him when acting in the service of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Cierk read as ionows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $434.55 to Oscar Fulgham, ex-sheriff of Madison County, Ala., to reimburse him for judgment and costs rendered against him by the State courts, resulting from his action while he was sheriff of Madison County, Ala., in recovering three mules, at the request of General Coppinger, who was in the command of the Federal troops stationed at Huntsville, Ala., during the winter of 1898 and 1899, which were stolen from the corral at the camp of the troops stationed at Huntsville, Ala., during the winter of 1898 and 1899.

A. L. FLACK & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5196) to refund to A. L. Flack & Co., of Tiffin, Ohio, money paid for internal-revenue stamps lost in the mails.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, here is a case where the Government is required to insure the delivery of valuable articles through the mails. That is what this bill amounts to, and I do not think it ought to pass, and therefore I will object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

HAMILTON D. SOUTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1078) for the relief of Hamilton D. South, second lieutenant, United States Marine Corps.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Hamilton D. South, second lieutenant, United States Marine Corps, the sum of $1,200, said sum to be a payment in full for all losses of personal property incurred by him by reason of the destruction by fire of the marine barracks at Pensacola Navy-Yard on the 21st day of December, 1901.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "one thousand two hundred dollars" and insert "one thousand one hundred and fifty-seven dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN T. HAYWARD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 12686) for the relief of Edwin T. Hayward, executor of Columbus F. Hayward, and the administrator of Charlotte G. Hayward.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Edwin T. Hayward, executor of the last will and testament of Columbus F. Hayward, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $714, and to Edwin T. Hayward, administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, of Charlotte G. Hayward, deceased, the sum of $939, the said sums being in payment of damages to land belonging to said Columbus F. Hayward and Charlotte G. Hayward, respectively, which was washed away and overflowed by reason of the extension of end of Dam No. 4 in the Muskingum River in the month of July, 1890: Provided, however, That before payment of said sums of money, or either of them, Edwin T. Hayward, as executor as aforesaid, and as such administrator, shall convey or cause to be conveyed to the United States, by deed duly acknowledged for record, the two parcels of land so damaged, containing together 4.51 acres, according by metes and bounds to be furnished by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman. I do not propose to object to the consideration of the bill, because it is a meritorious proposition; but this is really for the purchase of land. It purports to be for the payment of damages, and then provides for the purchase of all the land which is damaged. Would not the bill be in better form if the Department were authorized to purchase the land at a price not to exceed the amount named, so that the Department has some discretion as to the value to be paid or as to the amount of damages in dealing with the people?

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that I have a report of General Mackenzie here, and it seems that for similar land the Government did pay $300 under the finding of the War Department, and that this damage is figured at the rate of $150 an acre instead of $300.

Mr. MANN. This damage is figured at far higher than $300 an acre. There are 4½ acres, and the amount appropriated is an acre. There are 4½ acres, and the amount appropriated is $714 plus $931—$1,600 and more.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, the amount the gentleman reads is the value that is placed upon the land. The value of the land was fixed at about $300 an acre, or a little over, and there were 4.51 acres; And he was allowed $50 in addition to the walue that was placed upon it.

Mr. MANN. We buy the land and pay him for the damage to it.

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes. We buy the land and pay him for the damage to it, which may be perfectly proper; but I do not know. Mr. MILLER. All we want to do is simply to pay him for the value of the land.

Mr. MANN. This bill, of course, has not passed the other Would it not be better to have the bill so that the Department has the discretion as to the price to be paid?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Mann] will suggest an amendment of that kind, I will agree to it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the bill passing as it is at present, but I made that suggestion because I think that form of the bill is quite objectionable.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. RAY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7960) for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, of Arkansas, The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $853.25 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, deceased, mail contractor on route No. 7956, in the State of Arkansas, for carrying the United States mails to May 31, 1861, this being the amount of pay due to John Gafford to that date as found by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department and reported to the Secretary of the Treasury for appropriation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GOUVERNEUR V. PACKER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 17285) for the relief of Second Lieut. Gouverneur V. Packer, Twenty-fourth United States Infantry.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be credited to Second Lieut. Gouverneur V. The next business was the bill (H. R. 7153) for the relief of David McClelland for loss sustained at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, January 29, 1904.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to David McClelland, late draftsman and assistant to the engineer in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, stationed at the new military post, Chickamauga Park, Georgia, the sum of $171.21 for loss of personal property by fire on the morning of January 29, 1904.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THE NEBRASKA MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 14125) for the relief of The Nebraska Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Stromsburg, Nebr.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to refund to The Nebraska Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Stromsburg, Nebr., the sum of $1,481.94, with interest thereon at 7 per cent per, annum from the 1st day of July, 1901, which sum was wrongfully charged to and collected from said company on said date by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and paid by said company under protest.

Also the following amendments:

Strike out all of line 9; also all of line 8 except the words "which

Strike out in line 10 the words "on said date" and insert in place thereof the words "as war-revenue taxes under chapter 448 of the laws of 1898."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue reported on this same subject-

I am satisfied that the tax was legally assessed and collected, and therefore can not recommend the passage of the pending bill.

I would like to know why.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW

Mr. HINSHAW. I think that if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will read over the report here he will see that it is a just claim. This company was organized as a mutual life insurance company under the laws of the State of Nebraska in March, 1898. The first year of its organization, as will be seen here by the reports, the revenues exceeded the expenditures by a considerable sum by reason of the fact that the assessments were levied and collected, but there were no death losses in the first year of its organization to amount to anything at all.

Therefore there was paid for commissions to officers and agents who were sent out to canvass the territory $2,639, and it appears it was very little for the pay of the officers. The officers did not receive any salary at all, except the secretary, who receives $1,200. These commissions have not been paid since then, and the revenues obtained from the assessments do not more than equal the expenditures each year, and none of this has gone to stockholders at all.

As you will see by the certificate of Auditor Searle, on page 17 of the report, he says:

I further certify that said Nebraska Mutual Life Insurance Company is organized and transacting business under and by virtue of the assessment life-insurance laws of the State, that all moneys paid by its members for death losses and expenses is obtained by assessments upon its members, and that the said life-insurance company was organized for mutual protection to its members and not for profit.

Now, that comes under the revenue law of 1898, which is found on page 2 of this report, in which it says: "If these companies are organized exclusively for the benefit of its members and not for profit, they are not subject to the revenue taxes.

This comes clearly under the provision exempting those that are organized not for profit in any sense.

I say now to you, and say it without any feeling whatever, that in my conversations with the revenue officers up here they stated that this assessment had been made under a former Commissioner of Internal Revenue; that there was a rule of the Department-and I think he said it had the sanction of law-that a subsequent Commissioner can not reverse the finddings of a former Commissioner. That was the reason. They did not propose to go into the merits of the question at all. You will observe that Mr. Yerkes does not state now any facts upon which he bases his conclusion. He simply states he believes the amount is properly assessed and should not be repaid; but you will find no objection in that office to the repayment of this claim, which is a very just one. If you will turn to the record here, you will see that it is absolutely for the use of the members and not for stockholders at all.

Referring to page 3 of the report you will find that the Nebraska Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Stromsburg, Nebr., was a mutual benefit association, and devoted its whole income to the payment of death losses and accident indemnity to its members, and an accumulation of a reserve fund for this purpose is in accordance with the charter and by-laws and the Nebraska State law, and the payment of expenses absolutely necessary for the conduct of its business, and that the corporation was and is not organized for profit.

I submit to the gentleman, and suggest to him, that this is a just claim, and it concerns, not some great corporation, but a lot of people who have organized in the vicinity of Stromsburg the Nebraska Mutual Life Insurance Company, and that not with a view to profit. There are nine directors, who only get $10 each a year; the president gets a salary of $50; the treasurer, $188; the secretary, $1,200; then the attorney gets $50, and one clerk or assistant to the secretary, $480.

I submit this is a very small expenditure to the officers and agents of a company of this kind, and I ask the gentleman to please withdraw his objection.

I do not know that I will object, but I do not Mr. PAYNE. know but that it is my duty to do so, because I think you will have a flock of these cases coming on. It has a little profit on the side.

Mr. MILLER. There will be no more of these cases coming. Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Kansas says they will not But they will come when his grandchildren are here.

Mr. MANN. I will say that the passage of this claim is a great tribute to the gentleman from Nebraska. [Laughter.]
Mr. HINSHAW. I thank the gentleman for not objecting.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

T. E. BOYT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19275) for the relief of T. E. Boyt.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19275) for the relief of T. E. Boyt.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to T. E. Boyt, of Vienna, Ill., the sum of $461, to reimburse him for said sum paid by him for a technical violation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

W. W. PEIRCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17875) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of W. W. Peirce.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17875) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of W. W. Peirce.

Be it enacted, etc., That the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy be, and is hereby, waived in the case of W. W. Pelrce.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ESTHER ROUSSEAU.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22362) making an appropriation to pay Esther Rousseau for horses killed upon the Cheyenne Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22362) making an appropriation to pay Esther Rousseau for horses killed upon the Cheyenne Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying Esther Rousseau for 495 horses belonging to her and unlawfully destroyed and killed upon the Cheyenne Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, during the year 1897, by the United States Indian agent in charge of said Indian reservation.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment upon the claim of Esther Rousseau, for horses belonging to her and killed and destroyed upon the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, or elsewhere, in the State of South Dakota, by the Indian agent in charge of said Cheyenne River Indian Reservation and other persons under his authority, with right of appeal as in other cases.

appeal as in other cases.

"That a petition may be filed by the attorneys of the said Esther Rousseau in said court within forty days from the approval of this act, and service of said petition shall be had by filing copies thereof with the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior, and answer thereto shall be filed in said court within sixty days after the service thereto shall be filed in said court within sixty days after the service of the petition.

"The court may receive and consider all papers, depositions, records, correspondence, and documents heretofore filed in the Executive Departments of the Government, together with any other evidence offered, and shall render a judgment or decree thereon for such amount, if any, without interest, as the court shall find legally or equitably due to the said Esther Rousseau.

"Said cause shall be advanced on the calendar of said court, and the amount for which judgment may be rendered, when paid to the party named in said judgment, or her duly authorized and accredited attorneys, shall be received in full and final settlement of the claim for said unlawful destruction of said horses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Esther Rousseau."

The next business was Senate joint resolution 13, authorizing the Secretary of War to award the Congressional medal of honor to Roe Reisinger.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to award the Congressional medal of honor to Roe Reisinger, alias J. Monroe Reisinger, late corporal, Company H, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, for specially brave and meritorious conduct in the face of the enemy at the battle of Gettysburg July 1, 1863.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of this.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, Roe Reisinger enlisted as a corporal from Meadville, Pa., in the One hundred and fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry and was a member of the regiment commanded by Col. Henry S. Huidekoper. He is one of the unknown heroes of the civil war. At the battle of Gettysburg, in a galling fire, the color sergeant of the regiment was shot down, and Reisinger, then a corporal, volunteered to carry the colors forward. While doing so he received three leaden bullets, but in spite of his wounds he went on. At roll call before the battle that day 400, including 17 officers, were present. In the evening but 2 officers and 84 men responded. Sixty had been killed outright; the balance were wounded or captured.

Colonel Huidekoper in his official report of the battle says "Among the many brave I would especially commend for coolness and courage Corpl. Roe Reisinger."

It is on the recommendation of his colonel, now General Huidekoper, of Philadelphia, that this resolution has passed the Senate and has been approved by the House Committee on Military Affairs. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we honor ourselves when we direct that a medal of honor be bestowed upon this brave man, so that his children and his children's children shall know of his gallant deed upon the historic field of Gettysburg.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PAWNEE, OKLA

The next business was the bill (H. R. 22543) granting to the town of Pawnee, in Pawnee County, Okla., certain lands for park, educational, and other public purposes.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, as this bill makes a grant of public lands in Oklahoma, which has now become a State, I think we ought to pass it over. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made,

MRS, R. E. MILLER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4586) for the relief of Mrs. R. E. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. R. E. Miller the sum of $400 to reimburse her for the said sum paid by her to the Government of the United States in lieu of money belonging to the Government stolen from her possession, the said Mrs. R. E. Miller being at the time of said theft an employee of the post-office at Dallas, Tex.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to ask that that go over.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. MANN. I am willing to reserve the right to object in order to allow the gentleman from Texas to make a statement.

Perhaps he can persuade me, although I read the report and all the papers very carefully.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the relief of Mrs. R. E. Miller, who has been in the post-office service at Dallas, Tex., for many years, during which time she has handled many millions of dollars, the receipts of that post-office being something over $400,000 a year. A few years ago, while she was engaged in the performance of her duties as stamp clerk, she took her money, which was in a tin box, out of the safe for the purpose of purchasing her supply of stamps. official from whom she had to purchase the stamps was not in his place at the time; consequently she was compelled to defer the purchase until after lunch. She went to lunch, leaving the money and the stamp window in charge of her assistant. When she came back from lunch the tin box in which the money was kept was there, locked, but on unlocking the box she discovered that the money was gone. She immediately replaced the amount out of her private funds. Everybody connected with the office has given the same testimonial in regard to the efficiency of this woman. Prior to her service in the Dallas post-office she had been in the Government service for quite a while, and this is the only instance of any trouble.

Mr. PAYNE. Did not the inspector who went there to examine into the facts report that she had been very careless about leaving her money for a year or more; that she had a safe in which she might have locked it instead of keeping this large amount of money in a tin box, and that it was wholly unnecessary for her to have $400 with which to make change?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The inspector did make that sort of a report, and quotes the assistant postmaster and another employee as authority for his statement. In this report you will find a statement from the assistant postmaster and the employee, both contradicting the statement of the inspector. The testimony of everyone connected with the office was that she was capable, careful, and efficient. I have already shown for what purpose she had taken the money from the safe.

Mr. MANN. I notice in the report that this employee to whom the gentleman refers says that he himself has been handling millions of dollars every year.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not know where that statement is in this report. I do not recall it. I do not think the gentleman will find any such statement there.

Mr. MANN. That is the way I read it.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Why does not the gentleman quote the report?

Mr. MANN. My copy of the report is in my room. lying on my memory. Of course, I am never sure of absolute accuracy in quoting from memory anything I read.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I think there is some conflict between what the inspector said and the gentleman's memory. Mrs. Miller personally, and she is a gentle, refined lady. It meant much to her to replace this $460, but she did so. She comes now to the Government that she has faithfully served for almost twenty-five years, and offering that service as her guaranty of efficiency and fidelity, asks that she be reimbursed. Gentlemen now say that she was careless. Looking back at the occurrence it is easy to say so, but her record of many years without a single other loss is proof that she was not careless. This Government should not pay one dollar that is not justly due, but it should not withhold from this good woman that which is justly due her. There is another circumstance which I do not care to mention here that I think would affect the report of that inspector.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I quote from a letter written by a Mr. Luna, the employee to whom he refers:

I have been closely associated with Mrs. Miller in this office for about ten years, and I consider that she is as careful in the handling of the Government's money as I am, and I handle millions each year.

Now, does the gentleman from Texas think that a man who is so careless in the use of language as that, when the employee in that post-office does not take in $500,000 a year-does the gentleman think that his judgment about somebody else being careful is worth much?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not think if the gentleman from Illinois knew Mr. Luna he would cast any reflections upon him.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps I should not; I do not know him. I hardly ever cast any reflections upon anybody whom I know, because usually when I know a man I see his good qualities.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not know how that expression came in his letter. I am satisfied it was either an inadvertence or true. The bill was reported at the last Congress by the Committee on Claims, and is reported now.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the report is not unanimous, although there was no minority report. I do not wonder that it is not unanimous. I do not think the bill ought to pass. I think I will object, Mr. Speaker.

FRANCISCO KREBS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5531) for the relief of Francisco Krebs.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Francisco Krebs be, and he is hereby, confirmed in his title to a tract of land known as Round Island, in the State of Mississippi, situated in sections 33 and 34, township 8 south, range 6 west, and sections 3 and 4, township 9 south, range 6 west, granted by the Spanish governor, Grimarest, to Francisco Krebs on December 13, 1783, and recorded in translated records, book No. 2, page 51, in the probate court at Mobile, Aia: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall affect the claim or claims of any other person or persons to the said land, or any part thereof, derived from the United States or any source whatever: Provided further, That the site comprising 400 feet square upon which the lighthouse is now situated shall be excepted from this confirmation.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that the bill that was read this morning?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know that I have any objection to the

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill itself.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HARRY M'L. P. HUSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22291) to authorize the reappointment of Harry McL. P. Huse to the active list of the Navy.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Harry McL. P. Huse, now a professor of mathematics in the United States Navy with the rank of commander, a commander on the active list of the Navy, to take rank next after William L, Rodgers: Provided, That the said Harry McL. P. Huse shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy by examination pursuant to law his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of that grade: And provided further, That the said Harry McL. P. Huse shall be carried as an additional to the number of the grade to which he may be appointed under this act, or at any time thereafter promoted: And provided further, That the said Harry McL. P. Huse shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to back pay of any kind.

Mr. PAYNE Mr. Sneaker I would like an explanation of Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like an explanation of Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to make the explanation which the gentleman from New York requests. The gentleman whom this bill was introduced to relieve is a commander in the United States Navy. the executive officer on the U.S.S. Gloucester, well fixed in history, a man of unusual courage and possessing great skill. After the termination of the Spanish-American war it was requested by the Navy Department that Commander Huse might be assigned to the Naval Academy at Annapolis to instruct the cadets on some special part of the curriculum. Not being in very good health, he acquiesced in the request made by the Department and submitted to the assignment.

He is now through with his work at the Academy, his health has been completely restored, and the Department joins with him in asking that he may be returned to the line of the Navy. I will say, further, to my friend from New York that inasmuch as Captain Huse now holds an extra number he will not by his return to the line of the Navy interfere with the promotion of anyone thereon. He was advanced for courage and given an extra number by Congress, and therefore if returned to the line of the Navy he will not, to repeat what I have said, interfere with the promotion of any man in the list.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman has proceeded far enough to satisfy me, and I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

JOHN M'KINNON, ALIAS JOHN MACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1160) to correct the military record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John McKinnon, allas John Mack, late of Company L, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and seaman on the U. S. S. North Carolina and U. S. S. Brooklyn, and to grant him a discharge from the military service of the United States: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how this bill comes properly from the Naval Committee; unless some gentleman can give an explanation I shall have to object.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I remember that we considered the case, and I would like to have the report read.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The bill was passed over without prejudice.

PETER O'NEIL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1561) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant an honorable discharge to Peter O'Neil.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge to Peter O'Neil, late a member of United States Navy.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "an honorable" and insert "a." Amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant a discharge to Peter O'Neil."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES BEHAN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 19284) for the relief of James Behan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a discharge to James Behan, who served on board the U. S. S. Vermont, U. S. S. Canandaigua, and U. S. S. Pinta, of the United States Navy, under the name of Michael Behan, in his true name, in lieu of the one he received for said service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

LYMAN BALLOU.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 23889) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue deed of conveyance to Lyman Ballou to certain lands in Custer County, S. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, anthorized and directed to issue a deed of conveyance to Lyman Ballou, of the town of Buffalo Gap, Custer County, S. Dak., to the following described lands, to wit: The north 100 feet of lot 1 in block 7 of the original town of Buffalo Gap; also all that part of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 29 in township 6 south, of range 7 east, of the Black Hills meridian, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the intersection of the north line of Pine street with the west line of Second street, running thence east on the north line of Pine street 80 feet; thence west on the south line of Pine street 80 feet; thence north on the west line of Second street 80 feet to the place of beginning, as said streets are laid down and described on the plat of the town of Buffalo Gap, on record in the office of the register of deeds of Custer County, S. Dak., all in the town of Buffalo Gap, Custer County, S. Dak. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN S. HALL.

The next business was the bill (S. 6166) for the relief of Edwin S. Hall.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,028.58, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Edwin S. Hall, of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn., the said sum of $2,028.58.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the House bill for this man was passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Then, I shall ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings of the House bill on yesterday, and that the House bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Illinois that the proper way of proceeding would be by resolution, or an order that the Senate be requested to return the bill.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I will ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed.

Mr. PAYNE. We ought not to proceed, I think, until the House bill is here.

Mr. MANN. This is a request to the Senate to return the House bill. We will get the House bill back as a matter of course.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the following order will be made, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk be requested to request the Senate to return to the House the bill (H. R. 1050) for the relief of Edwin S. Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

MARGARET NEUTZE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 20169) for the relief of Margaret Neutze, of Leon Springs, Tex.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Margaret Neutze, of Leon Springs, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100, in full settlement for damages due her by reason of the killing of two horses by troops of the United States Army while engaged in target practice near Leon Springs, Tex.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like an explanation of this bill

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the report does not give the date of the occurrence, but I shall refer to the bill imme-diately succeeding. It appears that the damage was done at Leon Springs in 1903, 1904, and 1905.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, there seems to have been an investigating board, and there is a recommendation on the part of General Humphrey that the claim be allowed. I have no objec-

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

F. KRAUT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 20168) for the relief of F. Krant, of Leon Springs, Tex.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to F. Krant, of Leon Springs, Tex., the sum of $325, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full settlement of claims for damage to property incident to the target practice of the Army of the United States near Leon Springs, Tex.

With the following amendment:

On line 4 strike out the word "Krant" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Kraut."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended.

ETIENNE DE P. BUJAC.

HOFFMAN ENGINEERING AND CONTRACTING COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1648) for the relief of the Hoffman Engineering and Contracting

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas certain accounts of the Hoffman Engineering and Contracting Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, for compensation for extra work done in carrying out its contract with the United States, through the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, bearing date March 19, 1901, providing, among other things for certain construction work at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., have been investigated and reported upon under the direction of the Navy, by a board of officers consisting of Capt. S. W. Very and Civil Engineers A. C. Lorenz and A. J. Menacal, which said board found to be due the said corporation the sum of $14,838.25, against which sum certain countercharges amounting in the aggregate to $2,110.44 are due the United States: Therefore,

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I did not receive my notice, and for that reason I was not present when this bill was considered, and I want to ask the gentleman if this was a unanimous report?

Mr. MILLER. What bill is that? Mr. GARRETT. This is the Hoffman Engineering and Contracting Company claim.

Mr. MILLER. This was a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not objecting, but I did not receive my notice, and consequently was not present.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to know something about the nature of the claim, reserving the right to object.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the bill, it does not require the Navy Department to pay all the money, but limits the amount which they can pay in settlement.

Mr. MILLER. That is what it does; it is a settlement of their claim.

Mr. MANN. It limits the amount they can pay, but does not require them to pay all the money.

Mr. PAYNE. Authorizes them to pay it.

Mr. MILLER. Providing it is found to be due, and they have found it is due, according to the report of the Secretary.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JEANIE R. BARTLETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2073) for the relief of Jeanie R. Bartlett, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John Russell Bartlett, United States Navy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that bill. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

GORDON, IRONSIDES & FARES COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16085) for the relief of Gordon, Ironsides & Fares Company (Limited).

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $7,626.08 be paid to Gordon, Ironsides & Fares Company (Limited), of Montreal, Canada, said sum having been exacted as duties and paid to the collector of customs at the port of Boston by the said Gordon, Ironsides & Fares Company (Limited) on the 2d, 3rd, and 4th days of December, 1902, covering a consignment of 602 head of cattle and 1,757 sheep shipped from Canada in bond via Boston, Mass., to Liverpool, England, on the 25th day of November, 1902, and being prohibited from being so shipped by general orders from the Department of Agriculture, dated the 27th day of November, 1902, said cattle and sheep being then slaughtered and exported on the Ultonia on the 10th day of December, 1902.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to make payment of said amount of $7,626.08 mentioned in section 1 out of the funds not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect on its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to bill, Calendar No. 3625, objected to by the gentleman from Illinois, but since the objection I have called his atten-

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Currier). Will the gentleman defer that until the bills in regular order are disposed of? There is one more bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There is one more bill; I did not see it on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

S. W. PEEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19930) referring the claim of S. W. Peel for legal services rendered the Choctaw Nation of Indians to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. MANN. This bill is not on the printed Calendar, of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is on the Calendar reported yesterday, but not on the printed Calendar. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the bill being read, of

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of S. W. Peel, of Bentonville, Ark., for legal services rendered and expenditures had for the Choctaw Nation of Indians, of the Indian Territory, in an action in said Court of Claims wherein Yvon Pike and Lillian Pike, and Yvon Pike as the administrator of the estate of Luther S. Pike, deceased, were plaintiffs, and said nation was defendant, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims with full jurisdiction, equitable and legal, to render judgment or decree therein as to the very right of the matter; and in case the said court finds any sum or amount due the claimant for his services and disbursements as aforesaid, it shall thereupon direct the same to be paid with interest from the funds of said nation now in the Treasury of the United States, and a transcript of such decree or judgment shall be authority for the Secretary of the Interior to make the payment therewith, and to make the proper charge against the funds of said nation; and sufficient of the funds of said nation shall be retained in the Treasury of the United States to meet any judgment or decree for payment to said S. W. Peel that may finally be rendered. The suit herein provided for shall be entitled "S. W. Peel v. The Choctaw Nation and the United States;" the petition and other proceedings therein shall be in accordance with the ordinary rules and requirements of said court, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court by either party: Provided, That no suit shall be brought under the provisions of this act after six months from the date of the passage thereof: And provided further, That such suit shall be advanced and promptly tried in any court where it may be pending.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I first reserve the point of order

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I first reserve the point of order on the bill and then I object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, just a moment before the gentleman objects.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve the right to object if the gentleman desires me to do so.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection. The member of the committee who reported the bill I do not see in the House, but it involves the sum of about $5,000 claimed to be due on a contract that was made by Judge Peel, who was for many years an honored member of this House, for services performed for certain Indians, I think in the Indian Territory. The bill merely sends the case to the Court of Claims and asks them to find the facts and render a judgment if any amount is found to be due, and, if so, the judgment is to be paid out of the funds of the Indians who are parties to this contract, and it does not take any money whatever out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this bill proposes to confer upon the Court of Claims the authority to render a judgment upon an equitable claim regardless of the fact he could sue, and would sue, a private person on a legal claim? The bill provides for judgment both legal and equitable. That is the way I heard the bill read from the desk.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That, Mr. Speaker, is be cause of the fact there is some question between the claimant and the Indians as to whether or not there was a written contract.

Mr. MANN. We have had no opportunity to see the bill, of course. There has been a good deal of fraud in connection with the allowance of claims by attorneys against Indians, and this one ought to be considered by the House when it can be consid-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have no interest whatever in the claimant. The gentleman who reported the bill is absent, and I was present when the hearing took place.

Mr. MANN. I understand.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And Judge Peel appeared befor the committee. It seemed to the members of the committee that it was a just claim, and they reported it unanimously.

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] that I introduced the bill, and I would be pleased to state any facts that he may desire or may wish information about as to the character of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to hear the gentleman's explanation. What we want is information. So far we have not any. It comes from a committee that has no jurisdiction to It is not upon the Calendar, and nobody has been advised of it. The report was only printed this morning, and nobody could obtain it, and I do not believe that the gentleman ought to ask that we push the bill through. Of course the gentleman can always enlighten me.

Mr. FLOYD. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to explain it to him.

Mr. MANN. I have not the floor. The gentleman has the floor and is entitled to it.

Mr. FLOYD. I will state that this is a bill in behalf of S. W. Peel to refer a certain claim which he has against the Choctaw Nation for legal services to the Court of Claims for adjustment. About 1895, after Colonel Peel had retired from Congress, there was a suit filed by Yvon Pike, Lillian Pike, and Yvon Pike as the administrator of the estate of Luther H. Pike, deceased, being the heirs of Albert Pike, against the Choctaw Nation for the sum of $200,000. The chief of the Choctaw Nation notified Colonel Peel, who was down there at that time, that the suit was pending and asked him how much he would charge to represent the nation in that suit. He said he would represent them for $5,000. The Choctaw council was in session at that time, and they immediately passed a bill through the senate of the Choctaw council to employ Mr. Peel and to allow him $5,000. It was right on the eve of the adjournment of the Choctaw council, and the lower house adjourned before the senate bill reached the house. After that Colonel Peel returned home, and the chief of the Choctaw Nation, Mr. Gardner, sent him the following letter:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, CHOCTAW NATION,

JEFF GARDNER, PRINCIPAL CHIEF,

Eagletown, Ind. T., December 16, 1895.

Dear Sir and Friend: Mr. Stanley has informed this office that there is a motion by the attorney of the Pike heirs, Mr. James Coleman, in the Court of Claims for an order to take testimony.

You will please go to Washington, D. C., as early as you can and appear as attorney for the nation and ask for time until one can be employed by the nation for that purpose.

Mr. Dyer will go to Washington, D. C., before long.

Yours, respectfully,

JEFF GARDNER,

Principal Chief, Choctav Nation.
S. G. BATTIEST,
Private Secretary.

Hon. S. W. PEEL, Bentonville, Ark.

In response to that request Colonel Peel came to Washington, and Mr. Dyer came on to Washington also and entered into a written contract with Colonel Peel relative to his fee. Mr. Dyer was a delegate of the Choctaw Nation, selected by the council to represent their interests here. He entered into a written contract with Colonel Peel to defend the Choctaw Nation in that suit, and the contract is in writing, was submitted to the committee, and I have copies of it here in a brief. contract provided that for his services in the suit he should be paid $1,000 down and $4,000 at the termination of the suit; in all, $5,000. Under that contract Colonel Peel entered upon his duties as attorney in that case and continued his services from 1895, when he was employed, to 1901, when by Senate amendment an appropriation was made to pay the Pike heirs $75,000, and that settled the suit in the Court of Claims. He filed an answer, took testimony, and took depositions, and so forth, using his own funds in payment of costs, and neither his fee nor the costs paid out by him have been paid. The testimony shows that he was the sole attorney in that case and represented them in it as their sole attorney for a period of about six years. is the nature of the case.

Now, in regard to this proposition suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] as to the contract, I will say there may be a question as to the validity or legality of it in this way: A bill authorizing his employment was passed through the Choc-The chief then ratified the contract made by the Senate. It did not go to the house for ratification. Then the delegate was authorized to come here and enter into the contract, in keeping with the bill or resolution of the senate. He did so, and entered into a written contract with Colonel Peel, signed it, agreeing to pay this amount of money due, with inter-Even if the court should hold that that contract was not valid and binding, we insist that in equity, under the rule of quantum meruit, he would be entitled to some compensation for his six years' services in representing the Choctaw Nation in a suit in which he saved them $125,000, because that was the amount that was saved by fighting that suit. If he had not entered appearance and made defense for them, a judgment would have been taken against the Choctaw Nation for $200,000. Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. FLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this claim contested by the Choctaw Ne-tion; and if so, on what ground?

Mr. FLOYD. This claim simply has not been paid by the Choctaw Nation; and I believe that formerly when the effort was being made to get this claim allowed by a direct appropriation that some one filed a protest; but in the protest they did not deny any of the facts alleged by Colonel Peel, as I understand it. And I want to say in this proceeding here no protest has been entered, no answer has been made to our proceeding. I want to say, further, that when the facts were submitted to the Senate committee the same item was put on the Indian appropriation bill two years ago, but was lost in conference.

Mr. PERKINS. On what ground was it objected to? Because, as you state the case, there ought to be no objection. There must be some somewhere.

Mr. FLOYD. That is a question I can not answer.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to say a word on the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, in which he questions the jurisdiction of the committee on the ground that it is not a claim against the Government, and, therefore, the Committee on Indian Affairs is the proper committee to consider such claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule on that. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my objection, for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire a ruling on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Not on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

JOHN H. POTTER.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 3625.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. PAYNE. What is it? The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3574) for the relief of John H. Potter.

A bill (S. 3574) for the relief of John H. Potter.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John H. Potter, formerly master of the collier Saturn, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,344, in full settlement of salary and traveling and subsistence expenses from the time of his discharge in Manila, August 31, 1901, to the time of his reporting at the Navy Department at Washington, October 25, 1901, and to reimburse him for certain sums expended by order and under authority of commanding officers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in that case I objected on the ground that the money to be paid appeared to be to pay mileage to an officer who had been discharged in the Philippines, and who was found to be improperly discharged. The report indicates that the payment is to be made for mileage. The statement upon which the action of the committee was based, however, and not printed in the report, shows that the amount allowed was simply for expenses. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. R. E. MILLER.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 4586, Calendar No. 5121.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4586) for the relief of Mrs. R. E. Miller.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. R. E. Miller the sum of $400 to reimburse her for the said sum paid by her to the Government of the United States in lieu of money belonging to the Government stolen from her possession, the said Mrs. R. E. Miller being at the time of said theft an employee of the post-office at Dallas, Tex.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is a case where a post-office clerk allowed somebody to steal $400.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. That is the case. I thought the amiable gentleman from New York was not going to object.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not going to deprive the gentleman of an opportunity to donate $400 to this woman, who has been an employee of the Post-Office Department for a long time; but I hope that these clerks in the post-office will hereafter be a little more careful in the matter of caring for Government funds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY V. SHAW.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to bill H. R. 7548, Calendar No. 3627.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Well, I identify it in that way. Well, I do not know what the case is. I can not

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7548) for the relief of Mary V. Shaw.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary V. Shaw, widow of Hon. W. Irvin Shaw, late consul-general to Singapore, Straits Settlements, India, the sum of $3,000, a sum representing one year's salary, and an allowance of $300 additional to defray the cost of the funeral expenses of the said Hon. W. Irvin Shaw, who died while in the service.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "of," strike out the words "three thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand five hundred;" and in line 8 strike out the words "one year's" and insert in lieu thereof "six months."

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to make this brief statement.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the gentleman making a statement.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think, Mr. Speaker, there was a misunder-standing of this question when it was reached before. I have in my hand a copy of a letter (and it is attached to the report) from the Secretary of State, in which he says the law provides for the payment to the widow or heirs at law of a consul who dies abroad a sum of money equal to the allowance made to such officer for the transit period between his post and Washington, also for the funeral expenses.

Now, I understand that the amount usually allowed for the transit period is six months' salary. So if this consul had died abroad his widow would have received the six months' salary and the funeral expenses. He returned here in ill health, as a result of his service in the unhealthy city of Barranquilla, Colombia, and had been appointed consul to Singapore, but before he could return he died here. If he had lived to go there his widow would have had this money.

Mr. MANN. No; if he had died there it would have cost her the allowance that the Government makes to come home and bring his body home. The reason for making the allowance ceased in this case. Unless it is the policy of the Government to do, as it has been the policy of the House here to do, in case of the death of an employee, to pay six months' salary. I can see no reason why this bill should pass.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think I made myself understood. If Mr. Shaw had died there, his widow would have received the six months' salary and the expenses of bringing him back and burying him. He died here; so she received nothing. She is in utterly destitute circumstances. This bill was offered by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dresser], who is himself ill, and when the bill was called up before I was not familiar with the circumstances.

Mr. Shaw was prevented from returning to his post by illness incurred in the discharge of his duty at the other post. Had he been able to get to his new post his widow would have received, under the law, six months' salary and the funeral expenses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Where was she when he died? Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know, but I will assume for the purposes of the case that she was with him. He did not die at his home, however.

Mr. MANN. The only claim that is any good here is that the woman is poor, and there are millions of others like her. Mr. OLMSTED. There is no other case like this, except four or five cases which have been allowed by Congress.

Mr. MANN. There are other cases like it as to poverty.

Mr. OLMSTED. There will never be another just exactly like it probably.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what distinction can be drawn between this case and that of any employee of the Government who dies here at home in this country? Why should we not pay them all six months' salary and funeral expenses?

Mr. OLMSTED. This man died as a result of his service, and his illness and death prevented him from getting back to the post to which he had been appointed, which would have entitled his widow, under the law, to six months' salary and funeral expenses.

Mr. PAYNE. Other people die in the Government service.

Mr. OLMSTED. There have been other cases similar to this, and the widow in each case has been paid.

Mr. MANN. The precedent has been enlarging, as far as the Government is concerned, but we ought either to take one position or the other. If it were the policy of Congress to pay six months' salary, as far as I am concerned I should have no objection to that, but I am not willing to make an exception in this case.

Mr. OLMSTED. If he had died abroad, his widow would have received this money. He died here, and therefore his widow loses the money.

Mr. MANN. No; he was in precisely the same position as any other officer of the Government who dies at any place in the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that the reason of the custom that permits the six months' allowance, this "transit allowance," as it is called, is because when they die abroad the expense of the family in returning is a thing intended to be provided for? Now, if the family were here with him, why should the spirit of that law apply in this case? They had no traveling to do.

Mr. OLMSTED. In addition to the transit allowance they allow funeral expenses also.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, but there was no travel here and no transit. They were here already,

Mr. OLMSTED. If he had died abroad, his widow would have got the six months' allowance and the funeral expenses. Now, she has had to bury him herself, and gets no allowance either for salary or for his funeral expenses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The six months' allowance is for the transit

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, they allow him for that period.
Mr. WILLIAMS. That is an arbitrary way of fixing the amount.

Mr. OLMSTED. And they allow the funeral expenses be-Now she has had to bury him at her own expense and can not even get the six months' salary. It seems to me that it is a very meritorious claim and I wish the gentleman from Illinois could see his way to allow it to be voted upon. There has never been a case like it since the foundation of the Government, and probably will never be another,

Mr. MANN. I object.

MITSUI BUSSAN KAISHA.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House return to Calendar No. 3785.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House return to Calendar No. 3785, which is H. R. 9289, for the relief of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $600 be, and is hereby, appropriated to the Mitsul Bussan Kaisha for damages to their steamer Hikosan Maru, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States Quartermaster's Department on July 31, 1902; and that the further sum of $948.27 be, and is hereby, appropriated to the Mitsul Bussan Kaisha for damages to their chartered steamer Shirley, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States Quartermaster's Department in Manila Bay on March 23, 1902, making altogether the sum of $1,548.27.

Mr. GARRETT. This bill was objected to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, L objected to that alternative states are the states of the s

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I objected to that claim and asked a question as to the allowance of demurrage which the report did not show was not included in the amount. I am assured by the gentleman from the Committee on Claims who introduced the bill that the allowance of demurrage was not included in the amount appropriated in the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS P. MORGAN.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 3606, which is the bill (H. R. 12881) to pay Thomas P. Morgan the amount found due by the Court of That is the Court of Claims case, which was tried on report and documentary evidence sent in by the War Department and upon depositions duly taken in the Court of Claims. The amount of $6,357.82 was found to be actually due this dredging contractor, and the further facts were proved that he actually dredged the number of cubic yards charged for, which have not been paid for, and that the Government actually got the benefit of the services rendered.

The amount of four thousand and odd dollars was the retained percentage on the amount of money that was withheld for the dredging work that had been done. One thousand four hundred dollars is for the amount of dredging which was not paid for at all. It was withheld on the ground, first, that there was a little deeper dredging at certain places called for; there was no definite depth fixed, but about a certain number of feet in depth was required, and it was simply held up so that they could get a decision in the matter, and by that time they declared that the contract period had ended and did not extend his time, and so he did not have an opportunity to do it

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I made the objection to this bill. There was a finding of the Court of Claims which found nothing practically, and there was nothing in the report to show whether the engineering department of the War Department had ever been consulted about this claim, and nothing to show what objection they had, they having originally refused to make the allowance. But the gentleman from Indiana assures me, and I am willing to take it, that in the trial of the case before the Court of Claims all of the claims of the War Department were brought out and considered by that court, although it is not shown by the record. Therefore I withdraw the objection.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, this is only 10 per cent of the whole amount of the contract which is held back?

Mr. CHANEY. It covers more than that; it covers $1,459 worth of dredging that was done, that was not considered in the matter, because they ended the contract, claiming that the period of limitation had expired.

Mr. MANN. The Government declared the contract forfeited because the contractors had not completed the work within the time provided, although the time had been extended six months, and then they declared that the money in the hands of the Government which otherwise would have been due the contractors was forfeited under the contract. The War Department considered that they were correct in that respect. The Court of Claims did not make any findings upon the point at all, but did find that the contractor had done this and that there was ex-While I think the decision or the findings of the cuse for him. Court of Claims is the poorest I have ever seen coming from that court, still as the claim was fully presented to the court, I am willing to take their judgment and be bound by it.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, the only question the War Department had in it was as to whether they, under the contract, could withhold this money as a penal sum, and the question of law was decided in favor of the claimant that it was not a penal

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment was offered by the committee, but the amount in the amendment is not the way we want the bill passed. We want the entire amount found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I shall not consent to that. Mr. CHANEY. Then I shall withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the order passing the bill can be vacated. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MANN. That depends, Mr. Speaker. The bill was passed as amended.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the bill passed as amended; I want the bill passed carrying the amount that the Court of Claims found.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand it has been already passed as amended, and if that is so, he can not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

DEPOSIT SAVINGS ASSOCIATION OF MOBILE, ALA.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 4190) for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association of Mobile, Ala.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to the bill indicated. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object to that request.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CLAIMS UNDER NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 13605) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department, for the purpose of moving to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to returning?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, for the purpose of offering certain amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. In connection with that bill, when it was passed was the usual motion to reconsider and lay on the table passed?

Mr. MILLER. No.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the following amendments to this bill, and I offer them on account of the report that is presented by the Navy Department to our committee. I am authorized by the unanimous vote of the committee to offer these amendments. There are eleven of them, providing for the payment of small amounts of damages similar to those that have been enacted in the bill, amounts ranging from $42 to some three hundred and odd dollars. I send the amendments to the desk, and ask to have them read.

87, 90 The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 19930.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19930) referring the claim of S. W. Peel for legal services rendered the Choctaw Nation of Indians to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time: was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'KINNON.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of making an inquiry, I ask to return to House Calendar 5263, which is passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (8, 1160) to correct the military record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure

The SPEAKER. That is a desertion bill, which would not be in order to-day.

A. A. NOON.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 47, Calendar No. 5437, and take up Senate

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3739) for the relief of A. A. Noon

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that the gilsonite bill?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Yes; that is the gilsonite bill. A. A. Noon was the lessee of certain mining claims near the Uncompangre Indian Reservation in Utah. The survey of this reservation was made in 1884-85 and the boundaries of the reservation established by that survey. Certain mining claims were located and recorded according to law outside and near the western boundary of the reservation as then defined.

One of these mining claims which had been duly located according to law was leased from its owner by Mr. Noon. He extracted some $1,300 worth of gilsonite from this mine. Claiming that this mining claim was within the reservation, the Government commenced an action against him and recovered judgment for the full amount of the value of the gilsonite which had been marketed. When notified by the Government to desist from mining he conformed to the requirements of the Department. While he was lessee in good faith of these mines there was no question in his mind as to his right to take out the ore, and it was only by a resurvey of the reservation in 1898, after his lease and after the development work done and the production of ore (gilsonite) by him in pursuance of this bona fide lease, that this territory was found to be within the reservation. I think that is a good claim and ought to pass, and I hope no objection will be made to its consideration at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did he get any gilsonite out and sell it?

Did he get any money out of it?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. He got some money, and the Government sued him and got judgment for the full amount of the receipts for the mineral which he had taken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And now you are asking that he be repaid that amount'

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. That is the claim on the ground that he had good reason to believe he was operating a valid claim that was not within the Uncompangre Reservation, according to the recognized survey made by the Government in 1884-5.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The evidence in the case is all ex parte; it all comes from his side. Did the Government have an opportunity to introduce any evidence to show he was not acting in good faith, because this is rather a dangerous precedent for a man to enter upon Government property and mine, and when required to pay back to the Government he should come back and have Congress make an appropriation for the profit he had made? It is quite dangerous.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. The strength of this claim, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, consists in this, that a resurvey of the reservation was made in 1898, bringing within the reservation this claim, which had been located and recorded according to law, and which was understood to be without the reservation and was without the reservation as first surveyed and

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman did not Government officials who had charge of the transaction know all of these facts at the time this suit was instituted and prosecuted to a conclusion?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I can not say as to that, but I state the fact to be that Mr. Moon, acting upon the recognized survey of the Government, was fully justified in the conclusion that his lease was of a lawful mining claim, and that he was engaged in a legitimate business. He certainly had no reason to expect any litigation from the Government. By the judgment obtained against him he not only suffers a loss of the net value of the mineral, but the Government deprives him of the value of the labor in mining, transporting, and marketing it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the House of Representatives, after the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice have secured a judgment against a man, ought to favorably act upon a claim before a report of the claim has been printed and filed?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. This is a Senate bill, and the Senate report is printed and sets forth fully the reasons for this claim. The House report contains no additional information, and I am sure shows a just and equitable claim.

Mr. MANN. I have not been able to obtain a copy of the

Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the votes by which all of these bills have been passed, and ask that that motion lay on the table.

Without objection, it is so ordered. The SPEAKER.

There was no objection.

M. A. JOHNSON.

The SPEAKER. In regard to the bill (H. R. 15850) for the relief of M. A. Johnson, the House passed to-day a similar Senate bill to this House bill which passed yesterday, but it has not yet been reported from the desk as enrolled.

Mr. MANN. Is this the bill that we passed the resolution

The SPEAKER. No; it is another one.

Mr. MANN. Is the bill still in the hands of the House? The SPEAKER. Yes. Mr. WILLIAMS. It is identical to the Senate bill, Mr.

Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Identical.

Then, on motion of Mr. Mann, by unanimous consent, the bill H. R. 15850 was taken from the Speaker's table, and the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed was reconsidered, and the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers was discharged from further consideration of the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated December 4, 1906, submitting a copy of a report of a joint committee of the Treasury and Post-Office Departments in relation to the destruction of certain papers used in the money-order department, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR SUNDAY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] will act as Speaker during the services in memory of the late Senator BATE to be held to-morrow.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

So the House, in accordance with its previous order (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m. to-

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 20, 1907.

The House met at 2 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Hon. Thetus W. Sims, of Tennessee, Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, we bless and adore Thy holy name for Thy goodness and for Thy wonderful works to the children of men. Especially do we thank Thee for the pure, the noble, the true, the great men whom Thou hast raised up in every age of the world's history as beacon lights to guide their successive generations onward and upward to higher civilization. We are here to-day to commemorate the life and character of such a man, one who by dint of his devotion to duty rose step by step to eminence and leadership; a soldier brave and valiant in two wars; a student ever seeking truth; a statesman working for the good of his countrymen. We bless Thee for what he did, yet more for what he was. His character will live and be a special guide to those who shall come after him to high living and to noble life. Bless and comfort, we pray Thee, the bereaved, those who mourn his loss. A loving father, a faithful husband, a dutiful son, beautiful in his devotion to his mother, seeking religion at the same altar where she worshiped, baptized in the same stream where she was baptized, living always near to Thee. O God, we pray Thee to comfort the living with the blessed hope that some time, somewhere, they will go to him and dwell forever in his presence. And peans of praise we will ever give to Thee. In Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted, the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of the Hon. W. B. BATE, late Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished career and his great service to his country as a United States Senator, the House, at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Journed.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those Members who are absent and unable to be present and speak to-day may have leave to print remarks in the Record on the life and character of the late Senator Bare, and those who speak may extend their remarks, if they so desire.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Tennessee will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, William Brimage BATE was born October 7, 1826, near Bledsoe Lick, Castalian Springs, Sumner County, Tenn., and died March 9, 1905, at 6 a. m., in his apartments, Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C., having only a few days before, for the fourth time, taken the oath as Senator from the State of Tennessee.

He received his early education in a school, known then as "Rural Academy," near his birthplace. Between sessions he worked on the farm. His father, James H. Bate, a pioneer, died when this son was about 15 years of age. Of these pioneers

Gen. Andrew Jackson says:

A man who is born and reared amongst this people deserves but little credit for being a soldier and a gentleman, for he can't help it.

Senator BATE was both.

After the death of his father, young BATE continued to work on the farm and attend the country school for about two years, when he sought a wider field of action, and next we hear of him employed as a "second clerk" on the Saladin, a boat ply-ing the Cumberland and Mississippi rivers between Nashville, Tenn., and New Orleans. He was thus employed when this boat, in 1846, collided with and sank the Congress on the Mississippi River near Washington Point.

When the Mexican war began with the United States he was in New Orleans, where, May 15, 1846, he joined the army of his native country to serve six months, which he did, and was "honorably mustered out at New Orleans August 14, 1846, with his regiment and company." The press states that he was the first Tennessean to reach the scene of hostilities.

On October 2, 1847, at Nashville, Tenn., he reentered the "service, returned to Mexico, did his duty well, and was again honorably mustered out at Memphis, Tenn., July 22, 1848, with his regiment and company."

Desiring to get, if possible, correct information of at least the main features of his military record, my request for this intelligence was promptly honored by the War Department, through its very efficient Military Secretary, as shown by the following correspondence:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 16, 1996.

Hon. John W. Gaines, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 14th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement of the military service of the late Senator William B. Bate.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH, The Military Secretary.

MEXICAN WAR.

Statement of the military service of William B. Bate, war with Mexico.

WILLIAM B. BATE was mustered into the service of the United States at New Orleans, La., May 15, 1846, as a sergeant in Company F. Fourth Louisiana Infantry, to serve six months. The regiment arrived at Brazos Santiago May 26, 1846, and at Lomita, Mexico, June 4, 1846. He was honorably mustered out of service with his company and regiment as a private at New Orleans, La., August 14, 1846.

He reentered the service at Nashville, Tenn., October 2, 1847, as a private in Company I, Third Tennessee Infantry, commanded by Col. Benjamin F. Cheatham, to serve during the war, and was promoted to be first lieutenant of the same company October 8, 1847. He accompanied his regiment to Mexico, in which country it was stationed at the City of Mexico, Veracruz, Jalapa, Puebla, and Molino del Rey. Returning to the United States, he was honorably mustered out with his company and regiment at Memphis, Tenn., July 22, 1848.

We see when his country no languar needed his military and states.

We see, when his country no longer needed his military services, he returned to the civic circle of life and established and edited at Gallatin, Tenn., a weekly newspaper called the "Tenth

He soon attracted the attention of the people, in fact, throughout his life he was their champion.

When about 23 years old he served one term-1849-50in the lower house of the Tennessee legislature. His campaign for this office became historic, and is, with pride, often recalled by the old citizens of middle Tennessee. There were nine candidates, but Lieutenant Bate's main competitor was the late Gen. George Maney, a gentleman of great natural ability, scholarly, and a fluent speaker. They were both young men of great promise, but the young lieutenant was elected.

Concluding his legislative services, he entered the noted Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn., from which he graduated in 1852. He formed a partnership with Maj. George W. Winchester, one of Tennessee's most gifted speakers and able lawyers, and began the practice of his profession at Gallatin, Tenn. Two years thereafter he was elected attorney-general for the circuit composed of Davidson, Sumner, and Wilson counties, and served from 1854 to 1860.

While yet attorney-general he was tendered by the Democrats the nomination for Congress, but declined the honor, and served his full term, six years, in the office to which he had asked the people to elect him.

While thus engaged he met at the bar many eminent lawyers of middle Tennessee, and particularly at Nashville, Franklin,

In speaking of his record in this office, Col. Baxter Smith, an ex-Confederate soldier and prominent lawyer of Nashville, formerly of Gallatin, who, from his boyhood, knew General Bate, thus writes me:

It was characteristic of him to be indefatigable in the preparation of his cases for trial, and with his knowledge of men and his quick perception he was always able to present the State's side of the case in the most favorable attitude. As a result he was able to cope with the most distinguished of lawyers in the many important cases he prosecuted, and he went out of the office having added greatly to his reputation.

General Bate did not pose as, nor was he considered, a great lawyer, but he was a great advocate and a wonderfully successful practitioner. He marshaled the facts of and presented his case, as he did in his public speeches, with great force and effect. Throughout the man's life there was a ring of persuasive sincerity in his voice that caught the ear; there was an appealing sense of justice in his words that touched the hearts of his hearers, whether juries or the people of Tennessee, whom he so often addressed. These charming characteristics and his manly and chivalric mannerism, with the close study that he always gave any subject he discussed, made him a formidable antagonist at the bar, on the hustings, and in the Senate of the United States.

On January 17, 1856, Lieutenant Bate was married to Miss Julia Peete, of Huntsville, Ala., who, with their two daughters, Mrs. Susan Bate Childs and Mrs. Mazie Bate Mastin, survive him.

General Bate was an intense Democrat of the Calhoun school. He was often called on to make political speeches in many, if not all, of the stirring campaigns that occurred in Tennessee from his advent in public life, which we see began when he was about twenty and three years of age. He was a candidate in his Congressional district for elector on the Breckinridge and Lane ticket in 1860. His opponent was Col. E. I. Golliday, of Lebanon, Tenn., one of the most eloquent speakers in the State, who afterwards served as a Member of Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of Tennessee. In this campaign Colonel Smith says: "General Bate acquitted himself, as a political speaker, with entire satisfaction to his friends."

In 1861, as might have been expected, General Bate cast his fortunes of war with his native State, and was among the first Tennesseans to enlist in the Confederate service, and went to

Of his Confederate record, General Ainsworth writes me as

CIVIL WAR.

WILLIAM B. BATE was elected colonel of the Second Tennessee Infantry, Provisional Army, May 6, 1861, and was appointed to that position by the President of the Confederate States, to take rank April 27, 1861; was promoted to be brigadier-general, Provisional Army, October 3, 1862, and to major-general, Provisional Army, February 23, 1864.

From May 26, 1861, to July 18, 1861, Colonel BATE and his regiment performed duty at Fredericksburg, Brookes Station, and other points between the Potomac and Rappahannock rivers, in the military department of Fredericksburg, bearing a part in resisting an attack by Union naval vessels on the Confederate batteries at Aquia Creek June 1, 1861.

Of Colonel BATE's service on this occasion Col. Daniel Ruggles, his superior commander, says:

"The conduct of my entire force, under the command of Colonel BATE, of the Walker Legion, until my arrival on the field was admirable throughout the day."

Another efficer, writing from Aquia Creek to the Confederate secretary of war, under date of June 1, 1861, says:

"Colonel BATE has been assigned the command of the brigade here, composed of his own regiment and the Virginia troops present, and is working with a zeal consistent with the energy and enthusiasm of his nature."

The Second Tennessee was on the field of the first battle of Buil Rug working with a zear consistent with the cheery and entinushasm of his nature."

The Second Tennessee was on the field of the first battle of Bull Run, fought July 21, 1861, as a part of Brig. Gen. T. H. Holmes's brigade, but it did not become actively engaged with the enemy. Soon afterwards the regiment returned to the line of the Potomac and was stationed at Evansport, Va., where it confronted the Union forces, occupying the Maryland side of the river until February, 1862. About the middle of that month a sufficient number of its members having reenlisted for the war, and thus insured the continuation of the organization beyond its first year's enlistment, Colonel Bate conducted the reenlisted men to Tennessee on a furlough granted until April 1, 1862.

The regiment was reorganized at Corinth, Miss., April 3, 1862, and, under the command of Colonel Bate, participated in the battle of Shiloh, Tenn., April 6, 1862. General Cleburne, the brigade commander, in his official report, refers to the regiment and its commander as follows:

as follows:

"Here the Second Tennessee, coming up on the left, charged through a murderous cross fire. The gallant major * * * fell mortally wounded, and the colonel, W. B. Bate, had his leg broken by a minie ball. Tennessee can never mourn for a nobler band than fell this day in her Second Regiment."

Under date of November 22, 1862, Gen. Braxton Bragg, commanding the army of Tennessee, reported to the adjutant and inspector-general, Confederate States army, that "Bate and * * are not likely to return to field duty for months." On February 23, 1863, Brigadier-General Bate, then in temporary command of the district of the Tennessee, was assigned to duty with Lieutenant-General Polk's corps and, on March 12, 1863, was placed in command of a brigade in Stewart's division. He subsequently bore a part in the Tullahoma campaign, being engaged in action at Hoover's Gap, Tennessee, June 24–26, 1863. He also participated, as a brigade commander, in the succeeding campaign of Chickamauga. Regarding his services in the battle of Chickamauga, September 19 and 20, 1863, General Stewart, the division commander, says:

of Chickamauga. Regarding his services in the battle of Chickamauga, September 19 and 20, 1863, General Stewart, the division commander, says:

"I desire to express my high appreciation of Brigadier-Generals Brown, Bate, and Clayton, and of their respective commands. Representing the three States of Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee, they vied with each other in deeds of high and noble daring. The Confederacy has nowhere braver defenders led by more skillful commanders."

He continued to command a brigade in the ensuing Chattanooga-Ringgold campaign until November 19, 1863, on which date, by virtue of seniority of rank, he was placed in command of Breckinridge's Division, which he commanded in the battle of Missionary Ridge, November 25, 1863, and in covering the retreat of the Confederate army therefrom. General Bragg, the army commander, in his official report, says:

"Brigadier-Generals * * * and Bate * * * were distinguished for coolness, gallantry, and successful conduct throughout the engagements and in the rear guard on the retreat."

On February 27, 1864, while at Dalton, Ga., Major-General Bate was regularly assigned to the command of Breckinridge's Division, which was thereafter designated as "Bate's Division."

In opposing General Sherman's advance on Atlanta; with General Hood's northward movement, culminating in the battles of Franklin and Nashville; and in the campaign of the Carolinas, terminating in the surrender of General Johnston's army at Durnham station, N. C., April 26, 1865, General Bate bore an active part, being wounded in front of Atlanta August 10, 1864. All of the troops of Cheatham's corps engaged in the battle of Bentonville, N. C., March 19, 1865, were commanded by General Bate. He was paroled at Greensboro, N. C., May 1, 1865.

Official statement furnished to Hon. John W. Gaines, House of Representatives, June 16, 1906.

The Military Secretary.

Being a mere child during the civil war, I have no personal knowledge of the fortitude and many heroic deeds of General BATE during that conflict, but have the good fortune of being able to present to-day, in pleasing detail, from the pen of another, some of his heroic acts in that unfortunate and bloody struggle.

Dr. William J. McMurray, who was first lieutenant in Company B, Twentieth Tennessee Infantry, often called by General BATE his "Tenth Infantry Legion," in the Nashville American of March 10, 1905, writes most interestingly of the brilliant military career of General BATE. Doctor McMurray, whom I well knew, was himself a brave Confederate soldier, and to his recent death a distinguished physician of Nashville. Doctor McMurray says:

In May, 1861, when the clouds of war began to hang low, General Bate offered his services to the South and joined its forces as a private. He was at once elected captain and then colonel of that famous Second Tennessee Infantry Regiment.

His last a great battle was that of Shiloh, where he shared the work of Cleburne's brigade of Hardee's corps on the extreme left of the Confederate lines. Here he bravely led his regiment through a murderous fire, when he fell severely wounded, a minié ball breaking both bones of his leg and cutting an artery under his knee. His horse was killed at that same time.

MADE A BRIGADIEE.

MADE A BRIGADIER.

His gallantry and that of his regiment was so marked that he was honorably mentioned in the reports of both Generals Cleburne and Hardee, and on October 3, 1862, he was promoted to brigadier-general, and on this spot where he fell his old regiment has erected a monument.

monument.

On account of his wound he was put in temporary command of the district of northern Alabama. In February, 1863, he was again assigned to the field and put in command of Raines's brigade of Polk's corps, General Raines having been killed in the battle of Murfreesboro, and in June, 1863, he was removed from this brigade and assigned to a newly formed brigade, composed of the Fifty-eighth Alabama, Thirty-seventh Georgia, Fiftenth, Thirty-seventh, and Twentieth Tennessee regiments, and Caswell's Georgia Battalion, and assigned to the division of the grand old hero, A. P. Stewart, Company B, Twentieth Tennessee Infantry, his Tenth Infantry Legion.

He took part in the Tullahoma campaign with much credit.

AT HOOVERS GAP.

At the battle of Hoover's Gap, on June 23, 1863, General Bate, with the Twentieth Tennessee Regiment and the little Georgia battalion, fought for two hours two brigades of Federals, and when other reenforcements came up, which was the remainder of his brigade, General Stewart arriving upon the field about nightfall, found General Bate in command with a flesh wound in his leg, but still on the firing line. General Rosencrans, in his official report, says this little handful of soldiers under Bate delayed the left wing of his army for thirty-six hours and prevented him from getting possession of Bragg's communications and forcing him to a disastrous battle.

It was about this time that the political parties of Tennessee offered General Bate the nomination for governor of Tennessee, which would take him from the field, but he declined and said he could not accept a civil position while he could serve his people upon the field.

OPENED FIRE AT CHICKAMAUGA.

General Bate next took a prominent part in the battle of Chickamauga; he fired the first gun in that historic struggle, on the banks of the river of death, on Friday evening, September 18, driving the Federals from Thedfords Ford, crossing that stream the next morning, and about 2 p. m. went into action as a part of the Confederate reserve. During this first charge of Stewart's division, which was composed of the brigades of Brown, Clayton, and Bate, the Federal right center was broken for the first time, and the enemy was driven back for more than 1 mile down by the Kelly house, on across the Rossville road, down to the tanyard, in the Dyer field, and a glance at the map of that field will show that Bate led his men farther to the front than any other Confederate troops that day.

HORSES KILLED UNDER HIM.

The next day Bate and his men participated in that death struggle. All day long the battle raged until finally Snodgrass Hill was captured, and when that great blue mass slid down from the northern slope of Snodgrass Hill the Eufaula battery was attached to Bate's brigade that had fired the first gun of the battle on Friday evening and fired the last gun on Sunday evening.

In this engagement Bate's brigade entered the fight with 1,055 muskets and had killed and wounded 607. Every field officer in his brigade was killed or wounded but two or three.

MADE MAJOR-GENERAL.

After this battle President Davis followed in the track where Bate and his men fought; and in less than thirty days Brigadier-General Bate, of infantry, was offered a major-general's commission of cavalry. At the battle of Missionary Ridge General Bate commanded Breckinridge's old division just east of the road that led by Bragg's head-

Throughout the Georgia campaign of one hundred days' fight he commanded his division in Hardee's corps. At Resaca he drove back every attempt of the enemy, and at Dallas, Ga., he assaulted Logan's corps in their trenches. On the 22d of July he led the flank movement under Hardee which brought on the famous battle of Atlanta, in which General McPherson was killed.

On the 6th of August, with his division alone, he fought the battle of Eutaw Creek that checked the right-flank movement of the enemy around Atlanta, capturing several flags, and punishing the enemy very severely in this engagement. He was shot through the knee and sent to the hospital at Barnesville, Ga. He recovered from this wound just in time to join Hood in his ill-fated campaign in Tennessee.

AT BLOODY FRANKLIN.

AT BLOODY FRANKLIN.

In this campaign he commanded a division in Cheatham's corps, which was Hardee's old corps, and was with this corps when the great mistake was made at Spring Hill, and the next day led his division upon the bloody works at Franklin, where many of his men gained the interior of the enemy's works and held them until the Yankees retreated. Next morning after the battle General Hood ordered General Bate to take the remnant of his division and proceed across the country to the Nashville and Chattanooga Rallroad and destroy all the blockhouses and bridges between Murfreesboro and Nashville. He was then ordered to rejoin Hood at Nashville, which was done only a few days before the battle of Nashville.

It was in this engagement his division was nearly annihilated. While at the angle on that line his Tennesseans were demolished and his Georgians fought until they were surrounded on three sides, yet Bate, with crutch in hand, rode up and down his line urging his men to hold fast. He retreated out of Tennessee with Hood and finally followed Joe Johnston into the Carolinas, and at the battle of Bentonville, the last battle note of the war, General Bate commanded the Federal earthworks, overrun them, driving the enemy back and capturing many prisoners. In this, the last battle and dying agony of the Confederacy, Gen. WILLIAM B. Bate, with crutch in hand and suffering from many wounds, was a conspicuous figure. He stood here literally in the last ditch.

General Bate returned to Nashville after the war and enjoyed a wounds, was a composite of the war and enjoyed a ditch.

General Bate returned to Nashville after the war and enjoyed a lucrative practice in the law, was twice elected governor of the State, and four times sent by an appreciative people to the United States Senate, the greatest honor within their gift.

No braver soldier ever unsheathed a sword or shouldered a gun than General Bate. Whether walking or riding, sick or well, mangled on the battlefield, or hobbling on crutches, defying the imperious surgeon's knife, or facing the mowing grapeshot, he was the personification of dauntless courage, demanding his rights as he saw them, courting death at every turn, rather than be unfaithful in the least, act a coward in the slightest, or fall short of the full measure of duty well done.

Ever cautious, studious, and thoughtful before arriving at his conclusions, whether the question concerned a civic, military, or legislative responsibility, he always had an opinion as to what was right and what was wrong, and unbendingly and immovably stood for what he thought was right. He never bent the truth nor swerved in doing, or trying to do, his full duty, regardless of the consequences.

He never struck below the belt. He was always open, frank, with friend or foe, a gentleman of the very highest honor, and as far from fraternizing at any time, anywhere, with any man who fell short of this high standard as any man who was ever honored by State or nation.

So severe was his wound received at Shiloh that the Army surgeon informed General Bate that he must amputate his leg to save his life. But General BATE said it should not be done. The surgeon came to perform the operation, and General Bate drew his pistol and said to the surgeon that he would kill him if he undertook to do so. General Bate was victorious, saved his leg, but ever afterwards walked lame and almost uniformly with a heavy hickory stick.

His friends thought after this wound that he would be unfit for active duty in the field, and, in 1863, urged him to accept the nomination for the governorship of Tennessee, but he refused and replied in the following remarkably characteristic

WARTRACE, July 17, 1863.

To Mesers. Galloway, Rice, Winchester, Brown, and others.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your telegram of to-day I beg to say that, however flattering the honor you suggest and to which I am not insensible, there is a duty that rises above it. As a son of Tennessee and a southern soldier, I would feel dishonored in this hour of trial to quit the field. No, sirs; while an army foe treads our soil and I can fire a shot or draw a blade I will take no civic honor. I had rather, amid her misfortunes, be the defender than the governor of Tennessee. Let me exhort to harmony.

Respectfully,

W. B. BATE.

I dare say he never sought, as a Mexican or Confederate soldier, as a private or major-general, any position of security, if duty called him elsewhere. He was the kind of a man who would resolve every doubt against himself in deciding on what his full duty was as a citizen, on the battlefield, or in any civic position he ever filled.

He was amongst the first Tennesseans to enlist as a Federal soldier in the Mexican war. He was one of the first Tennesseans to enlist as a Confederate soldier in the civil war. each of these wars he fought to the last—until the bloody sword had settled the questions in dispute. And when death And when death touched him with the harness still on he would have then died for his country if it had been necessary. The man's whole life shows that this is not an extravagant statement.

Though the cause of the Confederacy was to him always an absolutely just cause—a fight for equal rights for equal Stateshe accepted the arbitrament of the sword in 1865, and like a manly and patriotic man, that he was, stood sponsor for a reunited country in fact and law, and died as he wished-in the service of his native State and country, a wish his State had gratified by electing him the fourth time to the Senate at the advanced age of 79 years, and over one of Tennessee's most gifted statesmen.

Having been designated by the Secretary of War as one of those to speak for Confederates at the dedication of Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, General BATE delivered a most memorable speech, which I hope that every member of Congress, and every man, woman, and child in this Republic may at an early day impartially read and study.

General BATE, in part, said:

The principles in defense of which the South accepted battle were found in the Constitution. Whatever may be the right or the wrong, the South believed she was right, and the principles in defense of which the South accepted battle, after peaceably seceding from the Union, were found in the Constitution and taught by the fathers. The South claimed and asked nothing more than equal rights, not of persons only, but of States, equal privileges in all parts of the Union; equal protection wherever the flag floated to every person and to every species of property recognized by any State. Less than that was subordination, not equality.

tion wherever the flag floated to every person and to every species of property recognized by any State. Less than that was subordination, not equality.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, it may be seen that the facts of history, the writings of the founders of our Federal system, the reservations of the States when ratifying the Constitution, and, it may be said, the resolutions and platforms of political parties, and the course of administration up to that time, all united to sustain the theory that our Federal Union was a compact of confederation from which any State could peaceably withdraw.

When equal rights and equal privileges were denied to the South, an appeal to the court of last resort between sovereign States became absolutely necessary—an appeal to war—that tribunal of force whose judgment is final, whether just or otherwise. In its forum the States joined issue, and when its decree was found against the South we bowed to it as final, without consenting to it as just or righteous. Its irreversible result will not again be questioned, but is accepted with a solemn sense of duty, overcast with natural and unavoidable sorrow.

with a solemn sense of duty, overcast with natural and unavoidable sorrow.

It now becomes our duty, as ex-Confederate soldiers, to maintain the Government with true faith, and defend the flag of our country with the same courage and devotion that we gave to our "little cross of St. Andrew."

That, Mr. Chairman, is the essence of the unvarnished story of the causes which led to our civil war. We take no exceptions to the sense of duty which impelled the people of the North to peril all of the Constitution, all of material wealth, and that wider wealth of individual life to maintain the union of States, for it but shows their love and deep devotion to the Union. The South proffers at the bar of history and in the forum of conscience a rectitude of motive and a warrant of law not less moral and righteous than all that animated the North.

Publicists may draw distinctions between just and unjust wars, but in civil conflicts for inalienable right, our civil war established beyond controversy that the North was the stronger in all the materials of war and had vastly greater facilities for making them available, having, besides internal resources, the outside world to draw from; but beyond that human reason can draw no rightful conclusion, and the right or wrong is left to impartial history.

And, Mr. Chairman, I have not the least apprehension that impartial history will fail to recognize the justification of the South in the records of our country and find that, according to the faith that was in her people, and their judgment made up from that standpoint, there was no alternative left in 1861 but to appeal to arms; and I affirm, Mr. Chairman, with equal confidence, that any comparisons of the two sections, from the earliest times to the present day, will not find the South to have been less patriotic or less solicitous for the honor, glory, and welfare of the Union.

BLESSING OF PEACE.

Among the thousands of blessings with which a kind Providence has crowned our country there is one which of all others we are prone least to appreciate—the blessing of peace. The pomp of war, its imposing spectacles, its glittering array, the measured tread of armed men, and the neigh of the war horse—"as he smelleth the battle from afar, and to the trumpet saith ha! "—captivate the eye and intoxicate the senses, while the halo of military glory quenches the pulsation of humanity and veils from sight the widowed mother and the weeping orphan kneeling on the bloody hearthstone.

We men from yonder battlefields know what war is, and while holding ourselves ever ready to touch elbows in line of battle against foreign foes, our experience, our courage, and our patriotism warn us to "beware of entrance to a quarrel."

The blood and carnage of 1861–1865 should not be repeated. No thoughtful man, however, is free from grave apprehensions when he sees the ugly signs outcrop here and there and hang ominously over the destiny of our country. We even now see the faint yet vivid flashes and hear the thunder in the distance, and pray that the storm may pass harmless.

and hear the thunder in the distance, and pray that the storm may pass harmless.

When the time comes, which we pray may never come, that calls our men to battle, the record of the past gives promise and assurance to the future that the descendants of the men who followed Bragg on yonder field will be as responsive to the call, as valiant in the fight, and as vigorous in the pursuit as the children of those who rallied under Rosecrans.

And should danger come. I believe the conservative South may yet Rosecrans.

And should danger come, I believe the conservative South may yet prove to be the rod that will conduct the fiery bolt harmless to the earth, and when liberty takes her flight, if she ever should, from this country, her last resting place will be in our Constitution-defending South.

We of the South love our comrades with no less devotion; we see in them no less courage, honor, manliness, and patriotism than you recognize in your fellow-soidlers. To the men of the South their cause was not less holy, not less sacred, not less rightful than you esteem that for which your armies fought.

Col. James W. Blackmore, a life-long friend, leading lawyer and citizen of Gallatin, Tenn., in a recent letter to me says:

After the surrender of the Confederate army General BATE came home and found the property he owned had been attached for security debts, and he was left with but little to start on. But he went to Nashville and began the practice of law there, and soon won distinction in his profession and gained a remunerative practice.

After the civil war and for many years previous to his election as governor of Tennessee he practiced law in Nashville in partnership with Col. Frank E. Williams, a very able lawyer. He never practiced his profession after he was elected governor or to the United States Senate. He seemed to delight in giving his whole time to the public.

General Bate was a man in whom the people must have had and did have implicit confidence, for he was almost continuously filling, with or without compensation, some place of distinction and trust. He was a delegate to the Democratic national convention in 1868, some of his brother delegates being the late lamented John F. House, A. O. P. Nicholson, Thomas A. R. Nelson, and Nathan Bedford Forrest. Gen. W. B. Bate served as a member of the committee on organization, which made the Hon. Horatio Seymour president of the convention, and A. O. P. Nicholson vice-president, and Joseph H. Thompson secretary for the State of Tennessee. General BATE was also one of the committee to inform the nominees of their nomination.

Judge Nelson, for the Tennessee delegation, nominated Andrew Johnson for President, and for the first six ballots he received the full vote of this delegation and for several times thereafter.

As further evidence of General Bate's loyalty and sincere devotion to a reunited people, one country, and one flag, we have only to glance over the balloting of this historic convention and see the entire Tennessee delegation casting their vote for Franklin Pierce, George H. Pendleton, W. S. Hancock, Thomas A. Hendricks, and Horatio Seymour for the Presidential nomination, all of whom had opposed the cause of the Confederacy on the field of battle, in the forum, or on the stump. And this only three years after the smoke of battle had lifted from the stricken Southland.

On the twelfth ballot the first and only vote cast for George B. McClellan was given by Tennessee "midst cheers and great applause," the balance of the votes being divided between Johnson and Pendleton. On the thirteenth ballot the vote was unchanged, except one cast for Franklin Pierce. On the four-teenth ballot the vote was equally divided between Hancock and Pendleton. On the fifteenth it stood half for Johnson and half for Pendleton. On the sixteenth and seventeenth ballots the vote stood five and one-half for Johnson and the balance for Pendleton. But on the eighteenth, when "Tennessee" called, the chairman of the delegation said:

The State of Tennessee, faithful to him who has ever been faithful to our country, casts her united vote for Andrew Johnson.

cast for Hancock amidst applause. On the twenty-first ballot, the vote stood five for Johnson, two and one-half for Hancock, one-half for Hendricks, one-half for McClellan, two and one-half not voting. On the twenty-second ballot, Tennessee cast three and one-half votes for Hancock, one and one-half for Hendricks, one for Seymour, and four for Johnson. On the first roll call Ohio cast twenty-one votes for Seymour, and Tennessee one; total, twenty-two. Before the balloting concluded, New Jersey, West Virginia, Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, Maine, and Georgia changed their votes to Seymour and he was nominated.

When nominations for Vice-President were presented and the name of Tennessee was called, the chairman of the Tennessee delegation said:

Mr. Chairman, it is the pleasure of the Tennessee delegation that the vote of the State of Tennessee shall be cast by a distinguished southern soldier, whom I have the honor to present to the convention—N. B. Forrest. [Great applause.]

Whereupon General Forrest said:

I have the pleasure, sir, to cast the vote of Tennessee for General air, and I wish to take this occasion to thank the delegates here for e kind and uniformly courteous treatment that the southern deletes have received at this convention. [Great cheering.]

This convention met July 4, 1868, and assembled at Tammany

For twelve years General Bate served as a member of the national Democratic executive committee.

In 1875 he was defeated for the United States Senate by a narrow margin. On one ballot he was elected by one vote, but " by a change of one vote before the result could be announced there was a tie as against the combined vote of ex-President Andrew Johnson and Mr. Edwin H. Ewing. Finally Mr. Johnson was elected.

General Bate was elector for the State at large on the Tilden and Hendricks ticket, in 1876, and made a thorough canvass of the State. He always loyally supported the nominees of the Democratic party and its platforms. He was a "strict con-structionist" of the old school, a States rights advocate of unsuspected fidelity.

I distinctly remember that during his first or second campaign—his second, I think—for governor, the Democratic platform indorsed and demanded the continuation of a railroad rate-fixing commission law, then unpopular. Throughout a laborous campaign General Bate stood squarely on this platform. It appeared for a little while as though he would be defeated because of his fixed determination to stand by this law and for his party platform.

About this time one of Tennessee's greatest sons, lawyers, public speakers, writers, and authors, Col. Arthur S. Colyar, Scratch the platform and vote for the man.

This keen discrimination from such a high source rang throughout Tennessee and was on everyone's lips. eral Bate stuck to his party platform, was reelected, a personal triumph, for a legislature was at the same time selected which passed a bill to repeal this law, which met with a prompt and vigorous veto from Governor Bate, but the legislature nevertheless passed the bill over his veto.

The Hon. Park Marshall, State senator of Tennessee, and I think during the gubernatorial administration of General BATE and afterwards intimately associated with him in Washington City in a published letter briefly reviews General Bate's record as governor. After quoting General Bate's record as governor. After quoting General Bate's immortal telegram from Wartrace, July 17, 1863, already cited, declining the honor of a nomination for governor, Mr. Marshall says:

Franklin Pierce, George H. Pendleton, W. S. Hancock, Thomas A. Hendricks, and Horatio Seymour for the Presidential nomination, all of whom had opposed the cause of the Confederacy only three years after the smoke of battle had lifted from the tricken Southland.

On the twelfth ballot the first and only vote cast for George 3. McClellan was given by Tennessee "midst cheers and great upplause," the balance of the votes being divided between Johnson and Pendleton. On the thirteenth ballot the vote was unhanged, except one cast for Franklin Pierce. On the fourenth ballot the vote was equally divided between Hancock and Pendleton. On the sixteenth and seventeenth ballots the rote stood five and one-half for Johnson and the balance for Pendleton. On the eighteenth, when "Tennessee" was alled, the chairman of the delegation said:

The State of Tennessee, faithful to him who has ever been faithful to mire country, casts her united vote for Andrew Johnson.

In 1882 the split had shown no signs whatever of mending while the debt itself was growing apace. It was at this time that the Democratic party turned to General Barra, who did not seek the office, and appealed to him as a strong and suit, and such was the ability displayed by him in his debates on the stump and such the confidence he inspired that the people everywhere crowded together to hear him, and he was elected by 27,000 majority. This was the manner of W. B. So exemplary and satisfactory was the administration of Governor Bare the Democrats elected him to the United States Senate in 1887. He was reelected in 1893 and in 1899 and 1905, having taken his seat for the fourth time in that body March 4.

just five days before his death.

His long service in the Senate appears in the official record, open to everyone. It speaks for itself, as his deeds always spoke for him, whether in peace or war. He was constant, in-telligent, efficient, loyal, and patriotic. His devotion to duty, to that unusually high standard he set and maintained, was superb, and won for him the confidence and respect of his colleagues and the admiration and applause of the people of Tennessee regardless of party.

They well knew they could retire at any hour, day or night, and know that he would be found promptly at his post, ready to toe the mark. His private and public deeds are above suspicion; his record spotless. The old and young of this or any land can profitably read and study his history and emulate his illustrious example.

No private or public monument need be erected to his memory. His life, his teachings, his deeds, these, his self-erected monument, constructed day by day, will last as long as the human eye can read and unseared consciences shall dwell in the hearts of civilized man.

He was a tender and considerate husband and father. devotion to his wife-"my cheerful companion and my faithful comforter, through war and peace, through weal and woe, through good and evil fortune"—was a beautiful and continuous courtship, so much so as to be often the subject of the happiest comment.

He was charitable without ostentation. He was a faithful church attendant.

Although his citizenship and home were in Nashville, a city studded with schools, colleges, and churches, he clung with filial devotion to his old homestead about Castalian Springs, some 40 miles from Nashville. A few years before his death he joined the Baptist Church, of which his mother had been a member, and in the same chapel in which she had worshiped down to her death, located near the scenes of his childhood. He wished to be and was baptized at the same place, in the same little stream in which his mother, years before, had been immersed. This was all done without the people of Nashville, a city of 150,000 people, knowing anything about it for some time There were small and large Baptist churches in afterwards. Nashville that were thoroughly religiously conducted, whose membership was composed of his intimate friends and comrades, to whom he was always devoted.

This unusual act must have been prompted by his devotion to that "spot of sunshine" where he was born and reared and reverence for mother, mother's church, and her old church house. He followed mother's example, stepped in mother's footprints down to the little stream and down into the very pool where she years before was baptized. All this, and the quiet, modest way in which he had it done, is, I believe, without precedent. Thus he paid homage at least to his mother, and exhibited unparalleled respect to this modest chapel, where perhaps he first heard mother lisp her prayers for husband, daughters, and sons; for country, God, and truth.

The plain and devout minister who received him into this church tenderly and with modest pride alluded to this incident in the religious exercises over the remains of Senator Bate, as they lay covered in a wilderness of flowers offered by the legis-lature of Tennessee and the people themselves from throughout his native State, who paid last and fitting respect to his memory in the house of representatives of the State of Tennessee, where fifty-six years before, in the splendor of his young manhood, he had served as one of their lawmakers.

His last and fatal illness was brought about from exposure in attending the inaugural ceremonies at the national capital, March 4, 1905. I personally warned him against going out in the severe cold that day, but he promptly replied, as he passed on out of the Chamber to the platform: "I think I should go, out of respect to the President. I think it is my duty, sir;" and continued forward with his brother Senators and lis-tened throughout to the inaugural address of President Roosevelt.

He was soon stricken with a severe cold and died in less than five days thereafter. Thus we see this man did finally sacrifice his life in doing what he considered his full duty.

His mind was clear to the last. He fully realized that death was soon to close his earthly career, but he was ready. He was calm and met in his weakness his last enemy as he had met others in his strength, with clean hands, unflinching courage, clear conscience, and full of hope. With a few friends and his devoted wife about his bedside, he bade them a final adieu, and then thought of far away Tennessee and friends that had gone to their final rest, and said: "I am dying. When I am dead take me back to Tennessee and bury me at Mount Olivet among my friends."

This was done. In the family burying ground in that beautiful city of the dead, and, as it happened, in the shadow of the Confederate shaft, that silent witness of his heroic deeds and those of his Confederate comrades, his remains rest to await the resurrection morn. Repeating the words of one of his old comrades, Col. George B. Guild-

The greensward of Mount Olivet will never hide a nobler, grander character than Senator William B. Bate; the recital of his manly career as a public servant is an inspiration now and will be for coming years. Courtly gentleman, public-spirited citizen, brave soldier, farewell!

Mr. Speaker, in his death many an humble, plain man, woman, and child in Tennessee has lost a ready and generous sponsor; the State of Tennessee has lost one of its purest citizens and public servants; the Republic has lost one of its most capable and incorruptible Senators.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, Senator Bate was a typical southern man. He was a typical southern soldier. He was a typical southern politician. He was a Democrat of the old school; a Democrat who began his career and ended his career with knowledge and faith in the old time-honored principles of the Democratic party. He believed in those principles, and could he have shaped the policy of his party it would have stood by Democratic principles. No false god could have al-lured him from the beaten pathway and the accepted timehonored principles of Democratic policy. I shall speak, how-ever, little of his political views and more of his record as a soldier and his character as a patriot.

I read with some interest this morning a sketch of his life and public services furnished by a friend, and I find that he and I were close together during much of that momentous period covered by the civil war, not in sentiment, but in physical location, which lasted substantially during all of his great experience in the army-he in an important command and I in a very humble command.

It is said in this sketch that his first great battle was Corinth. I was not there. I was then beginning the experience which ripened into over four years of service in the Union Army, but General Bate had been a soldier in the Mexican war, and his career in the civil war illustrates the importance and value of service experience as a soldier, a value that can not be duplicated in any other way.

It does not appear that between the close of the Mexican war and the outbreak of the civil war General BATE had taken any interest or had any practical connection with military matters, and yet the limited service that he had in the Mexican war in the humble position which he occupied fitted him to at once assume prominence in the new conditions that surrounded him. And so, like many others, some of the volunteers, men without training at West Point, men without active service except this Mexican war experience, found themselves prominent and distinguished. It was well that we had those men. They rapidly transformed our bands of soldiers and artisans clerks and students into trained and tried and efficient

The State of Tennessee was peculiarly located with reference to the great events of the great war. Tennessee was already historically great. She had produced great men, great soldiers, and had written the name of the gallant "volunteer set" upon the historical records of her country, but in the civil war Tennessee was our pathway to the South. She occupied the great middle position between the Northeast and the Southwest and the South. Stragetically Tennessee was the pivot or central point from which radiated the great movements of the two great armies. Grant, coming up the Tennessee and Cumberland by way of Fort Henry, reached Pittsburg Landing and a column under Buell and Mitchell, striking Nashville and central Tennessee, and so it was that Tennessee became second only to Virginia as the great theater of the war. And here it was upon the soil of Tennessee that General BATE occupied a prominent position. I shall not discuss in detail his merits as a soldier. They are sufficiently written in the official reports of the army to which he belonged. They are sufficiently written in the appreciation of his fellow-soldiers, and they are sufficiently written in the loyalty of Tennessee to the men who served under the very eye of the people of that great State. Tennessee was devastated by war. Columns of marching men sweeping across her rich fields and through her fair towns and cities left the impress of the devastation of war upon her. That she bore the affliction heroically and without a murmur is history. She was divided in sentiment, and much of loyalty and devotion to the old Union remained with her, and no truer men, no more self-sacrificing men, operated under the Stars and Stripes than the men of East Tennessee, who came gladly to the front and formed regiments and fought and bled and died and suffered the destruction incident to war, and suffered the destruction incident to internal strife among the people of the same State.

The sweep of the great armies first arriving at Nashville. moving by Murfreesboro to Huntsville, Ala., came back by Battle Creek and Manchester to Nashville, and thence by Stone River and thence by the Tullahoma campaign, and all the incidents of war along the Tennessee River ultimately and finally up to the carnage of Franklin and the great battle of Nash ville. Surely Tennessee suffered, did not cry out, but stood stubbornly fighting to the end.

In both these great battles of Franklin and Nashville, General BATE was a prominent figure. He well might have been, for he was on the soil of his own State and fighting to reach his own home and fighting to make its victory for the cause in which he had embarked. It is said in the sketch to which I referred, that he was present and participated in the "mistake at Franklin." I am not here to discuss military strategy, but if there was a mistake made at the battle of Franklin by the Confederate troops, and I think there was a most serious mistake, it was not made by General BATE or any of the inferior officers of that immense column of active, vigilant, and wonderfully conspicuous soldiers. The result at Franklin, while it looked like victory for the Confederates, was in fact a move-ment which ultimately worked disaster, and under all ordinary circumstances the part of wisdom by the Confederates would have been to wait at Franklin, halt and consider, and ultimately abandon all the preconceived notion of Nashville. There was not one chance in a thousand that Nashville could be captured, and it has always seemed to me that the battle of Nashville, pressed upon us by the advancing column of Hood, was the greatest strain upon the soldiers of Tennessee of any of the other features of their campaign. The army of Hood had been turned aside from the general movement of the Confederate army at the same time that General Thomas had been located at Nashville. Everyone understood that the grand strategy of the armies involved a successful movement by way of Nashville by the Confederate army onward to the Ohio River. It was perfectly understood by all of us that if that great army should be unsuccessful at Franklin and Nashville, then they would be destroyed. They were without a sufficient supply of provisions; the country was absolutely bare of resources to aid them; they were poorly equipped in ammunition and tents and transportation.

Here was the flower of the Tennessee troops under Cheatham and a number of others whom I might name, and conspicuous among them General Bate. They made their appearance after the disaster at Franklin, for although the Union Army fell back with great loss and came to Nashville practically in retreat, yet the movement was perfectly understood to be a strategic movement to draw further away the badly crippled army of Hood to its ultimate destruction in front of Nashville. I think there was no greater demonstration of splendid heroism, of splendid self-sacrifice, than that exhibited by this army in its appearance before Nashville on the morning of the 19th day of December of that memorable year. To withdraw and go backward and recross Tennessee River to a place of temporary safety was defeat and destruction and substantial disgrace; to go forward was death and overthrow and glory. Once across, the suggestion of temporary safety; after across, the suggestion of honor and defeat. That they who commanded the awful onslaught upon our lines upon that memorable December morning had any hope of success is impossible of belief, but they chose the path of honor and glory rather than the path of temporary safety and futile hope of the future.

In Nashville was a vast body of military stores, sufficient to have supplied the army during the whole of the coming winter and spring and put them in a position to have marched easily and practically unobstructed to Louisville, for the defeat of the Union Army at Nashville and the forcing of it to retire would have been substantially the opening of a pathway to the Ohio River. Here, then, before them was the prospect of supplies, food to hungry men, clothes to suffering men in midwinter, and the homes of their families, for in the city of Nashville and its surroundings there lived many of the soldiers of Hood's army. So their struggle to get into and take possession of that great and beautiful city of their State was a struggle to save their army or failing lose their army.

So I say I think there was no greater demonstration of heroism than the terrific attack made by Hood and his columns upon the forts and places around Nashville on that occasion. they should fail was absolutely inevitable. But men like BATE knew perfectly well that the end had come unless they were successful, and the terrific battle was the result of that mental condition of that splendid army. Of course when fate decided against them they were practically destroyed, and the things that were witnessed in the pursuit of Hood down by way of Franklin to the Tennessee River made an impression upon my mind that will never be obliterated. Hundreds of men were found marching in the slight snow and the pouring rain or standing by the roadside giving up, surrendering, not by order of their commanding officer, but surrendering through the force of actual military and physical necessity; standing there by the roadside we found them with empty haversacks. Now and then a Union soldier would step up to the dejected Confederates and running his hand into his haversack and that old-time question, What have you got there, Johnny?" was answered by the exhibition of a few grains of parched corn. This was the army thus fed and thus clothed which undertook the desperate work of destroying Thomas's army and capturing Nashville.

There were scenes of fraternity and good will and benevolence enacted between the soldiers of the triumphant army of the Union and the dejected and suffering soldiers of the army of the Confederacy, and as we passed these lines of captured Confederates we were taught at that late period in the war that the real fighting men on both sides had great admiration for each other.

Notwithstanding, therefore, that I do not indorse the general-ship of the battle of Franklin—surely not—I think there were no better soldiers in either army than the men under Hood who made the forlorn, hopeless assault upon our works at Nash-ville at the time I mention. The spirit of Cheatham and BATE and a score of others inspired the soldiers.

But let me pass on. General BATE was reconstructed, and I never heard anything upon the topic of the work of reconstruction and the new conditions from him until we met at the dedication of the great military park at Chattanooga—the Chickamauga National Park—and I there heard his splendid, comprehensive, eloquent oration. I believed then and I believe now that every word he said was sincere. I have only this one comment to make. It seems to me the conditions in this country have reached the point of time when it would be well for ex-Confederates and their representatives to cease saying upon every possible occasion that they believed then that they were right and they believe now they were right. This reiteration is not offensive to me, and if there was any practical good in it I would not comment upon it, but unfortunately no good can come of it. Does anyone doubt that men who fought four long years, left their homes, their wives and their children to suffer, witnessed the devastation of their country, the destruction of their property, the death upon the battlefield of scores and hundreds and thousands of their fellow-citizens, bearing in their own bodies the wounds of conflicts, believe that they were not sincere? Do men fight that sort of a war for glory? There was no such thing as conquest possible. Why did they fight? They fought in a mistaken opinion sternly believed in, faithfully adhered to, and why keep repeating it? It seems to me that it is unnecessary to give assurance that they were honest. Nobody

. It is not worth while to plead "not guilty" when there is no indictment. The world has settled that question. The world has looked on with wonder at the reuniting of the two great wings of this country, the North and the South. In 1890 I was a member of an official commission which was sent to Europe for certain purposes connected with the Chicago Exposition and with relation to the consular service in Europe. With a number of the members of that commission and another commission I had the honor to be present in the city of Berlin at a dinner given by the vice-chancellor of the German Empire. There were present on that occasion a colonel of the Confederate army, a major of the Confederate army, a captain of the Union Army, and myself, all members of the same commission and all bearing the appointment of the Government and all cooperating in the purpose of our mission. Caprivi, the then chancellor of the German Empire, the successor of Bismarck, himself a soldier of mighty renown, said to me that, in his opinion, the most wonderful feature of our situation and one that he could not understand was the presence upon that commission of men who had served on either side of the great war. He said that would not be tolerated in Europe—there would never be such a gathering as that. The men who rebelled, as he called it, and I call it—and I see no reason why to call it so should be offensive would be relegated to eternal oblivion politically. He said to me, "Do you people over there treat these men just as well as you do your own comrades?" "Yes," I replied, "and sometimes, with a little touch of sympathy in our actions, a little better." He again assured me that it was the most wonderful thing he ever knew and that he could not understand it.

Another thing I wish to say: Why should not a man like BATE have been a member of the Senate of the United States as a representative of the great State of Tennessee? lived in the State and had fought for the State. He had made sacrifices. He had been shot and bruised, his property had been destroyed. His people sent him here, and under the Constitution they had a right to send him here, and their action was supreme and conclusive. No man can question it. Upon the broader plane of national politics, is it wise for the people of the South to constantly appear to recognize and constantly signify an admitted disability in the great political contest of the day of the men who fought on the Confederate side? should they, the people of the South, place conditions of discount upon the men who stood in the battle for them? Why limit the honors to be bestowed upon their fellow-citizens and the men who did not fight in the Confederate war? there in the view of the people of this country to-day that puts upon the southern man who fought in the army of the Confederacy a disability in any particular with relation to the action, history, and movements of the United States? President of the United States, and he has my approval-I have not had an opportunity to know who else approves it-when our President, a Republican, a northern man, writes such a letter as he wrote to the assembly last night, met in honor of the birthday of Gen. Robert E. Lee, the time has come when the South should quit apologizing or explaining or advertising disabilities and stand upon the front line of their political ideas, recognizing no disability, turning their backs upon the past, and halling the present, and such a position would be the best vindication that the South could give to men like BATE.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am here to join in these proceedings for two reasons: 1. Because I knew and revered General Bate. 2. Because I know and love John Wesley Gaines, who so ably represents the Hermitage district. There are some men in this world from whom a request comes to me as a command. One of these is Brother Gaines.

to me as a command. One of these is Brother Gaines.

The most pleasant feature of this solemn occasion is the speech of my venerable friend General Grosvenor, of Ohio. I have heard him make divers speeches upon sundry subjects, but I have never heard him speak more interestingly or more sensibly than to-day. General Grosvenor was a Union soldier and was no carpet knight. He rose from major to brigadier. Two years ago he and I debated at Nashville. One of the most fondly remembered days of my life was spent in company with him and Brother Gaines and certain eminent citizens of that city in going over the battlefield on which General Grosvenor commanded a brigade holding one of the splendid turnpikes and on which General Bate, commanding a division of Confederates, was a conspicuous figure. During that day, to him full of heroic recollections, General Grosvenor uttered no word touching the brave, ragged, and hungry Confederates who immortalized that field except in praise of their valor and in sympathy for their sufferings.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, and other men like us, too young to be soldiers in the war between the States, can never experience the sensation which Cæsar denominates gaudium certaminis, which a favorite English-speaking poet has translated into the famous couplet:

The stern joy which warriors feel In foemen worthy of their steel.

No more can we understand the respect and kindness which the Union and the Confederate soldiers feel for each other indeed, which they always felt for each other. The men who did the fighting never perpetuated the bitterness of the four years carnival of death. That was done by the stay-at-homes. But even they have ceased at last to stir up strife, and it is well.

Missouri is bound to Tennessee by strongest ties of filial affection. The greatest Missourian that ever lived—one of the really great statesmen of the Republic—Col. Thomas Hart Benton—though born in North Carolina, grew to manhood and began his high career at Franklin, Tenn. Many other distinguished Missourians, among them the famous Governor Joseph Wingate Folk, and several thousand of the sturdy citizens of that imperial Commonwealth, first looked upon this glorious world in Tennessee.

It is a well-known fact that immigration closely hugs parallels of latitude. North Carolinians settled Tennessee. Virginians settled Kentucky. North Carolinians and Tennesseans, Virginians and Kentuckians, together with the élite from every State and civilized country, settled Missouri originally and, to a large extent, Missourians have peopled the great West even to the golden shores of the peaceful ocean.

Pioneers leave their impress upon a State forever in a greater or less degree. If they are a virile race and immigration from stocks other than those from which they sprang does not pour in so as to greatly outnumber the descendants of the original settlers, then the characteristics of the pioneers always remain the dominant characteristics of that people—virtues, traits, habits, and even prejudices descending from generation to generation.

In no age, in no country, was there ever in any State a set of pioneers of higher qualities than the original settlers of Tennessee. Hers is heroic history from the time when William Bean built the first white man's cabin within her borders to the present hour. In all the elements of good citizenship they have had no superiors in the annals of the human race.

The roll call of her early soldiers and public men stirs the blood of a lover of his country even at this late day.

John Sevier, Isaac Shelby, Andrew Jackson, John Coffee, William Carroll, the Donelsons, the Robertsons, the Blounts, the Overtons, the McNairys, the Searcys, the Davidsons, the Hardemans, the Lewises, the Cookes, Sam Houston, Davy Crockett, Hugh L. White, Felix Grundy, the Roanes, the Bells, and the Bentons are names to conjure with—part of the priceless treasures of the State and of the Republic.

What American worthy of the name is not proud to claim as countrymen the Tennessee frontiersmen who, armed only with squirrel rifles, utterly destroyed the gallant Ferguson and his trained veterans at Kings Mountain, thereby turning back the tide of invasion and starting Lord Cornwallis on his dismal and disastrous journey to Yorktown?

Who can read without increased pride in our country the thrilling story of the valor of the raw militiamen of Kentucky and Tennessee who, on January 8, 1815, converted Napoleon's quitclaim deed to us of the Louisiana Purchase into a general warranty deed whose validity no man may question?

From her entrance into the Union Tennessee has sent to the councils of the Republic strong, clean, admirable, high-minded

Men who their duties know, But know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain.

She has given to the Republic three Presidents-Andrew Jackson, of heroic and blessed memory; James Knox Polk, to whose ability and achievements history has never done justice, and Andrew Johnson, to whose career history has done gross injus-tice. Only three States—Virginia, New York, and Ohio—have produced more Presidents.

Tennessee has also furnished her quota of Speakers of this House, Cabinet officers, ministers to foreign courts, and judges of the Supreme Court of the United States.

She has sent to our wars so many soldiers and of such splendid qualities that she has fairly won and proudly bears the title of The old Volunteer State.

Were the Republic fighting for her life to-day, she would in proportion to population send into the ranks of war as many soldiers and as good ones as any other State in the Union.

When I first came to Congress, Tennessee's Senators were Isham G. Harris, czar of her fierce Democracy, and Gen. WILLIAM

B. BATE, a soldier of two wars.

General Bate stood high as a lawyer. He held many minor civil offices; was twice governor of Tennessee; was elected to the United States Senate for four full terms, dying in the beginning of the fourth. In every position he held he discharged his duties with capacity, courage, industry, and fidelity. In politics he was a robust, patriotic partisan, and ever stood ready to both assert and defend the political faith in which he was born, in which he lived all his days, and in which he died.

In his youth he served in the Mexican war, being mustered out as a lieutenant

In his prime during the war between the States he volunteered as a private and fought his way to the double stars of a major-general.

There is little doubt that his magnificent record as a soldier was the chief cause of his becoming governor and Senator. Carl Schurz in his Life of Henry Clay sagely remarks that the American voter likes the smell of gunpowder upon the garments of his Presidential candidate. He might have extended his dictum so as to include candidates for offices of all sorts and sizes

General Bate was a fine sample of the American volunteer soldiery, upon which we have always chiefly relied, and upon which we will chiefly rely so long as the Republic endures; for our people without regard to political creed are opposed to a large standing army. In this country so few men desire to be soldiers that in times of peace it is difficult to keep the ranks of our small Army full; but under necessity every American citizen is a possible soldier, intelligent, patriotic, brave.

The greatest European commander since Napoleon was once asked if he had studied the campaigns and battles of our Union and Confederate armies during their titanic struggle. He answered that he had no time to waste studying the campaigns and battles of armed mobs. Perhaps if he had run up against the combined armies of Grant and Lee he would have modified that cavalier opinion very suddenly. I rejoice in the faith that the average American citizen rises equal to the duties of any position in which he finds himself, and I believe, furthermore, that when our great war closed there were marching in the ranks of the Union and Confederate armies, carrying muskets as privates, thousands of men who would have made capable colonels, brigadiers, or even major-generals if promoted on the instant.

Having fought all he could during the four awful years of fratricidal strife, General Bate quit fighting when peace was declared and courageously, resolutely, and intelligently bent his splendid energies to building up the waste places of the South. It is pleasant to remember that he lived long enough to see her rehabilitated and enjoying that great prosperity which is only a prophecy of her greater prosperity in the days to come, for no man saw with clearer vision that the development of the natural resources of the South is only in its beginning and will ere long make is the marvel of the world.

He was a modest, unassuming, Christian gentleman of the old school, justly proud of his career, both civil and military. His countrymen are proud of him and warmly cherish the memory of this veteran soldier and statesman.

Except for the local reference, the fine lines of good Sir Walter Scott are applicable to General BATE:

Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking!
Dream of battled fields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking.
In our isle's enchanted hall,
Hands unseen thy couch are strewing,
Fairy strains of music fall,
Every sense in slumber dewing.
Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Dream of fighting fields no more;
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking,
No rude sound shall reach thine ear.

Armour's clang, or war-steed champing, Trump nor pibroch summon here Mustering clan, or squadron tramping. Yet the lark's shrill fife may come, At the daybreak from the fallow, And the bittern sound his drum, Booming from the sedgy shallow. Ruder sounds shall none be near, Guards nor warders challenge here. Here's no war-steed's neigh and champing, Shouting clans or squadrons stamping.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I believe that it can be truthfully said that Senator WILLIAM B. BATE will be classed by his countrymen with the highest type of American manhood and true citizenship. That tribute he justly earned in the walks of his private and public life. In the varied and multiplied duties developing upon him from the time he entered. multiplied duties devolving upon him from the time he entered as a private soldier in the war with Mexico to the hour that his life went out in this city, on the 9th day of March, 1905, the guiding and controlling principle of his life was devotion to duty. During that long period of more than sixty years the people among whom he was born and reared again and again conferred upon him the highest civic honors within their gift. When the dark clouds of reconstruction were lifting and passing away, the people of the great State of Tennessee by common consent turned to him to bear their banner for the great office of the governor of his State. It was a time when a strong, honest, and brave man was needed at the helm. He triumphed, as he deserved to do, and his wise, able, and honest adminis-tration of that high and honorable trust stands memorable in the annals of his State.

His administration was characterized in every official policy and act by the unmistakable, living, and ever-present individuality of the man. As a member of the United States Senate, Senator Bate stood with the foremost for purity of character, the maintenance of public and official honesty, and unfaltering frankness in the expression of his honest convictions. Upon great public questions that he had studied and investigated no sentimental policy could influence him to refrain from expressing his honest opinions. He loved the truth, and his very nature revolted at evasion, deceit, and hypocrisy, coming from what-ever source it might. Like all strong, broad, and able men, Senator Bate was patient and tolerant of the views differing from his, and in his intercourse with his fellow-men was ever courteous, refined, and gentle.

Mr. Speaker, others better informed than I am will speak today on the career and life of Senator Bate as a citizen, his ability in the legislative and executive positions that he filled: but it is his record, his character, his life as a Confederate solder that equally challenges love and admiration, and about which I desire chiefly to speak.

I do not hesitate, Mr. Speaker, to say that midst the hosts of honored, noble, and illustrious men who led our southern armies in the great civil war none were more devoted in heart, mind, soul, and body to the cause of the South than was General WILLIAM B. BATE. In the early days of 1861, when the ominous mutterings of the fearful struggle that was soon to follow between the sections of the South and the North were heard, he promptly offered his services to his people, the people among whom he had been born and reared, the South that he loved, and entered the Confederate army as a private.

Without the aid of official help, but depending alone upon his courage, splendid judgment, and sagacity of leadership on the field of battle, he rose rapidly from the ranks to the high position of major-general of volunteers. He bore a conspicuous and honored part in all of our great battles under Albert Sidney Johnston, Hood, Bragg, and Joseph E. Johnston. He was the companion and close friend of the immortal Pat Cleburne. When the future historian, who has yet to write a true history of our great civil war, and give credit to whom credit belongs, and paint in living words the honor, glory, and courage of the brave men who wore the gray and the blue, he will pause, then rest, when he traces the immortal trail of death—the march of Bate's Tennessee regiment—as it surged and reeled around the fire-crested summit of Snodgrass Hill, on the river of death, Chickamauga, leaving more than 67 per cent of men dead and dying on the field. Such dauntless courage, such reckless disregard of death, such willingness to give life for country, was never surpassed on any battlefield. I can not, Mr. Speaker, on an occasion like this, follow this great man in all the walks of his noble life—soldier, statesman, and patriot—but it is sufficient to say, in part memory of his matchless career in the army of the South, that in the last dying battle of the Confederacy, animated by the same unquenchable spirit of love and patriotism for the cause of the South that led him to volunteer in the earliest days of the war, General Bate, wounded, and with his crutch in his hand, led the last charge on the enemy's lines at Bentonville, N. C.

Truly can it be said of him, Mr. Speaker, that he greeted Truly can it be said of him, Mr. Speaker, that he greeted the first bright cheering rays of the rising sun of the Confederacy, and after four long, bloody, and dark years, the lingering rays of that setting sun played mournfully upon him and his brave men as they made the last charge on the enemy's line.

Is it any wonder that such a record, such an inspiring and ennobling eareer, should call for the deep love of his Confederate comrades who linger behind him and cause them to speak of him in the highest terms of praise?

Mr. Speaker, it rarely occurs in the life of a man that one incident, one event, unfolds his character in vivid and living colors. In the early part of our civil war a great convention was assembled at Nashville, Tenn., and after thoughful and patriotic consideration a call was made on General BATE to leave the field, come home, and accept the office of the governor of his State. The spirit that gave utterance to his reply ranks him as a patriot whose name ought never to die. Said he:

As a son of Tennessee and a southern soldier, I would feel dishonored in this hour of trial to quit the field. * * * I had rather, amid her misfortunes, be the defender than to be the governor of Tennessee.

Such sentiments could only emanate from the heart of a man noble and grand in the image of his maker. The world has ever bestowed its choicest wreaths of honor and glory upon the patriot soldier.

The man who turns his back upon a high, glittering, and inviting civic honor, preferring hardships of camp life and the carnage of the battle, to stand with his country in her misfortunes, is the noblest type of God's creation, and deserves the praise of his fellow-men.

While it is true that General Bate won the highest honors and on several occasions received the commendation of his superior officers for gallantry on the field of battle, it is also true that his example on his return home, under the shadows of defeat, deserve as much praise as when he fearlessly led his brave men into the jaws of death. Midst his stricken, disheartened, impoverished people he stood as a tower of strength. The devastation, the gloom, and the sorrow that greeted him from all sides, the cruelty and oppression that marked the days of reconstruction in the South, never dismayed or subdued his proud spirit. He had fought a good fight for a cause he loved, and in her ruins and ashes the South was dearer to his heart than in its days of glory, wealth, and power.

Repining over that which was lost was no part of his nature. To meet and prepare for the future of the South, to restore order, law, and peace where lawlessness prevailed, to weld again the broken links of the Union, and to restore the government of Tennessee and the States of the South to the hands of its white people was the great ambition of his life. In this noble work he steadily labored, and his people followed him as a trusted and wise leader. Such an example from such a man, under conditions existing at that time, can not now be estimated or understood as to its real value except by those who passed through the reign of terror that swept the South in the days of reconstruction.

I do not hesitate to say that it was the example and wise counsel of such southern leaders as General Bate that stimulated and encouraged the brave and matchless soldiers of the South, who surrendered their flag under the orders of their great commanders—General Lee, at Appomattox, and General Johnson, at Bentonville—to submit peacefully to the wicked and studied usurpations and cruelties of the "Freedmen's Bureau" and the pillaging army followers, and gave their hearts and hands to the restoration of the Union.

A great and difficult work was before these brave men, and nobly and grandly have they accomplished it.

It should be a profound satisfaction to the friends and admirers of this true and beloved son of the South that God spared his life long enough for him to realize that kind, cordial, and friendly relations between the States of the North and the South for which he had so unselfishly and patriotically labored by precept and example had been fully restored, and that he died a citizen of a highly prosperous and reunited country.

Quite fifty years ago General Bate led to the marriage altar in my home town, the city of Huntsville, Ala., Miss Julia Peete, one of the most accomplished and charming daughters of the South. Reared midst the endearing associations of culture, refinement, and hospitality of a typical southern home before the war, this noble woman crowned and blessed her chivalrous husband and her home with a purity and tenderness of love and devotion that makes home the hallowed altar of domestic happiness, love, and peace.

The people that I have the honor to represent on this floor—embracing the Valley of the Tennessee—have watched and followed General Bate with pride in his distinguished and honored career. We have rejoiced in his victories, and his death brought sorrow to our hearts and tears to our eyes. View him, Mr. Speaker, as we may, in either of the walks of life—civil or military—in peace or in war, in victory or in defeat, as a Senator of the United States or as the chief executive of his State, we find in Senator William B. Bate an unfaltering devotion to his convictions of duty, a quiet and submissive endurance under the trials of adversity—brave and tender—a character for purity and honesty untouched by the taint of suspicion, which entitles his memory to be held dear in the hearts of his countrymen.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, we are told that the true measurement of the giant oak can be best taken when it is down. So it is with the life of a great man. In the presence of death all men are impartial; then envy has no hope to actuate it; malice has no motive to inspire it; ambition sees no genius in its path; history then becomes the unbiased witness. Judged by every standard, whether in the full glow of political life or at the journey's end, Senator William B. Bate has performed with marked ability in every position to which he has been chosen.

General William B. Bate was four times elected to the Senate from the State of Tennessee, and after having just entered upon his fourth term, on March 9, 1905, he was called to his last reward. Seventy-nine years of age, having served his country faithfully, and having distinguished himself in peace and in war, he laid down his burden with a name as spotless as his service had been. He typified in character, in courage, and in chivalry the Old South. He believed the Union was made up of equal States with equal rights, and that those rights which were representations are recommended. which were not plainly and specially given by the Constitution to the Union were specially reserved to the States. He was a lover of local self-government. He believed truly that the government governed best that governed least. He had confidence in the wisdom of the people; he did not believe in power being placed in a few hands, and he believed, too, that government amongst men derived its just powers from the consent of the governed, and therefore he opposed to his uttermost imperialism, whether it was the imperialism of England over the Boers, or whether it was the imperialism of America over the Philip-He would raise in front of the marching army of either the declaration that governments can exist among men only by the consent of the governed. He was a Democrat in the true meaning of that term, loyal always to his party nominee and faithful to its platform declarations. His whole official life was an exemplification of true Democracy. Tennessee has furnished many great men to the Republic. It furnished Jackson, who drove the Biddles out of power, who led the triumphant armies at New Orleans; furnished Polk, who defeated Clay; furnished Andrew Johnson, who succeeded to the Presidency upon the death of Lincoln. General Bate had the courage of Jackson, the brilliancy of Polk, and the adroitness of Johnson. Tennessee and the Republic may say of him that indeed "Ulysses has gone and left none behind him strong enough to bend his bow.'

General Bate was a Confederate soldier, and whether at Chickamauga or Snodgrass Hill or at Missionary Ridge, commanding Breckinridge's old division, or at bloody Shiloh, he was the same dashing, courageous soldier. In the last-named battle he was wounded, but holding to his crutch and forgetting his pain in the glory of battle, he rode up and down the line cheering the boys in gray. Fighting with that vast army of courageous southerners for the Constitution as the fathers taught it to them, he exhibited a courage and daring that finds no counterpart in the history of the world's wars. No panegyric pronounced by me could add to the glorious history of this devoted army in conflict for courage, for if all that constitutes that term in our language should be lost, the name of the Confederate soldier would stand for it all.

Scarred by the battles of the civil war, wounded by the bullets of the enemy, with a broken heart and almost broken hopes, General Bate laid down the flag of the Confederacy and took up the Stars and Stripes and yielded to none in his loyalty to his Republic's flag. He folded the conquered banner, with its myriad recollections, with his manifold love, stained with his blood and consecrated with his tears, and laid it to rest. And then he turned his face to the stars upon his own, his country's flag, and knew nothing but devotion for it. Those who fought with him, who loved and followed him, are being swiftly gathered to the home to which he was called. When Tennessee called him to be governor during the conflict between the States, by the army camp fire he read her call, amid the roar of the can-non and the scream of the shells and the gleam of the bayonet. He said to his State that as much as he loved her and the great honor of presiding as her chief executive, his heart was with the boys in gray, and he refused to forsake what he thought was his duty to those around the camp fire while danger everywhere lurked about him. This is but an exemplification of the history and life of the man.

And what shall I say of Tennessee, the dear old Volunteer State? How sweet of her people that in the old age of General Bate she refused to retire him to private life, but almost at the end of life's journey his people reelected him, and the last delectable words which touched his ears were those of Tennessee's loyal sons, saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

He read by the last rays of life's setting sun another commission from his people. What consolation it must have been to this faithful old soldier, statesman, and patriot that Tennessee refused to drive him out into the night and storm in his old age. In all his service in public life the bony finger of suspicion never was pointed to him. In his life we may see exemplified the statement of the Good Book, which tells us that "a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver or gold." He was rich in a good name, poor in worldly goods, yet he left behind him a career in public life that will shine like a column of light through the darkness of corruption and of avarice as a guide to the feet of the faith-

Truly it may be said of him that-He was a friend of truth, of soul sincere, In action faithful, in honor clear, Who broke no promises, served no private ends, Sought no titles, and forsook no friends.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Speaker, Tennessee has made more history than any State in the Republic, except Massachusetts and Virginia. In proportion to its population it did more on the field of battle to secure the independence of the United States than did any of the thirteen colonies, as Bancroft says substantially in his description of the battle of Kings Mountain. In 'second war of independence" it was the militia of Tennessee under its own incomparable Jackson, whose immortal victory at New Orleans shed imperishable glory on his State and country and led the conqueror of Napoleon to exclaim that "Andrew Jackson was the only really great general the United States had produced." In 1846, when the Secretary of War, William L. Marcy, called upon Governor Aaron V. Brown, of my State, for three regiments, its quota of troops, the governor responded tendering thirty-six regiments, to which the Secretary replied that "Tennessee would not be permitted to furnish the entire army for the war with Mexico."

In our deplorable civil war Tennessee exhibited its martial spirit by furnishing its full quota of soldiers to both armies, and better soldiers the world never saw. If those of the Union Army were more successful in achievement, it was because of the superb leadership of that Army's greatest generals—Grant, Thomas, and Sherman. If Tennessee's Confederate soldiers were less successful in battle than were their comrades of the Army of Northern Virginia, it was not because they were inferior in any respect, but because it was not their fortune to have Lee, Jackson, Longstreet, and Gordon for leaders, while it was their misfortune to have an obstinate President take from them a very great commander whom they all justly idolized—Joseph E. Johnston—and put upon them as commanders Bragg and Hood, whom President Davis made generals, instead of giving themcommanders whom God Almighty had made generals.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, such was the determined courage of Tennessee's Confederate soldiers and those of her sister States of the South that at Chickamauga the percentage of killed and wounded of both Union and Confederate armies was greater than was that of any battle of the civil war, despite the fact that the heroic men of the Confederate army had no confidence in the ability for leadership of their commander in chief.

The eagerness and unanimity of Tennesseans in responding to the call to arms have given to their State the sobriquet of Democrat in the State who pretends to be honest will justify "The Volunteer State of the Union," to which my distinguished soldier friend from Ohio, General Grosvenor, has appropriately added that of "The Battle State of the Union," more decisive battles of the civil war having been fought within its borders than in any other State.

That a man should have as a soldier excited the admiration and won the hearts of a people of such martial spirit as those of Tennessee, of a State which has given to the country such heroes as Sevier, Jackson, Gaines, Farragut, and Forrest and the winners of Texan independence, Houston and Crockett, is of itself the highest attestation of his merit. This the late Senator WILIAM B. BATE did. To my colleagues who were of the political school of the lamented Senator I leave the task of reciting the events of his brilliant military career, confining myself to the simple statement that, enlisting as a private soldier in the Confederate army, he came out of the war a major-general, and that when the battle of Chickamauga opened he was on crutches from a serious wound; that despite this wound, which relieved him from all obligation to engage in that battle and which disabled him from mounting his horse without assistance, he gallantly led his division in the thickest of the combat, in which he had three horses shot under him and in which more men were killed and wounded than in any other command of equal number.

Of the 120,000 gallant men of the Confederate army from Tennessee, the only one whose career was more brilliant than that of General Bate was that of "the wizard of the saddle," Lieut. Gen. N. B. Forrest, who never had a superior as a cavalry commander and few equals. Of each it may appropriately be said, as it was of Robert Clive, the conqueror of British India, by Prime Minister Pitt, "he was a heaven-born general."

That General BATE should have had so strong a hold on the affection of such a people as those of Tennessee, with such a record as a soldier, is not surprising. Immediately after the great victory of New Orleans, Thomas H. Benton predicted that Andrew Jackson would be elected President, for the reason, he said, that "the majority of the American people love the man who has the smell of gunpowder on his garments;" and to the people of no State is this remark more applicable than to those of Tennessee. That General Bate should have commanded more of the admiration of the people of his State than did his comrade in arms, General Forrest, is because his civic virtues were worthy of his soldierly.

The political school of Hamilton and of "Light Horse" Harry Lee, in which I was educated, inculcated other doctrines than those held by General Bate, and these arrayed me not only in the ranks of his political opponents, but in those of my country-men who opposed the cause he so heroically upheld in our civil war. As a Republican, I speak of him as a Democrat of the Calhoun State rights school in deserved honor with that school of his party who freely shed his blood in proof of the sincerity of his convictions, and as a Confederate soldier whose fame was fairly won and has become an imperishable chapter in the annals of the great Commonwealth whose commission as a Senator of the United States he would have borne for a longer period than did any of his predecessors had not death, unfortunately, terminated that career before the expiration of the term to which he had just been elected by an almost unanimous

But the splendid record of General Bate as a leader of men on the field of battle was not his only title to the respect and admiration of the people of "The Volunteer State." His personal and civic virtues were worthy of his skill and courage as a soldier. Of ardent temperament, indomitable will, and zealous partisanship, he was possessed of the prejudices and virtues which necessarily attach to such natures, but he was capable of subordinating these to his inflexible sense of honor and justice. When his party divided in 1880 on the question of the payment in full of Tennessee's debt, General Bate supported the candidate of that wing of his party for governor-Hon. John V. Wrightwho favored preserving the credit of the State. Later during the four years he was governor he impartially and sternly enforced the laws and witheringly rebuked the men who dared appeal to him on the plea of party service or the social connections of the parties to remit the penalties imposed by the courts on the cowardly miscreants who carried concealed weapons which they murderously used in violation of law.

One of the most creditable features of his long and honorable life was his opposition to the corrupt machine of his own party in Tennessee, which, years ago, enacted an infamous election law for the express purpose of leaving nothing to chance of making fraud easy at the polls. The evil consequences of that infamous law were predicted by General Bate, and his predictions have been so completely verified that no the wholesale frauds on the ballot which have been the invariable concomitant of every election which has been held under its nefarious provisions. To the credit of all the leading and influential Democratic newspapers of Tennessee it may be said that they denounce this infamously corrupt statute and demand its repeal. This corrupt statute was condemned by Senator Bate, who would sooner have been defeated for reelection to the Senate than to have owed his success to the stuffing of a ballot box or the forging of an election return, and his triumphant reelection the last time was achieved over the opposition of the political pirates who secured the passage of the law. Retribution has overtaken some of the authors and instigators of this iniquitous legislation, and the signs of the times indicate that it will overtake others of them as soon as a deceived and outraged people have the opportunity to put the seal of their condemnation upon them.

Mr. Speaker, death has stricken from the roll of the Senate the name of an incorruptible legislator. His remains lie buried under the soil of the State which delighted to honor him for more than a quarter of a century. His record as soldier and statesman is finished. We turn for a few hours from the dis-charge of our ordinary duties to pay this last sad tribute to his He was plain and simple in his manners and tastes. In the family, a model son, husband, father, and brother. In the walks of private life, an ideal citizen. In his religious views, he was strongly attached to the Baptist faith, and of that great church which has done so much for the development, civilization, and Christianization of Tennessee he was a consistent, worthy member. He was absolutely devoid of duplicity; he always spoke the truth; he was an honest man. So thoroughly was his reputation in that regard established that where he was best known his bitterest enemy would not dare insinuate that he had ever been guilty of hypocrisy or falsehood in public or private life or of fraud in any business transaction. He was firmly of the opinion that personal integrity and political dis-honesty are absolutely irreconcilable in the same person, and on this conviction he acted throughout his career, as William H. Seward said John Quincy Adams had.

Mr. Speaker, the qualities which I have ascribed to General Bate may well be emulated by some of his contemporaries upon whom accident or an inscrutable Providence has devolved the responsibilities of high official station. Upon many of them more brilliant gifts have been bestowed. But not of all of them can it be said, as of William B. Bate, he was truthful, he was honest, he was incorruptible. These are traits which Tennessee has always honored in any American statesman, and as a tribute to them, as developed in her soldier Senator, she now lays the garlands of her love upon his tomb.

No Sybarite can win the praise Or laurel wreath of story; No calm, but storms for all who climb The stern Mont Blanc of glory.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with unfeigned diffidence that I offer here, in the midst of these able and elaborately prepared addresses, a spontaneous and almost extempore tribute to that soldier and statesman, William B. Bate.

The passing of this gallant and chivalrous scion of the South calls to my mind a scene in which there is strangely mingled the elements of pathos and sublimity. A few more days and the last sentinel will for the first time have fallen asleep at his post, and the last heroic defender of the lost cause will have joined his companions upon the other shore. We see the last line broken and shattered, as they pass silently and swiftly westward, one by one. Transfigured in the "golden lightning of the sunken sun," outlined in distinct silhouette against the many-hued splendors of a day that is done, they rise before us gray and grand, the rear guard of the most gallant band that ever careered o'er field of carnage or of glory. To-morrow we shall truly say:

On Fame's eternal camping-ground Their silent tents are spread, And Glory guards with solemn round The bivouac of the dead.

What men they were—these protectors of the homes, these fine exemplars of the chivalry of the South, with their high aspirations and modest mien-strange mingling of strength and tenderness, of courage and of courtesy.

It is of Bate, the soldier, I would speak, of Bate, the inspiring and perfect exemplar of the highest civilization, not of the South only, but of the race.

We hear much of the provincialism of the South, of a civilization characteristic of and peculiar to those antebellum days. We speak of it with reverence, yet we treat it as a memory. What were the distinctive and distinguishing elements of that civilization of which Bate was so peculiarly the embodiment? In what is it different from to-day? Where is the line, if line there be, between the old South and the new? Is it true that we have lost something, that we have left something far behind us? Is it true that these strangely gracious, knightly, courteous soldiers as they pass from the scene of action will leave no type or trace behind? If true, it is the saddest commentary upon the decadence not of the South only, but of the race. What were the characteristics, what the thought and purpose of that life, which pulsated in every fiber of this dead soldier's Dauntless courage, a devotion to duty so serious and sacred that it was a religion, a high and changeless reverence for woman, an idolatrous love of truth. These virtues marked the southern man, inspired the southern soldier, and sanctified southern life. Were they peculiar to that section south of Mason and Dixon's line? Was this their glorious provincialism confined to a brief era and a circumscribed section? Nay, verily! The deep rooting of these fine sentiments was not a growth—it was a heritage. It was the evidence not of sectionalism, not of provincialism, but of eternal conservatism. If the South differed from other sections, it was because other sections had departed from the most precious inheritance of their fathers, had retrograded, not they. If the South was broader, more liberal, or more generous than her neighbors, it was because others had allowed their souls to be cramped in the narrow channels of fanaticism or of greed. Older than its civilization or its faith, these ideals run like a silver thread through all the history of the Saxon race, and when history is lost in the twilight of time, they illumine the traditions of the rugged worshipers of Thor and Woden in the wilds of Sleswick and Friesland.

Tacitus, who alone among the ancient historians had a close personal knowledge of the manners and customs of the Saxons in their so-called "barbarism," declared:

The generals are chosen for their valor * * *. They command more by warlike example than by their authority. To be a prompt and daring spirit in battle and to attack in front of the lines is the popular character of a chieftain. When admired for his bravery he is sure to be obeyed.

Those lines, written in the presence of the Saxon warrior and describing a civilization, if civilization I may call it, fifteen hundred years older than this, might be appropriately applied to that gentle, firm, courageous hero, Robert E. Lee, whose memory we commemorated but yesterday, who in camp was the beloved companion and comforter of his devoted followers, and in the dread hour of battle inspired them like a god.

In the heat of the engagementsays Tacitusthe Saxon warrior hears the shrieks of his wife and the crics of his children. These are the darling witnesses of his conduct, the applauders of his valor, at once beloved and valued.

And how well his wild consort deserved his devotion and inspired his courage.

With one husband, as with one life, one mind, one body, every woman is satisfied; in him her happiness is centered: her desires extend no further, and the principle is not only affection for the husband's person, but reverence for the married state.

Ah, it was no new thing, this mixture of strength and tenderness, love and valor. In the midst of his wild environment, shut out in the darkness and in the fog, from the presence of his God, he worshiped truth as a divinity and woman as a goddess.

Taine, a Frenchman, pays this unwilling tribute to the Scandinavian savage:

dinavian savage:

Through all outbreaks of primitive brutality gleams obscurely the grand idea of duty, which is the self-constraint exercised in view of some noble end. Marriage was pure amongst them, chastity instinctive, Amongst the Saxons the adulterer was punished by death; the adulteress was obliged to hang herself, or was stabbed by the knives of her companions. The wives of the Cimbrians, when they could not obtain from Marius assurance of their chastity, slew themselves with their own hands. They thought there was something sacred in a woman; they married but one, and kept faith with her. In fifteen centuries the idea of marriage is unchanged amongst them. The wife, on entering her husband's home, is aware that she gives herself altogether, "that she will have but one body, one life with him; that she will have no thought, no desire, beyond; that she will be the companion of his perils and labors; that she will suffer and dare as much as he, both in peace and war." And he, like her, knows that he gives himself. Having chosen his chief, he forgets himself in him, assigns to him his own glory, serves him to the death. "He is infamous as long as he lives who returns from the field of battle without his chief." It was on this voluntary subordination that feudal society was based. Man, in this race, can accept a superior, can be capable of devotion and respect. Thrown back upon himself by the gloom and severity of his climate, he has discovered moral beauty, while others discover sensuous beauty. This kind of naked brute, who lies all day by his fireside, sluggish and dirty, always eating and drinking, whose rusty faculties can not follow the clear and fine outlines of poetic forms, catches a glimpse of the sublime in his troubled dreams. He does not see it, but simply feels it; his religion is already within. * * * His gods are not inclosed in walls; he has no idols. What he designates by divine names is something invisible and grand, which floats through nature and is conceived beyond nature, a mysterious infinity which the sense can not touch, but which "reverence alone can appreciate;" and when, later on, the legends define and alter this vague divination of natural powers, an idea remains at the bottom of this chaos of giant dreams—that the world is a warfare, and heroism the greatest excellence.

Upon that rude base, rugged, sublime, and eternal, mediæval chivalry was planted and to it, as to the Rock of Ages, the thought, the aspirations, and the life of the South were an-Chivalry was its natural result. It was the flower of which those simple principles were the root. Civilization and religion brought refinement and culture—brought the sweet amenities of life—broadened, sanctified, and ennobled the severe fiber of the Saxon chief. Follow him through time, see him clad in the gay garments of the cavalier, decked in plumes, splendid in court and camp, the Sidneys, the Raleighs, the Ruperts still retain beneath the gay exterior of a knight-errant the stern virtues of the Scandinavian warrior.

There never was a time in the history of the Anglo-Saxon race, from the invasion of Great Britain until the settlement of Virginia, that its highest thought, its holiest customs, its grandest endeavor were not inspired by those same sentiments which we designate "southern chivalry."

It was not persecution nor greed for gold that tempted the first settlers of Virginia and the Carolinas to brave the terrors and dangers of a trackless and unexplored ocean, or to endure the hardships and face the perils of the wilderness and the savage. They were filled with the spirit of high adventure; they were the lineal sons of the Norse kings, "who had never slept under the smoky rafters of a roof; who had never drained the ale horn by an inhabitated hearth;" who laughed at wind and storm and sang:

The blast of the tempest aids our oars; the bellowing of Heaven, the howling of the thunder, hurt us not; the hurricane is our servant and drives us whither we wish to go.

They carried the banners of heraldry and the scepter of power, planted them upon the smoky tops of the Blue Ridge, and bore them across the fertile fields of Kentucky and Tennessee and the undulating, far-stretching plains of the West, till at last they were mirrored in the Father of Waters and the placid bosom of the Lakes.

They multiplied in numbers, grew in prosperity and wealth, and in a higher and finer civilization. In their hour of ease and culture they were the exquisite models of "that generous loyalty to rank and sex, that proud submission, that dignified obedience, that subordination of the heart which kept alive, even in servitude itself, the spirit of an exalted freedom. The unbought grace of life, the cheap defense of nations, the nurse of manly sentiment and heroic enterprise. * That sensibility of principle, that chastity of honor, which felt a stain like a wound, which inspired courage whilst it mitigated ferocity, which ennobled whatever it touched, and under which vice itself lost half of its evil by losing all of its grossness."

But they were never enervated by ease nor softened by civilization; they never deviated a hair's breadth from the rigid rectitude of their fathers; their sons preserved a changeless fidelity to duty, and their daughters a chastity as immaculate as the snows upon the mountain peaks.

As illustrative of this fine idea of duty which ran in sunlight and shadow through all the life of WILLIAM BATE, and, as illustrative of its hold upon the race, I would recount a touching incident told of the battle of Cressy. It is said that when the gay and festive chivalry of France had dashed themselves to pieces against the fixed and immovable English columns, when the mailed hand of Edward III had crushed into the mire and blood of the ensanguined field the fleur de lis of France, then the blind King of Bohemia, unwilling to hear the death groans of his friends, unwilling to listen to the wail of disaster and defeat, unwilling to survive his companions, had his horse bound fast and tight to a charger upon either side, and between his trusty courtiers, guided by the turmoil and thunder of the fight, dashed to death. When night came and the pale moon looked down upon 30,000 slain, they found three horses standing like silent sentinels and three dead riders at their feet, and between his companions, with the seal of death upon his blind eyes, lay the brave old King of Bohemia.

A white triplumed crest dappled in blood still clung to his dauntless brow, and on it was inscribed the simple motto "Ich dien"-I serve. It thrilled five centuries of English history past and rang through a thousand years of civilization yet to come. The most martial of England's kings reverently lifted that simple crest and placed it, as a deathless laurel, upon the brow of his first-born son; and to-day, more precious than all the trophies wrung from Poictiers, Agincourt, or Waterloo, high above all the bloody swords and battered shields and tattered banners taken in a thousand years of conquest, that has girded the earth and mastered the sea, old England still holds aloft that triplumed crest as the proud insignia of all her princes yet unborn and all her uncrowned kings.

I could write upon the tomb of WILLIAM B. BATE, with truth and with sincerity, the motto of the Prince of Wales and the dead Bohemian king-I serve. One single incident in his life portrays in rare and radiant colors his flawless devotion to duty. Wounded at Shiloh, his horse shot under him at Chickamauga, wounded again before Atlanta, ragged, emaciated, racked with pain, with pallid face and thin lips set, you see that heroic figure on his crutches amid his companions in arms. It was at this time that there came to him the tempting offer of civic honors, of ease and wealth and fame. Unsolicited, a grateful and trusting people laid at his feet the chief magistracy of a sovereign State. The old soldier was immovable, setting his face like a flint toward the foe, whom he knew was destined to ultimate victory, he took in his manly arms his wretched companions and sent back to those who would tempt him with office or power that message which shall thrill all Tennesseans in the centuries yet to come:

I shall accept no civic honor as long as an enemy of Tennessee desecrates her soil.

Yonder in front of the White House, carved from bronze that for ages shall defy the wasting tooth of time, is an inspiring figure—a horse and rider facing the foe, instinct with courage and with life, drinking delight of battle upon the bloody plains.

It was not necessary to inscribe upon its base the name of Old Hickory. I invoke the genius of sculpture and of art to place beside it a companion piece; not an equestrian figure, but one bowed and racked with pain, leaning upon a broken crutch, covered with the blood and dirt of battle, with his back upon honor, wealth, and ease and still facing, with resolute and unfal-tering courage, gloom and disaster, death and defeat. Jackson and Bate, fitting companions on the field of fame, twin stars in the galaxy of Tennessee's deathless and deified heroes.

It is true that his dauntless band endured famine and disaster, wounds and pestilence and death for a lost cause, that the flag they followed, now furled forever, is a conquered banner. But that banner and its story-

Sung by poets and by sages, Shall go sounding down the ages, Though its folds are in the dust.

It is an unholy cause or a weak one that needs the vulgar seal of success. He who perishes in a bad cause is a victim; he who dies for a good one, lost though it be, is a blessed martyr. Can you try the deathless dead by the narrow standard of success? If the laurel must always crown the hero's brow, we shall leave Hannibal at Zama, Napoleon at Waterloo, Columbus in prison, and Latimer at the stake. Proudly and

I sing the hymn of the conquered, who fell in the battle of life,
The hymn of the wounded, the beaten, who died overwhelmed in the strife;
Not the jubilant song of the victors, for whom the resounding acclaim
Of nations was lifted in chorus, whose brows were the chaplet of fame,
But the hymn of the low and the humble, the weary, the broken in

But the hymn of the low and the humble, the weary, the broken in heart,
Who strove and who failed, acting bravely a silent and desperate part;
Whose youth bore no flower on its branches, whose hopes burned in ashes away.

From whose hands slipped the prize they had grasped at, who stood at the dying of day
With the wreck of their life all around them, unpitied, unheeded, alone,
With Death swooping down o'er their failure, and all but their faith overthrown.

While the voice of the world shouts its chorus, its pæan for those who have won,
While the trumpet is sounding triumphant, and high to the breeze and

While the trumpet is sounding triumphant, and high to the breeze and

Glad banners are waving, hands clapping, and hurrying feet Thronging after the laurel-crowned victors, I stand on the field of defeat, In the shadow, with those who are fallen and wounded and dying, and then

Chant a requiem low, place my hand on their pain-knotted brows, breathe a prayer, Hold the hand that is helpless, and whisper, "They only the victory

Hold the hand that is helpless, and winsper, win win win have fought the good fight, and have vanquished the demon that tempts us within; Who have held to their faith unseduced by the prize that the world holds on high; Who have dared for a high cause to suffer, resist, fight—if need be, to die."

Speak, History, who are life's victors? Unroll thy long annals, and say Are they those whom the world called the victors—who won the success of a day?

The martyrs or Nero? The Spartans, who fell at Thermopylæ's tryst, Or the Persians and Xerxes? His judges or Socrates? Pilate or Christ?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, on this Sabbath day we turn from the busy scenes of life to the contemplation of death. We stand weak, powerless, and appalled before the last enemy, our very souls echoing the thoughts that thrilled the heart of the poet who described the last hours of the brave Greek:

Come to the bridal chamber, Death;
Come to the mother, when she feels
For the first time her firstborn's breath;
Come when the blessed seals
That close the pestilence are broke
And crowned cities wall its stroke;
Come in consumption's ghastly form,
The earthquake shock, the ocean storm;
Come when the heart beats high and warm
With banquet song and dance and wine;
And thou are terrible—the tear,
The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier;
And all we know or dream or fear
Of agony are thine.

WILLIAM B. BATE was a soldier of two wars, a patriot, a distinguished lawyer, a pure and able statesman, and a Christian

Devoted to his Southland and to his high ideals of duty, he never hesitated to give his time, his talents, and, if need be, lay down his life for the right as he saw it. A striking instance of his devotion to duty and high principles was shown in 1863, when though racked with pain and shattered by wounds he declined the honor and comparative ease and luxury of the governorship of Tennessee to remain in the army, saying:

As a son of Tennessee and a southern soldier I would feel dishonored in this hour of trial to quit the field. No, sirs; while an armed fee treads our soil and I can fire a shot or draw a blade, I will take no civic honor. I had rather, amid her misfortunes, be the defender than the governor of Tennessee.

Rarely have the marked characteristics of any man been so clearly portrayed in so few words. These were no idle sentiments; they were this man's early conceived principles, adhered to by him through sunshine and storm, through adversity and prosperity, to the close of a long and distinguished life.

A native of Sumner County, Tenn., he volunteered as a private in the Mexican war, in May, 1846, in Company F, Fourth Louisiana Infantry, and served with courage and fidelity in Mexico. In August, 1846, his company and regiment were mustered out, and he received an honorable discharge as a private. He afterwards attended the law school at Lebanon, Tenn., and shortly after completion of his studies he was elected prose-cuting attorney for his judicial district, discharging the duties with marked energy and ability.

A strong States-rights Democrat, he was an elector on the John C. Breckinridge Presidential ticket.

Immediately after the bombardment of Fort Sumter he advocated secession by Tennessee, and on her call for State troops volunteered as a private, was shortly made captain of his company, and, a little later, colonel of his regiment. So conspicuous was his gallantry and efficiency that he was honorably mentioned by Generals Cleburne and Hardee, and on October 3, 1862, he was promoted to brigadier-general.

The Eufaula Battery under Bate fired the first gun on Friday evening at Chickamauga and the last gun on Sunday evening, and the war maps show that BATE led his men that day farther to the front than any other man. In this engagement Bate's brigade entered the fight with 1,055 muskets, and had killed and wounded 607 men. Every field officer in his brigade, except two or three, was either killed or wounded. After the battle President Davis followed in the track where Bate and his men had fought, and in less than thirty days Brigadier-General BATE of infantry was offered a major-general's commission of cavalry.

Many times he was severely wounded, and each time re-turned to active duty at the earliest moment he was fit for

For a more brilliant record for gallantry and efficiency and those sterling qualities that make our greatest soldiers we would search in vain. More love for his Southland had no man; none submitted to sacrifice and danger more cheerfully or followed the path of duty more strictly. Ability of the highest, ideals of the loftiest, an unstained sword, and a spotless character, is it any wonder that Tennessee delighted to honor her gifted and noble son?

He was no less conspicuous as a statesman than he was as a soldier. He served his State in peace with the same fidelity he had shown in war. He was defeated for the United States Senate by Andrew Johnson in 1870 by one vote.

Elected governor of Tennessee in 1882 and reelected in 1884. Elected to the United States Senate in 1887 and reelected in 1893, 1899, and 1905. He contracted pneumonia on March 4, 1905, at the inauguration ceremonies, from which he died.

His public and private life was exemplary; his military record a brilliant one. An able statesman, a consistent Christian, a noble citizen has entered on sleep.

Tennessee may well mourn and this House well honor this distinguished soldier, patriot, lawyer, and statesman, for it can be well said of him that he was indeed both "great and good."

In the death of Senator Bate another of the brave soldiers of forty years ago has answered the last summons and joined the great majority.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress we had thirty-two ex-Confederates in this House and sixteen in the Senate. This Congress numbers eight in the former and twelve in the latter. They are falling almost as rapidly as they fell in battle. The brave men whom they met in conflict, and by whose deeds of valor they well measured their manhood and chivalry, are falling at the rate of 1,000 a month.

Our deceased friend and colleague was a conspicuous figure in an army that has been rarely, if ever, equaled for valor, self-sacrifice, and devotion to duty.

The principles for which they fought and the righteousness of their cause is being recognized more and more by the world's best minds as the years pass by. It will not be many years before thoughtful men everywhere will be saying that possibly after all it would have been better for constitutional government and human liberty had the principles contended for in that struggle been established and maintained.

It is impossible to contemplate the passing away of these Confederates without calling to mind the conditions after their defeat that tried even more than war their courage and fortitude. We search the histories in vain for a parallel case to theirs. In this era of good feeling we do not like to dwell upon the helpless and almost hopeless condition of the southern soldiers and their families after Appomattox. Under good laws well administered it would have been a herculean task to restore their fallen fortunes. That they succeeded under all the evils of the worst legislation that ever affected a people is simply a miracle, and stamps them as the best, bravest, and truest men that have ever lived in all the tide of time.

The philosophical historian of the future will tell the wonderful story of their achievements in peace, and our children's children will set it to their credit as equal, if not surpassing, the victories they had won in war.

Before the last old soldier joins his comrades on the other side he will see his beloved Southland stronger in material resources and side as a soldier point. sources and richer per capita than any part of the Union.

Treating the character of our deceased colleague as a type of the Confederate soldier, let me present this thought for the con-sideration of my colleagues and the friends of the deceased, as well as the reading public. The southern soldiers of the civil war were men of faith. They were raised in a period when faith was emphasized by the mothers of the South. The most momentous period for the South was from about 1840 to 1860. The character of the southern soldier was formed by their mothers chiefly during that period. It was a period of great prosperity and the fathers were making money. The wealth they then accumulated prolonged the unequal struggle for four years. The sons went to war strong in faith-not an ideal faith, mind you-not perfect, but sound and strong. if you will, the revivals in the Confederate army. It was won-derful. The strongest in faith remained to the last. The gentlest are always the bravest. They held many weak-hearted and weak-minded to their part by the powerful influence of example. Then those of most faith were often the first to fall. Death loves a shining mark, both in war and peace. We missed them daily and often said, "This can not last; all will be killed." But many returned. They and their sons have made this Southland to bloom as a rose.

They have set an example of faith that has been an inspiration and uplift to their fellow-citizens of this Republic. The Confederate soldier was an optimist during the war. He has been one since. He lived on faith and he fought with faith. Unfortunately many of them are living on faith alone now. In part, through his example, an atmosphere of faith has been created in our country. This faith has been quickened by science, literature, and poetry, all drawing inspiration from the Father and His Word. Could our colleague wire us from the spirit world to-day he would say with Browning:

God's in his heaven, All's right with the world.

Or from Death in the Desert:

I say the acknowledgment of God in Christ, Accepted by the reason, solves for thee All questions in the earth and out of it, And has so far advanced thee to be wise.

Or from the best illustration of faith ever written, he would give us this from In Memoriam:

Strong Son of God, immortal love; Whom we, that have not seen Thy face, By faith, and faith alone, embrace, Believing where we can not prove.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, this is an occasion for speaking words of soberness and truth concerning a departed friend. It is so much a characteristic of our people and time to exaggerate in praise, and possibly to blame too much, that one of the most difficult accomplishments is to measure accurately a man's character and work and to express in terms of sobriety and truthfulness the estimate formed.

General Bate, as we knew him and as others before us knew him, was a man of high character and heroic purpose. He was a man of undoubted honesty and courage, a man who, unlike a large majority of us, had his own views of things and measured and directed his own course of conduct in accordance with those views. Most of us, chameleon like, take on the hues of our surroundings and change from time to time as they change. There are a few who seem to have an inner controlling life of their own, which colors things about them instead of taking color from objects and incidents with which they are brought into contact. Most of us in our little voyage through life hug the shore and forget the stars, and so are guided or misguided by the weak, near-by lights that shine dimly through the fog.

There are a few who seem to steer by the pole star, who get their light from the distance, beyond the mists, a light that, unvarying, faints not, changes not; and through the years of life, be they few or be they many, their bark is steered in a steady course by a fixed, unfailing light. General BATE seemed to be a man of that kind.

A soldier in the Mexican war, as a young man he shouldered his musket to go to distant fields of carnage and glory in the heroic day of a generation now gone. He illustrated, as hundreds of others did upon many a bloody field in far Mexico, the heroic qualities which characterized him and characterized the American soldier of that day, and, as we think, characterize the American soldier of every day. He made his way in civil life honorably, studiously, and courageously, having fixed principles and a steady hold upon them. When the warning notes of the great strife between the States came, when the storm long brewing broke, and the fateful bugles stirred the martial spirit of a proud, brave, confident people, it was natural that he, as it was natural that his neighbors also, should volunteer, and did volunteer, to fight under the banner of the stars and bars.

It would be surprising if he had not been a good soldier in that trying civil-war time, because he had given evidence and promise of the possession of the qualities necessary to make a good soldier. It was a time when the chivarly of the South, the manhood of the South, the courage and devotion and sacrifice of the South were challenged for all they were worth. Saying nothing—and here is not the time to say it—as to the causes of the war, or whether the war might have been avoided, or who was most at fault, or who was most in the right, the real test put up to the southern people was that of meeting at the threshold of home an invading force, a hostile army—an army of their brethren, it is true, but brethren in arms warring against them. That brought out, as it necessarily would bring out in that age or in any age of our country under any circumstances, the fighting forces and heroism of the old South.

General Bate was not an exceptional man in that great contest. There were few exceptional men in it. It was a contest in which nearly all were heroes, some in humble position in the ranks, charging with the bayonet, resisting the bloody onslaught; some in the garb of officers and with sword in hand; but in general it was a warfare of heroes, and the man who was not a hero in the strife was the exceptional man. This man of whom we speak to-day bore himself well in that war, as so many hundreds, so many thousands and tens of thousands of others, did. That he was sincere and that he was honest, that he was devoted to duty as he saw it, he gave, as so many others gave, the highest and final evidence, the conclusive proof, putting up his life as a risk, as a stake of the contest, and offering it a ready forfeit for success and against failure.

Shattered and broken in the conflict, wounded, sore, and bleeding, he still clung to his standards and clung to his sense of duty; still braved the dangers and the horrors of the battlefield. It was grand and heroic; it marked the character of a man made of the stern, sturdy stuff that is not exceptional, but rather characteristic of the American citizen. After the war, after the bloody strife had ended, after the cause was indeed a lost cause, lost forever, after the old Stars and Stripes again waved in triumph over the land, General Bate addressed himself, as so many thousands of others did, to the duties and cares and responsibilities of civil life, under sad circumstances, when everything was trying, when most things were depressing, and when but little was encouraging or inspiring. That in the period of rehabilitation following the war he acquitted himself bravely and well is undoubtedly true, and in speaking this truth we are speaking in honor of him and of those who shared the burdens and the cares, and, finally, the triumphs of those years.

It was perfectly natural that General Bate should be honored after the war by his people, as he was honored, in being made governor of a proud State and Senator in one of the greatest legislative bodies known to civilized man. That he acquitted himself well in these official stations is a credit to him, and no surprise to those who knew him. The South has honored her heroes, and has loved to honor them. There is, however, still left by the war that sentiment which prevails somewhere and manifests itself now and again, and that, not in the South, but somewhere else does put a certain kind of handicap upon the man who cast in his lot with the lost cause, and who in the terrible war wore the garb of gray, or who is a dutiful son of the South. Surely the South has shown a loyalty and devotion to the men who stood by her and fought for her in the dark and trying days of '61 to '65. These old heroes, as also those who fought against them, are fast passing away. The great majority are already numbered with the dead, and those who still linger are advancing in years and soon will pass over the great mystic river that all of us must cross. North, south, east, and west, as we get further and further from the bitter memories of the war, and as we paint in brighter colors and dwell in more loving phrase and more kindly thought upon its many glorious deeds, they are honored and revered more and more, whether they wore the blue or the gray. Only yesterday, all over the Southland, at many places in the North, and in lands beyond the seas, the memory of a southern soldier, one of the greatest men, not only of our own country and age, but of all countries and all ages, was strikingly honored in the celebration, in solemn and glorious form, of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth.

It is very difficult to speak of the living justly, kindly, and bravely. It is even more difficult to speak of the dead as real facts, tempered by mercy and charity, and yet guided and directed by courage and honesty, would suggest. As we come to the portals of the grave, as we bend over the bier of the departed, as we linger about the mound covered with flowers, under which rests him who was but no longer is of this world, judgment seems to surrender control, moderation to give way to extravagance, and we too often lose ourselves in an infinitude of meaningless phrases which sound and roll but signify nothing. Of this man it can be said-and if he could hear what we are saying, if it were possible, as it may be, for him to revisit these scenes and to know this afternoon what we are doing. I believe it would be pleasing to him to hear us in sincerity speak it of him-that he was a sturdy, honest, manly man; not the greatest man who ever lived, not the man upon whom ought to be piled the most exuberant utterance and the loftiest sounding words that our language may afford, but one who may be spoken of honestly and moderately as a man of the common people, honest to the core, true to principle and to friends and to duty; a man who hewed his way through life without asking odds of any, who never hesitated to strike when it was a duty to strike, and who never inflicted a needless hardship or a wrong upon any men consciously or knowingly.

We can say of him in moderation things which can be said truthfully of very few of us, and those things are words of praise—a good man, a true man, a brave man, a reliable friend and a faithful public servant, honest in the relations of public life and private life, ready to concede to others all that he asked for himself, demanding for himself nothing but what he regarded as his right; standing sturdily, whatever the odds or whatever the circumstances, where he thought duty required him to stand; opposing what he thought ought to be opposed and forwarding as far as he could what he thought ought to be advanced. This is a noble type of a sturdy manhood; this is a man out of the setting of the old age; a man who grew up in the pioneer days, who was disciplined and strengthened and developed in the hard times of the frontier, where the sturdy virtues shine, when the ornamentation of which we know so much to-day was absent, when men were esteemed for what they were and not so much for what they appeared to be, or for what the adornments of wealth could add or what the blandishments of influence or power might give them for their brief day.

This man grew up in the wilds among a sturdy and heroic people. He was one of them. Their characteristics were his characteristics. He illustrated through his life just what he was. It was easy to know what he thought upon any question. It was easy, once you knew him, to anticipate what he would do in any particular emergency. He was not a man who sought to display all the attractive qualities that he possessed. He never sought to magnify himself or exploit himself. He was ever ready to hear the call of duty; but he never pushed himself forward; he was a plain, substantial, reliable, good man; a thoroughgoing, conscientious, faithful, devoted public servant; absolutely honest, incorruptible; a man for whom the blandishments of power had no charm, a man who never was affected by the frowns of those who might be above him, and never was swerved from any duty of his post by the sycophancy of those below him, who desired to accomplish something through him.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest thing about a man after all probably is the essence of real character. Now and then, and indeed frequently, you meet charms and graces and power of in-There are always to be found in the broad walks and tellect. in the narrow paths of life, everywhere, at all times, the excellent virtues that belong to good-fellowship and home, a kindly spirit and lovable disposition, the sturdy uncomplaining courage and patience with which burdens are borne, a modesty which is captivating; but seldom, oh, so seldom, is there combined, as there was combined in that man of whom I spoke a moment ago and whose memory now is a world memory, whose story is the story of the ages, whose example is for all time, that consummation and sublimation that gathers together all of perfection as nearly as it is possible in human form to find it, all of the graces and charms, all the strength, moderation, and restraint, all the breadth and generosity of the ideal yet real man.

Of course I speak of that rare man, Lee, of whom they spoke yesterday and last night—the man whose name is ringing down the aisles of time and whose memory will be as shining an example for thousands of years as it is to-day, aye, ten thousand years from to-day, if there be no hiatus in history, as it is now; of that grand old chieftain under whom General BATE fought with dauntless courage, who was not only great on the battlefield, but great in the council and transcendentally great in the elements of manhood and all things that go to illustrate the character of the gentlest, proudest, loftiest, noblest soul that our God in his wisdom, in the ages that have gone and in the time that is, ever breathed into one solitary human being.

Speaking of these sturdy qualities of General Bate, one is reminded almost irresistibly of the magnificent personality, of the matchless qualities, of the human completeness of his great commander. They have crossed over the river; they are gone to the other side; and the more we dwell upon them and the more we pattern after their virtues and their excellencies the better for us while we live and the better for our memories after we

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, we have assembled to commemorate the life, the character, and public services of Senator William B. Bate. Arkansas joins with her sister States in expressing a sense of appreciation for the virtues of that faithful, favored, gifted son of Tennessee, who moves no more among the living.

From a consideration of his long, eventful life, crowned with every honor human love could give and fruitful of every benefit his efforts could confer upon his people, we learn the wisest lesson finite minds can grasp—the merit of right living. In this solenn hour, made sacred to his memory, we recall his un-wavering fidelity to duty, his lifelong loyalty to manly honor. These are the pillars upon which his character was built. The achievements of selfish ambition are transient. The crowns they bring to weary brows soon crumble into dust. Their laurels wither in an hour. Their monuments are quickly obscured beneath the sands of time. But the monuments which patriots build defy the wrath of storms and master the might Self-sacrifice and devotion to duty are the and blight of time. most enduring attributes that adorn the soul. In the life of Senator Bare these qualities predominated.

There is a fullness, a completeness in his career that calms our grief and thrills our hearts with inspiration. For almost eighty years he lived to bless the world with noble thoughts and generous deeds. Those eighty years were crowded with important events to our nation and to the world. The highway that he chose in life was never devious. It was straight from the hour of his birth to the hour of his death. Like a lane between open fields, it ran all the way without one crook or turn. It was bright as the shining pathway of the just.

Few men live so long as he lived. Not many lives are filled with honors such as crowned his brow. It was given to him to serve his State and his nation in many positions of exalted trust. He always kept the faith. He never failed to do his He guarded with sacred fidelity every interest intrusted to his care. His life was rich with varied experience. He knew all the hardships of physical toil, the peace of well-earned repose, the elation of success, the uncertainty of combat, the glory of triumph, and met with fortitude the high tide of defeat. Two things he never knew: Fear and dishonor. The great charm of his life story is that through all his years, through reverses and successes, his character remained un-changed, unsullied, and his name unstained.

Whether we think of him as a lad working in the sunny fields of Tennessee within sight and sound of the spot that gave him birth, or as a clerk on a steamboat that plowed the bosom of the Mississippi in the days when railroads were almost unknown; whether we observe him as a private soldier following with intrepid courage the Stars and Stripes in the war with Mexico, or leading the dashing battalions of the Confederacy amid scenes of bloody combat in the civil war; whether we contemplate him as State legislator, lawyer, public prosecutor, Presidential elector, governor, or Senator, he is the same humble yet indomitable spirit, always guided by heroic courage and unfaltering resolution.

He was as gallant in battle as the "Bravest of the Brave." When the civil war began, he was among the first Tennesseans to enlist in the Confederate army. Had either the State or the nation called alone, he would have responded joyfully, for the fear of danger never moved him. Had either Tennessee or the United States called him to arms against a foreign foe, his heart would have leaped to the contest, for the love of battle stirred him. But the call was the cry of Tennessee against the Union. Let no man living doubt that this ordeal was severe. To him who had known the glory of the Union flag and uplifted its fair folds in victory in a foreign land, the test was awful. But the brave man never faltered. He believed that Tennessee was right, and he went to battle under a strange, new flag, against the banner that his services in Mexico had helped to sanctify to freedom. We see him, wounded at Shiloh, his horse shot under him, in the very chasm of the conflict; we behold him at Hoovers Gap, holding at bay with a few men the army of General Rosecrans. He stands by the river of death, wel-coming with open arms the oncoming foe when Chickamauga's carnival of death begins. We see him fighting at the head of his troops, undaunted, fearless, pressing farthest to the front. One thousand and fifty-five brave hearts charge into the conflict with him. When the fury of the battle is spent, six hundred and seven of them lie dead or wounded on the field, and among them lies almost every field officer in the regiment. He stands like a mountain of valor between Bragg's retreating hosts and utter rout at Missionary Ridge.

At Resaca he is breasting the flood of death and driving the enemy before him. He plunges into the trenches at Dallas and grapples hand to hand with his foes. Leading the flank movement under General Hardee, he precipitates the bloody battle He is next falling in wrath on the Federal at Eutaw Springs, and plucking from its steady grasp the Union standards with the arm of victory; wounded again, he soon returns to his duty, and we see him with Hood fighting against fate through the disastrous Tennessee campaign. He faces death and baffles despair at Franklin, leading his soldiers into the enemy's trenches, and inspiring them by his own example to deeds of reckless daring. Behold him at Nashville when "the ranks are rolled in vapor and the winds are laid with sound," his regiment surrounded, himself still suffering from a wound, cheering his men to deeds of hopeless daring by the well-known signal of his crutch waved in mid air. He followed with the heroism of despair the receding tide of the Confederacy as it ebbed back into the Carolinas, and at Bentonville displayed unequaled valor, although he must have known his cause was doomed. When at Greensboro, N. C., May 1, 1865, he accepted his parole, he surrendered hate and malice, and resolved to start in life anew.

In that great war every battle produced a thousand heroes. In all the hosts that went to strife from 1861 to 1865 there was no braver soldier, no truer patriot, no nobler man in either army than WILLIAM B. BATE.

In politics, Senator Bate was a Democrat. He believed in the doctrine of States rights-the right and power of a State to govern itself in all matters of local concern. He thought that the States, having created the Federal Union, had the right to dissolve it when a cause arose that seemed to the State to justify such action. When the question of the right and power of a State to secede from the Union had been determined against his views, he accepted the construction written with the sword by the hand of war on the Constitution in letters of blood, and, acknowledging the indissolubility of the Union, sought with sublime earnestness to preserve the liberties of the people and the rights of the States under the Constitution and within the Union.

When the war had passed and peace had come again to bless a reunited country, he began the practice of his profession, pursuing it with diligence and patience. As a lawyer he was successful. It is written that his services as public prosecutor were characterized by that high sense of duty and regard for ethics that seemed to inspire him in every relation of life. He served his party in its conventions and as Presidential elector, and was called by the people of Tennessee to the governor's office in 1882, and again in 1884 he was elected to that exalted position.

The last phase of his career began with his election to the United States Senate in 1887. How well he discharged the duties of Senator may be determined from the fact that for four successive terms he was elected to represent his State. The records of the Senate disclose that he was foremost in securing legislation for the advancement and improvement of agriculture. He resisted with all his power the attempt to pass the force bill. He maintained that the people of the States are capable of holding their own elections; that to impose Federal supervision of elections in the State is an unwarranted trespass by the General Government upon the right and power of the States to govern themselves. The defeat of the force bill was encompassed, and Senator BATE was reintrenched in the affections of the people of the South. He stood firmly against the forced alliance of Arizona with New Mexico, and ended his Senatorial career with a victory in behalf of what he deemed self-government.

Senator Bate was a distinct representative of a type of Senator that is rapidly passing. The ex-Confederate soldier will soon disappear from the United States Senate. Since the close of the war the Southern States have attested their faith in the men who fought the battles of the Confederacy by uniformly lavishing political honors upon them. The most distinguished Senators from the Southern States during the last thirty years were ex-Confederate soldiers. They had been tried in the glow of a fiery furnace and the public knew them to be worthy of honor and of confidence. Only a few remain in the Senate, but their presence there evidences the love and confidence which they earned by valor and retained by fidelity. What a race of men they were! What hardships they endured; what privations they experienced; what difficulties they encountered; what disappointments they met with; what victories they achieved; what defeats they suffered! What valorous deeds they performed in war; what patriotic purposes prompted them in peace! Bravest of soldieries the wars of the earth have known, our nation salutes you. Scarred cheeks and empty sleeves are your badges of bravery; honor, your watchword; courage, your inspiration; hope, your emblem; imperishable glory is, and ever shall be, your reward!

On Shiloh's field, fertilized with the ashes of fallen heroes and washed by streams of patriots' blood, stands a monument to the name of Bate. His fame is linked indissolubly with the glory of that field. But in the homes of Tennessee, crowning her hills and nestling in the shadows that lock within their soft embrace her peaceful valleys, are monuments to his renown more enduring than marble shafts. Those monuments are the love of loyal hearts and the confidence of faithful friends.

the love of loyal hearts and the confidence of faithful friends.

Farmer, lawyer, soldier, statesman! Faithful old friend of the people. You sleep to-day in the bosom of Tennessee secure in the love of all her citizens. She has given to fame a thousand names immortal, but none more everlasting than your own. For your patriotism and moderation, your nobility of purpose, your indomitable resolution, the Republic mourns your death and reveres your memory.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the resolutions commemorative of the life and services of Gen. WILLIAM B. BATE, late Senator from the State of Tennessee, who died in this city on March 9, 1905.

My acquaintance with the late Senator dates from the period of the civil war, when every true son of the South felt impelled to devote himself to her cause and to the protection of her soil.

I first met him during the north Georgia campaign of a hundred days, when, as was once described by the distinguished general himself, "every movement was a battlefield and every battlefield a graveyard; when for one hundred days cannons thundered and muskets flashed, and for one hundred nights the stars looked down on new-made graves and new battle lines stained with blood." In all these conflicts General Bate took a conspicuous part. I remember vividly his courtesy and affability to me, a youthful staff officer, the more marked because of his commanding position.

Mr. Speaker, the story of Senator Bate's career has been told by faithful and loving eulogists. His career illustrates the beneficence of our institutions and how much may be accomplished under them by self-denial, hard work, inherent virtue, and earnestness of purpose. Young men may take courage from his example.

Born in the State of Tennessee, which he loved so well and served so splendidly throughout life, he received early an academic education, yet to broaden his practical knowledge and to maintain himself he worked as second clerk on a steamboat between Nashville and New Orleans. Later the military ardor inherent in the youth inspired him to enlist as a private throughout the Mexican war in Louisiana and Tennessee regiments, gaining an experience qualifying, training him for the brilliant career achieved in the four years of our bloody struggle.

Returning from the Mexican war, he applied himself to the study of the law, the profession of his choice, graduating from the Lebanon Law School in 1852. His rise was steady, crowded as the bar of Tennessee was by men of legal talents and acquirements, and even thus early his fellow-citizens conferred upon him many honors and evidences of confidence and distinction.

But Bate was much more than a sound successful lawyer and politician. He was not much beyond 30 years when the war began that involved our land in four years of desolatory conflict. The young lawyer was quick to take up arms for his State and section. Notwithstanding some military experience, he deemed it best to begin at the foot of the ladder. He enlisted as a private, but his capacity for duty as an officer, his industry, zeal, and high soldierly qualities soon secured for him a commission and steadily carried him through the various grades of lieutenant, captain, colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general, surrendering with the army of Tennessee in 1865.

Three times he was dangerously wounded, carrying the marks of his bravery to his dying day.

This rise was not due to favor or influence. He won his spurs fairly by solid, enduring merit and by the faithful performance of duty.

He rose to high rank in an army of brave men and skillful, tried, heroic officers, in such a host as has never been excelled in the story of human achievement, virtue, and endurance. Fighting against terrible odds, imperfectly armed and equipped, ill-fed, having no reenforcements to draw upon, fighting long months a losing battle, we can now hardly realize the constancy and inflexible courage it required in the commander, the strain upon the officers and men, but every one who knew or who served with General Bate in those dark days bears witness to his wonderful heroism and his knightly qualities.

He was a man among men.

Those who knew him personally and the strength of his personal character knew also there would be—there could be—no duty that he would not perform, whatever might be the personal risk or sacrifice; whatever man could do in onset or to cover retreat in case of disaster he would be sure to do.

He was a hero in the midst of heroes. By these he has been judged, and so the verdict will stand forever.

His monument is the history of the western army of the Southern Confederacy.

When that unfortunate war closed in conquest, ruin, and humiliation for the South, General Bate returned to his work as a lawyer; but even then, when the road to public distinction seemed closed to the returning soldiers of the lost cause, men like these were the natural counselors and leaders of the people, though in private life. Energetic in peace as he had been in war, he aided in wresting control of his State from the unworthy grasp of camp followers and renegades, and assisted to rehabilitate her after the degradation into which she had been plunged by the remorseless hordes which had used her only for purposes of plunder and personal aggrandizement.

But, Mr. Speaker, capabilities such as General Bate possessed were not permitted by his fellow-citizens to escape further public service in behalf of his people. Soon after Tennessee again came into the control of her own, in 1882, he was elected governor, and reelected without opposition in 1884. In January, 1887, he was elected to the United States Senate, and took his seat March 4 following, to which he was thrice reelected, holding this great position to the day of his death.

And upon his entrance into that distinguished assemblage he found himself, indeed, in goodly and familiar company, many of them men who, like himself, had given their youth and blood to the cause in which he had borne so conspicuous a part.

Among them I may mention Berry and Jones, of Arkansas; BLACKBURN and Beck, of Kentucky; Joseph E. Brown and Colquitt, of Georgia; Butler and Hampton, of South Carolina; Cockrell and Vest, of Missouri; DANIEL, of Virginia; Eustis and Gibson, of Louisiana; George and Walthall, of Mississippi; Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee; Reagan and Coke, of Texas; Matt. Ransom and Zebulon Vance, of North Carolina, and Mor-GAN and Pugh, of Alabama—all of them bearing as eminent a part in the councils of the nation as they did in the campaigns and on the battlefields of the lost cause.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not dwell upon General Bate's career in the Senate. He led a quiet and simple life, such as the Senators from the South led in the old days when their thoughts and utterances were molding the doctrines of the Republic. But he was not an idle man. He neglected no public duty. wasted no time in dissipation or the pursuit of pleasure.

was a practical, laborious Senator.

He studied all the public questions that came up, and on these he formed his opinions quietly and firmly. Everyone knew where to find him.

Thoughtful, observant, studious, and upright, courteous, yet frank and truthful, when he did speak he proved himself an able thinker, a brilliant and forceful speaker. He did not go around seeking to make friends; he had no such art; but such was his perfect rectitude, his love of truth, and his courtesy that when he passed from the Senate to his great reward there was not one there who did not feel that he who had died was worthy to have been a senator of Rome when Rome survived.

Tennessee loved and honored her noble son, and in this she honored herself. Never once was her pride and confidence in him withdrawn or even weakened. Bate could not but know and prize this wealth of trust and affection from his own people.

In the death of a man of the stamp of Senator Bate a whole nation sustains a loss. No man breathed who was more sincerely devoted to the best interests of his country, and his career as a Mexican and Confederate soldier and in public life is jeweled with examples of his admirable devotion to duty.

The State of Tennessee was his pride. To her he brought commanding talents, patriotic purpose, and a zeal for the cause of her people's rights.

In the councils of his country he was eminent for his wisdom, his eloquence, and purity of character.

Mr. Speaker, there has been no epoch in the history of mankind when public trusts were more difficult, when to serve the state required higher ability and higher personal qualities than in the thirty years that followed the civil war, and especially from the public men of the South.

They had to face a tempest of passion and a bitter prejudice that often brought a feeling to their hearts akin to despair.

To plead the cause of a weak and conquered people; to conciliate without sacrificing honor and duty, to be frank and yet not offensive; to lift up and regain the liberties of a trampled, hated, distrusted section; to make apparent all the good faith and patriotism of their constituents without resorting to unmanly recantations or fulsome protestations; to be patient and yet strong under the most trying provocation; to know what to yield and when to be firm; to hope on and fight on to restore the material prosperity and political future of their constituents, these, and far more than I can describe, were their difficult tasks.

In all this great work the wisdom, thoughtfulness, and patriotism of an heroic man like Bate was an invaluable aid to Tennessee and the entire South.

If he had ambition, who shall blame him? It was an ambition not low nor selfish nor sordkl. It inspired him to serve his State and the Union, to help to building an impoverished and suffering section, and to increase the happiness and progress of mankind.

It is by such generous aspirations that humanity advances to successive triumphs and states become great and opulent.

But, now, Mr. Speaker, we must realize that the knightly figure has gone from our view. I mean the earthly part, the casket which contained the jewel, but we can still see in the mind's eye the affable presence, the courteous mien, the kindly frank tone, the countenance in which never lurked an ignoble thought.

In the feverish, fretful struggle of life, with so much in its daily strife and contention that is sordid, saddening, and repulsive, it is refreshing to turn aside and study the lineaments of one who was a sterling patriot, an heroic soldier, a wise statesman, a devoted husband and father, a true friend, a gen-tleman of the South, in whom every element of our nature seemed blended in harmonious proportions.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, in common with all Tennesseans, I have some knowledge of Gen. WILLIAM B. BATE historically. His life touched four generations of our State, his public activities were linked with three, and during at least two of them he loomed quite large in the thoughts and affections and imaginations of our people. I had very limited opportunity, however, for obtaining a knowledge of his qualities and characteristics by personal contact or association with him. It was not my fortune to form his personal acquaintance until less than two years prior to his demise. He was the first governor of our Commonwealth whose election I can remember with distinctness, and I was but a small boy when he began his service as a Senator. His last term in the Senate began on the same day that my first and present term in the House commenced, and he died five days after this date, so that I had no opportunity of being associated with him officially.

Subsequent to my acquaintance with him, however, I was sometimes in his society, and can recall with keen pleasure conversations enjoyed with him. From these I can and do bear versations enjoyed with him. From these I can and do bear cheerful testimony to the kindly spirit which he displayed and the generous suggestions, both helpful and instructive, that he offered. His advices with myself subsequent to my election to Congress were not confined merely to the details of official duties and labor, nor to the expression of opinions and views with respect to public questions and issues, but in a kindly and, it may be said, a fatherly manner he spoke with me upon the more delicate questions of official conduct and decorum. I remember that the thought or theory which he seemed most anxious to emphasize and impress was that entire frankness, accompanied by courteous demeanor, was at once the funda-mental duty of the public servant and the surest foundation for success, both temporary and ultimate.

The man who remains long in public servicehe said, in substance-

he said, in substance—is brought face to face with many embarrassing and perplexing conditions. There are constantly arising contests between friends, confilets between rival interests, both having claims upon him. Tact and courtesy and judgment must be displayed, of course, in such situations, but the easiest way out, the way which will prove least embarrassing and contribute most to the strength of the man among the people, is and will always be an entire frankness, accompanied by firmness not less pronounced because courteous.

There is nothing new about this thought, of course; it is as old as human society. But it is one which each generation must learn and can not be too often emphasized, and I deemed it a most praiseworthy act in that honored old public servant, standing in the gathering twilight of his splendid life—a life which had been crowned with rich honors and had as trophies the highest political prizes any single Commonwealth of these United States can bestow-to turn to one just entering, and that in early life, upon public activities in an official capacity and make this thought the uppermost and most emphatic.

The proof of that theory, if, indeed, sir, it may be called a theory, was demonstrated quite conspicuously in General Bate's own career. He held five different official civil positions by election of the people. To one of these, the governorship, he was twice elected. To the Senate of the United States he was four To one of these, the governorship, he was times commissioned. He received political support from three generations of Tennesseans. In all, he served the people for thirty years in official civil capacities, and this service began twothirds of a century, almost, before it closed. If I remember correctly, he was never defeated but once when seeking public position. That was in 1875, when by one majority ex-President Johnson was elected to the Senate. And, sir, it has escaped my observa-tion in studying his history if in all that time there was one instance of his deceiving man or men; if he ever evaded or sought to evade a responsibility; if he ever failed to meet any issue of his long life at, at least, the halfway point. During his long career he was a central figure in many heated and impassioned contests. Think, sir, what changes were wrought within the span of this man's life. Measured by the history that was made and by the experiences which accompanied its making, he lived far longer than did the ancient patriarchs who dwelt in the eastern land in mankind's early forenoon. What passions, what poems, what romances, what vicissitudes and vitalities were incident to his age! All the records of human achievements through all the misty ages might be utterly destroyed—aye, effaced even from tradition and erased from human recollectionsave the records made within the years from his birth to his death and we should still have left accomplishments vast enough and great enough to appeal to highest human thought, to kindle the loftiest imagination, and to thrill human hearts with every delight and every despair which the spirit of man may feel.

age was a condensed résumé of all the ages that have been, an expanded expression of the thoughts that are, and a prophecy of the things that are to be.

From its activities and accomplishments philosopher and poet and painter and publicist and all may draw an inspiration with which to grapple the eternal problems arising from mankind's mighty movements and a wisdom with which to solve them in that manner that will lead the race onward and onward toward the heights, even the beautiful heights that lie beyond the trembling stars. The epitome of all life is in that epoch; the past, with its passion and its power; the present, with its prayer and its praise; the future, with its dread and its dreams.

And, sir, it is not saying too much to assert that the superlative of all the achievements of that period are to be found in the history of these United States. With these far-reaching in the history of these United States. With these far-reaching activities the name of General Bate was linked, not always conspicuously, indeed, but often so, and always honorably. The contests in which he engaged were so environed that they brought into public view not only every quality of strength and every reserve power belonging to the man, but disclosed the flaws and exhibited the weaknesses as well. He emerged from them all not without criticism, it is true, but without a suggestion of shame or an insinuation of lack of moral or intellectual integrity. When you come to measure the manhood of a man, what greater encomium could be desired than that it may be truly said he fought always in the open sunlight, never evading an issue, never avoiding a question, never deceiving his fellow? So far as I am familiar with the record of General Bate, private and public, that may be truly said of him, and, I think, sir, it is very, very fine.

He possessed firmness, too, as well as frankness. His will was inflexible after his judgment had pointed the way. Had it not been so I am thoroughly convinced that he could never have met with such long-continued success in receiving honors from the people of that State. A distinguishing, perhaps one may say the distinguishing, characteristic of the men of Tennessee whose names are most illustrious in our annals and are best remembered, and upon whom Tennesseans bestowed their bravest admiration and evidences of loyal love, was inflexible bravest admiration and evidences of loyal love, was inflexible determination, accompanied, it may be added, with aggressive, combative disposition. John Sevier, founder of the short-lived, romance-tinged State of Franklin and father of the eternal Commonwealth of Tennessee, upon whose simple tomb in the public square of beautiful Knoxville is inscribed the words "Thirty-five battles—thirty-five victories;" Robertson, who was to the Cumberland country what Sevier was to the Watauga; Houston, who laid aside the governorship of the State to enter the wilderness, from whence he emerged bearing to the sisterhood of States a new Commonwealth which he, with Austin, had founded and grounded; Jackson, whose ad sum will ring clear at every roll call of the immortals; Polk, who, as floor leader in this House, joined with another statesman whom Tennessee gave to Missouri in the bud of his intelligence and power, the great Senator Benton, to lead in rendering the Jackson Administration conspicuous forever, and who, when later elevated to the Presidency himself, gave to the country the most brilliant four years of his existence and the most successful administration in crystallizing into law the conceptions and policies in the public thought of the times of any in our history; Bell, the great ante-bellum Senator; Harris, the war governor and distinguished post-bellum Senator; Andrew Johnson, to whom a combat was meat and drink. In this Johnson, to whom a combat was meat and drink. list, which is but a partial one, of course, may be found conspicuous representatives of almost every shade of political thought during our ten and an hundred years of statehood, and the distinguishing characteristic of each, the quality which every Tennessee schoolboy first notes, was unyielding determination, combined with aggressive temperament. It is not putting it too strongly to say that General Bare was as inflexible as either of these and was of that type whom Tennesseans have most delighted to honor.

The details of his life have been sketched already with a refinement which leaves nothing to be desired. He was born upon historic ground, in the county of Sumner, near Bledsoes Lick, famed in the pioneer annals of our beloved State. This was one of the settlements of the Cumberland country established by the colonists who followed Robertson into the wilder-The history of that settlement pulses with interest. It has seemed to me that one of the most significant, as it is one of the proudest of its records, is that of the hundred and fiftyseven men distributed over the several settlements comprised in the Cumberland country, whose names were signed to the compact of government drawn up by Robertson, a hundred and fiftysix wrote their names in good round English with their own hands. I doubt if this is true of a half dozen other pioneer settlements in history. The future soldier and publicist received his early training among the first generation of descendants of the pioneers, inheriting from his forefathers and absorbing from the tradition-saturated atmosphere about him a potent ambition and a sturdy self-reliance. Being in New Orleans as clerk on a steamboat at the outbreak of the Mexican war, he enlisted immediately in a Louisiana regiment sent to the relief of General Taylor, and was the first Tennessean to reach the scene of hostilities. When his term of enlistment in this regiment expired he joined the Tennesseans and served until the close of the war as lieutenant. Returning from that struggle, he established and for a time edited a newspaper in his native county. Not long after attaining his majority he was elected to the general assembly of the State, serving one Entering the practice of law, he was within two years made the district attorney of his judicial circuit, one of the most important in the State. In this capacity he served for six

In 1860 he was an elector on the Breckinridge-Lane ticket. With the first call for volunteers in the war of secession he enlisted as a private. He was speedily made captain of his company, and later colonel of his regiment, the second Tennes-He was with this regiment in its aid to Bee and Jackson see. He was with this regiment in its aid to Bee and Jackson at the first Manassas; desperately wounded at Shiloh; fired the first gun at Chickamauga; at Thedfords Ford on Friday, and the last as the blue line rolled down Snodgrass Hill on Sunday; again wounded at Missionary Ridge; fighting at Resaca, at Dallas, around Atlanta; back with Hood into Tennessee to lead his men into that awful hell of fire that flamed across the open field from the embattled earthworks at Franklin; aiding in the retreat from Nashville and its disasters; thence into the Carolinas to stand in the firing line on crutches as Joe Johnston struck the last blow of the Confederacy at Bentonville; from Bull Run to Bentonville-he began at the beginning; it was the end when he quit. For some years he turns to his profession, and then political life lures him again. The governership in 1882 and 1884, reuniting a divided party, setgovernership in 1882 and 1884, reuniting a divided party, settling the question of a State debt; the Senatorship in 1887, again in 1893; again in 1899, and again in 1905—and then that incident which lies beyond our ken and of which we can only speculate; a funeral in the Chamber wherein he had sat so long; a journey back to Tennessee; a lying in state, while the thousands of the youth and old men, of maidens and mothers, passed by to look upon the last link that bound the first generation of Tennessee statecraft to the fourth; the interment among his kindred at Mount Olivet. His casket, sir, was draped with, and I think I have heard that he was buried wrapped in the flags of two governments-one the cross of St. Andrew, the symbol of a government that was; the other, insignia of a Government that is and, pray God, shall be always. This was quite as it should have been. He loved them both; both honored him; he gave to both his bravest and his best.

I have spoken of the life. Of the death I do not care to speak. He lived well; he was brave; he was clean; he was honest; he was a gentleman; his fiber was sound. He embodied the high virtues which Tennesseans in common with all the world admire. I have frequently thought, sir, that Tennesseans as a whole were much less demonstrative of what is called "State pride" than are the citizens of many of her sister Commonvealths. From a knowledge of them, however, I am convinced that this is not because they do not entertain it. Somewhat reserved, perhaps, as is their "bent and quality," they are intensely jealous of the honor of their Commonwealth, scrupulously regardful of the characters of those they trust with public service, and they gaze with piercing eyes straight into the life of him who seeks their favor. They looked so upon General Bate; they found him good; they found him sound; they clung by him. They gave great trusts into his hands with a confidence begotten of their belief in their own power to discern the worthy, and he passed those trusts back to them clean, unstained, unsullied. They were not surprised because they knew it would, it must, be so. He maintained the integrity of his compact with them. He kept the faith—even the great faith of Tennessee-the faith of her fair traditions, the faith of her sweet traditions, the faith of her past glory, of her past great glory, the faith of her past love, her past fathomless love, the faith of her public virtues, of her unsullied public virtues

As in life they honored him because he was strong and brave and true, so now do they cherish his memory because he maintained unbroken every thread in the line of public luster and preserved the traditional loyalty to the good things of the soul and the great things of human relationship. He kept their faith. That was it. Through glory and through gloom he kept their faith, even the great faith of Tennesseans, and they are content, sir, quite content.

I have said that I do not care to speak of his death. I do not and I shall not in any language of my own. It was a part of the day's work, an incident in the great sweep and scheme of things. It means much—just how much we do not know. Some time we shall know, no doubt, but not now; that is, not The poet may know; the poet does know most among men, both of the things of earth and of the things beyond the earth. A great southern poet has written a great poem about death. In some respects it is the greatest of all his poems, and I think some lines of it are quite appropriate just here.

Sad mortal! Couldst thou but know
What truly it means to die,
The wings of thy soul would glow
And the hopes of thy heart beat high;
Thou wouldst turn from the Pyrrhonist schools,
And laugh their jargon to scorn,
As the babble of midnight fools
Ere the morning of truth be born;
But I, earth's madness above,
In a kingdom of stormless breath—
I gaze on the glory of love
In the unveiled face of death.

In the unveiled face of death.

I tell thee his face is fair
As the moon-bow's amber rings,
And the gleam in his unbound hair
Like the flush of a thousand springs;
His smile is the fathomless beam
Of the star-shine's sacred light,
When the summers of Southland dream
In the lap of the holy night;
For I, earth's blindness above,
In a kingdom of halcyon breath—
I gaze on the marvel of love
In the unveiled face of death.

In the unveiled face of death.

Through the splendor of stars impearled
In the glow of the far-off grace,
He is soaring world by world
With the souls in his strong embrace;
Lone ethers, unstirred by a wind,
At the passage of Death grow sweet
With the fragrance that floats behind
The flash of his winged retreat;
And I, earth's madness above,
'Mid a kingdom of tranquil breath,
Have gazed on the luster of love
In the unveiled face of Death.

Put beyond the store and the sun

In the unveiled face of Death.

But beyond the stars and the sun
I can follow him still on his way,
Till the pearl-white gates are won
In the calm of the central day.
Far voices of fond acclaim
Thrill down from the place of souls,
As Death, with a touch like flame,
Uncloses the goal of goals;
And from heaven of heavens above
God speaketh with bateless breath—
My angel of perfect love
Is the angel men call Death!

[Mr. MOON of Tennessee addressed the House. See Appendix,]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, it would be a reiteration for me to recount the life and deeds of the distinguished man to whose memory we are here to-day to pay just and loving tribute. This has already been fittingly and eloquently done. But coming from the district which I have the honor to represent in this body and knowing the strong hold that Senator BATE had on the confidence and affection of the people of this district, I feel that I must voice in a few words the love and respect felt by that people for his name and memory

His State delighted to honor him while living and with unanimity mourned his death. His life illustrates the ends that may be attained by simple faith and unfailing devotion to duty and to his people is an ideal example of patriotism. He knew no halting at the call of duty and gave his utmost endeavor to every service that fell to his lot. Eager in the service of his country, he rushed to every post of duty. He gave his labor and shed his blood in her behalf. His chief characteristics were a devoted mind and an intrepid soul. He never swerved from the line of duty as he saw it, and no mortal danger ever caused him to quail or hesitate.

As a member of the legislature of his State; as the attorneygeneral of his judicial circuit; as a private and lieutenant in the Mexican war; as private, captain, colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general in the civil war; as governor of his State, and as Senator from that State—in each and all these places of honor and trust he did his part faithfully and well. He failed in no instance to measure up to the full performance of duty. His official career before and since the war is written in the records of his State and of the American Congress. And I desire to insert with these remarks his military record in the Mexican and civil wars as furnished me by The Military Secretary This is his record as shown by the brief data of war, the un-embellished statement of position held, and service performed. But the real record of this soldier is not portrayed in this short official recital; it remains yet for the historian to give that record in its fullness. It lives in fragments in the minds and memories of his surviving comrades, as they were associated with different parts of his career. It is green in their hearts and will be until these hearts have stilled their motion. It glows in the traditions and tales that are the common heritage of the sons and daughters of southern soldiers. It lives in the song and story of his section and will be crystallized in American history when history shall, as history will, accurately set forth the valor and heroism of the gallant men who wore the

But his career in war was only a part of his life. another and a larger part of it that endears him to his people. When the war was ended he in good faith accepted the conditions and did all in his power to restore peace, that "blessed peace so dear to God and inappreciably valuable to man." Then in the ranks of the civilian he measured up to the loftiest standard. He who had so gallantly led his people on the field of battle was a conspicuous example and leader in the paths of With courage and patriotism he met the trying conditions of the days just after the war, and with patience, prudence, and moderation as his guides rendered signal service in tiding over this difficult period and restoring loyal allegiance to a reunited country. And later on, when again called by his people into public service as governor of his State, his administration was just and sagacious, and as a Senator his course was noted for its wisdom and absolute fidelity to every trust.

His career was marked by intelligent application and industry. The conscientious performance of duty was the doctrine that guided his every step, and the people of his State knew that in him they had a representative who could bring no reproach, but would reflect honor upon the State that so loved to honor him.

Mr. Speaker, the respect and confidence that the people of Tennessee reposed in Senator Bate was a treasure that a king should be proud of. And this treasure he earned by honest and faithful service to his people. In every walk of life he held their approval. That whole life was devoted to their service. In times of peace he labored for them; in times of war he led them in battle. As a civilian he served them with distinction; as a soldier his record is that of a hero. Three times he was danger-ously wounded in battle; still he was undismayed and fought on, maimed and crippled in body, yet undaunted in soul. His devotion was so great he could not hesitate or falter; his faith and purpose so steadfast he could not turn his mind from the course of duty, and no peril to himself ever checked him in that course. He fought a good fight. To his intrepid spirit was due the success of his life, and he attained his purpose and ambition in life to a remarkable degree. His career was rich in honors and ripe in years, but-

The hand of the Reaper Takes the ears that are hoary.

And at the age of almost fourscore he was gathered to his fathers. He was laid to rest beneath the sod of his own native State. His comrades buried him with the honors of war and his State bowed its head in reverent sorrow.

His natural instincts to do his whole duty on every occasion and his disregard of danger to himself was perhaps the cause of his sudden end of life. His attendance and part in the inaugural ceremonies of the President and the exposure resulting from it was more than his years and strength could stand. In a few short days the summons came. And the same high courage that had borne him through so many conflicts sustained him then and with fortitude and resignation he answered the last call. In that hour he was a conqueror still. He died the death of the righteous, universally lamented as a model of the true and the valiant—as an honest and earnest patriot.

The fairest treasure mortal times afford Is spotless reputation.

This treasure Senator Bate possessed in life, and dying left as a heritage to his people.

War Department, The Military Secretary's Office. Statement of the military service of WILLIAM B. BATE, war with Mexico.

military service of William B. Bate, war with Mexico.
WILLIAM B. Bate was mustered into the service of the United States at New Orleans, La, May 15, 1846, as a sergeant in Company F, Fourth Louisiana Infantry, to serve six months. The regiment arrived at Brazos Santiago May 26, 1846, and at Lomita, Mexico, June 4, 1846. He was honorably mustered out of service with his company and regiment, as a private, at New Orleans, La., August 14, 1846.

He reentered the service at Nashville, Tenn., October 2, 1847, as a private in Company I, Third Tennessee Infantry, commanded by Col. Benjamin F. Cheatham, to serve during the war, and was promoted to be first lieutenant of the same company October 8, 1847. He accompanied his regiment to Mexico, in which country it was stationed at the City of Mexico, Vera Cruz, Jalapa, Puebla, and Molino del Rey. Returning to the United States, he was honorably mustered out with his company and regiment at Memphis, Tenn., July 22, 1848.

CIVIL WAR.

WILLIAM B. BATE was elected colonel of the Second Tennessee Infantry, Provisional Army, May 6, 1861, and was appointed to that position by the President of the Confederate States, to take rank April 27, 1861; was promoted to be brigadier-general, Provisional Army, October 3, 1862, and to major-general, Provisional Army, February 23, 27, 1861; was promoted to be brigader general, Provisional Army, February 23, 1864.

From May 26, 1861, to July 18, 1861, Colonel Bate and his reglement performed duty at Fredericksburg, Brookes Station, and other points between the Potomac and Rappahannock rivers, in the military department of Fredericksburg, bearing a part in resisting an attack by Union naval vessels on the Confederate batteries at Aquia Creek June 1, 1861. Of Colonel Bate's service on this occasion, Col. Daniel Ruggles, his superior commander, says:

"The conduct of my entire force under the command of Colonel Bate, of the Walker Legion, until my arrival on the field, was admirable throughout the day."

Another officer, writing from Aquia Creek to the Confederate secretary of war, under date of June 1, 1861, says:

"Colonel Bate has been assigned the command of the brigade here, composed of his own regiment and the Virginia troops present, and is working with a zeal consistent with the energy and enthusiasm of his nature."

"Colonel Barts has been assigned the command of the brigade here, composed of his own regiment and the Virginia troops present, and is working with a zeal consistent with the energy and enthusiasm of his nature."

The Second Tennessee was on the field of the first battle of Bull Run, fought July 21, 1861, as a part of Brig. Gen. T. H. Holmes's brigade, but it did not become actively engaged with the enemy. Soon afterwards the regiment returned to the line of the Potomac and was stationed at Evansport, Va., where it confronted the Union forces occupying the Maryland side of the river, until February, 1862. About the middle of that month, a sufficient number of its members having reenlisted for the war and thus insured the continuation of the organization beyond its first year's enlistment, Colonel Bare conducted the reenlisted men to Tennessee on a furlough granted until April 1, 1862.

The regiment was reorganized at Corinth, Miss., April 3, 1862. and under the command of Colonel Bare, participated in the battle of Shiloh, Tenn., April 6, 1862. General Cleburne, the brigadier commander, in his official report, refers to the regiment and its commander as follows:

"Here the Second Tennessee, coming up on the left, charged through a murderous cross fire. The gallant major * * * fell mortally wounded, and the colonel, W. B. Bare, had his leg broken by a minie ball. Tennessee can never mourn for a nobler band than fell this day in the fell duty for months." On February 23, 1863, Brigadier-General Bare, then in temporary command of the brigade in Stewart's general. C. S. A., that "Bare and * * * are not likely to return to field duty for months." On February 23, 1863, Brigadier-General Bare, then in temporary command of the District of the Tennessee, was assigned to duty with Lieutenant-General Polk's corps, and on March 12, 1863, was placed in command of a brigade in Stewart's division. He subsequently bore a part in the Tullahoma campaign, being engaged in action at Hoovers Gap, Tenn., June 24–26, 1863. He also pa

The Military Secretary.

[Mr. PADGETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, after all that has been said as to the life, character, and public services of the late lamented Senator BATE in this House and in the Senate, I find it difficult to express myself so as not to appear as repeating and adopting the words and ideas of those who have preceded me in addressing the House on this sad occasion. But it will be an even more difficult task to relate all in the life of the great Senator that will be of benefit to those of us who survive him and to those who come after us.

I have known Senator BATE intimately for thirty years, and I never knew a nobler man, one whose every act and deed, whether private or public, was more worthy of example.

I shall leave to others who are more familiar with his career as a soldier the narrative of his military achievements. incompetent to do him justice in that regard. I shall not dwell on his record as governor of Tennessee nor on his record as a Senator. All these have received treatment at the hands of those better fitted for it than I am. I think, in relating the facts in the life of a good and great man, that it is well to tell of the little things with which every day is crowded, but which, being of apparently no consequence, are not the result of effort or study, but are the uncolored outgivings of the heart-the real man and not the actor.

When I first came to Washington as a Member of the Fiftyfifth Congress at the extraordinary session, in March, 1807, I took my meals at the Ebbitt House, the well-known hotel in this city where Senator Bate lived all the time of his Senatorial career and where he died. I was asked by him to sit at his table and take my meals with the Senator and his noble wife. In this way, during more than four months of that session of Congress, I was the constant companion of the Senator. he was old enough to have been my father, I found him one of the most interesting, pleasant, affable, and desirable companions I ever had, regardless of age. During this time I never saw him angry, never heard him scold or speak cross to a servant; was always most punctual in his attendance at meals; always gave Mrs. Bate as much personal attention and gallant consideration as if she was in her girlhood teens and he her lover and suitor, instead of the gray-haired grandsire that he was.

I never in all my acquaintance with him heard him say one unkind word about anybody. He seemed to be governed in his conversation about others by the rule that if he could not say anything good about them to say nothing. He never took advantage of the privilege of a private conversation to abuse and denounce anyone, however much he might disagree with them. He was always bold and strong in his denunciation of wrong as such and never excused or palliated what was really wrong in his best friend, but in doing so he always refrained from personal abuse or inuendo.

His integrity and purity of life were his elements of greatest strength. Although a learned lawyer, a great orator, an accomplished scholar, his character for old-fashioned honesty was his greatest element of power and influence in the Senate. No man was ever heard to question his honesty of purpose whatever his position might be on any question.

In his long career there was never even so much as a whisper of scandal in connection with any of his public acts. He was liberal, but not extravagant. He died a much poorer man than when he first came to the Senate. He was fortunate in that he had a competence when he entered public office, and his views of public duty were such that he retired from all active professional or business pursuits and gave all his time and energies to his Senatorial duties.

It is sad to think that the meager compensation of Senators will not permit them to serve in that great body, giving all their time and strength to their public duties, except at a sacrifice to themselves and their families. But such has been the fact so long that the public have concluded that the only acceptable evidence of official honesty is to quit office in poverty, or at least in reduced circumstances.

The great Senator, figuratively speaking, was so erect in his relations with the world while in office that he appeared to lean backward. He literally shunned the very appearance of I knew of an instance where an old and loved friend of the Senator had received his aid in a matter-not strictly official in character, but while in office-who afterwards sent the Senator a present of small value simply as a token of gratitude, who was greatly mortified when the Senator returned the article with a letter thanking his friend for his intended kindness, but refusing absolutely to receive anything of the slightest value as a gratuity, however innocent the intention of the donor might be.

He refused all courtesies in the way of free railroad transportation and express or telegraph franks, but never in the slightest impugned the motives of any other man who did not follow in his footsteps

He was indefatigable in his official labors. As a Member of the House I have had every opportunity to know him well in I was often interested in the passage of a private this regard. bill in the Senate, and on account of the Senator's great age and out of a feeling of kindness to him I have sometimes asked the then junior Senator to look after a private bill; but Senator BATE in every instance asked me why I did not come to him in the matter and always seemed hurt because I did not put the bill in his hands. His love for work was so great that he seemed to want to do it all, and any manifestation of sympathy for him on account of his age or infirmities seemed to be painful to him.

I saw him on the day of the inauguration of President Roosevelt on his way to the platform to take his seat as a member of the inaugural committee. In the Rotunda of the Capitol on his way I saw he appeared to be fatigued, pale, and exhausted. was urged by an employee of the Senate who took note of his condition not to go out in the cold wind and sit with the committee, but the Senator would not heed the efforts of his friends, but, in what he regarded as a discharge of duty, made his way to the front of the inaugural platform, took his seat, and remained there until the inaugural ceremonies were over, exposed to a cold north wind, from which exposure he took the severe cold, resulting in fatal illness of only three days' duration. He thus literally died at his post; he fell on the firing line.

Mr. Speaker, to state all that occurred in the life of Senator Bate that is useful and instructive to the people of his State and nation would fill a large volume, which is impossible on this occasion, but I hope some gifted writer will do justice to his name and fame and leave in enduring form a full and complete history of the public and private acts of this good and great man.

Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to be on the committee appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral and burial of Senator Bate, which took place at Nashville, Tenn., with military honors, on the 13th day of March, Tennessee has had many great and well-beloved men, and her people love to show their love for her great and glorious dead; but I never heard of and certainly never saw the attendance of so large a gathering of the people of Tennessee at the funeral and burial of any other man as was in attendance at that of Senator BATE. The people of every walk of life from every part of the State came in almost numberless thousands, and with bowed, bared heads paid the hero dead the last but most tender tribute of their love and respect by the shedding of unaffected tears. Though dead, yet he lives in the example of a good and great life by the following of whose teachings all the world may be made better.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In pursuance of the resolutions heretofore adopted, and as a further mark of respect to the deceased Senator, the House will stand adjourned.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes) the House adjourned.

Whereas the Congress of the United States is now considering the report of the International Waterways Commission; and Whereas said report contains a recommendation that the amount of water to be diverted from the Great Lakes through the Chicago Drainage Canal be limited to 10,000 cubic feet per second; and Whereas said limitation would in the future render fulle the expenditure of $50,000,000 already expended by the sanitary district of Chicago and render impossible the completion of said project and endanger the health of the people of Illinois and of the city of Chicago; and chicago and render impossible the completion of said project and endanger the health of the people of Illinois and of the city of Chicago; and

Whereas the amount of water to be diverted for domestic and sanitary purposes should under no circumstances be limited by a treaty with a foreign power or by any legislation to be enacted by Congress, thus placing the sanitary district of Chicago—organized to preserve the health of the people—upon the same plan as commercial enterprises organized for private gain: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the forty-fourth general assembly of the State of Illinois, convened in extraordinary session (the house concurring therein), That in any treaty to be hereafter entered into no statement whatever binding the trustees of the sanitary district of Chicago shall be made, and the local conditions of such canal and the volume of water to be accommodated therein should be left wholly and solely to the regulation of the Federal Government as the conditions of the canal's drainage may require; and be it further

Resolved, That in any legislation to be hereafter enacted by Congress a provision should be included permitting the sanitary district of Chicago to use such water as may be necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and such legislation, if any, should specifically provide that that portion of the report of the said International Waterways Commission referring to the sanitary district of Chicago and the amount of water to be diverted through its channels should be entirely ignored; and be it further

Resolved, That the two Senators and the Members of Congress representing this State be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to do all in their power to incorporate the provision above referred to in any legislation to be passed by Congress and prevent the incorporation of any statement in any treaty to be entered into with a foreign power placing any restriction upon the amount of water to be withdrawn through the drainage canal of the sanitary dist

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (S. 7988) to prohibit interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations, and to remove obstructions thereto; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry

Mr. KEAN. What is the bill? Is it not a bill which affects interstate commerce?

Mr. CULBERSON. It affects interstate commerce. To be frank about it, it affects the transmission of messages and mail respecting future dealing in cotton. It occurred to me that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is the proper committee to which it should be referred. I am not specially concerned, however, about a reference to that committee.

Mr. KEAN. If it deals in futures, I hope the Committee on Interstate Commerce will not have anything to do with it.

Mr. MONEY. If I may be allowed a word, I think the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has had charge of such matters heretofore

Mr. CULBERSON. Heretofore, undoubtedly. There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 7988) to prohibit interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations, and to remove ob-structions thereto.

A bill (8. 7988) to prohibit interference with commerce among the States and Territories and with foreign nations, and to remove obstructions thereto.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or association to send or cause to be sent from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or to any foreign country, or knowingly to receive or knowingly to cause to be received in any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or from any foreign country, by a telegraph or telephone line, any message relating to a contract for future delivery of cotton without intending that the cotton so contracted for shall be actually delivered or received, or relating to a contract whereby a party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract is made, acquires the right or privilege to demand in the future the acceptance or the delivery of cotton. Any person, whether acting individually or as a member, officer, agent, or employee of any person or association who shall be guilty of violating this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not more than $1,000 nor less than $500 and shall be imprisoned for not more than $1,000 nor less than $500 and shall be imprisoned for not more than six months nor less than one month, and the sending or the causing to be sent, or the receiving or the causing to be received of each message shall constitute a separate offense.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of any person or association sending or receiving by means of a telegraph or telephone line any message relating to a contract, or the making of a contract, for the future delivery of cotton to furnish upon demand to the sender or recipient of such message an affidavit stating that he is the owner of the cotton so being contracted for and that he has the intention to delive to a contract, or the making of a contract, for future delivery of cotton without the intention actually to deliver or receive the said cotton.

Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person owning or operating any telegraph or telephone line, or acting as officer, agent, or employee of such person, knowingly to use his property, or knowingly to allow his property to be used, for the transmission from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or to any foreign country, or knowingly to receive or knowingly to cause to be received in any State, Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, from any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or from any foreign country of any message relating to such contracts as are described in section 1 of this act. Any person, whether acting individually or as a member, officer, agent, or employee of a telegraph or telephone company, who shall be guilty of violating this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $500, and the sending of each message in violation of the provisions of this section shall constitute a separate offense.

Sec. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person owning or operating any telegraph or telephone line, or acting as officer, agent, or employee of such person, knowingly to use bis property or knowingly to of each message in violation of the provisions of this section shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person owning or operating any telegraph or telephone line, or acting as officer, agent, or employee of such person, knowingly to use his property or knowingly to allow his property to be used for the transmission from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or The District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, or knowingly to receive or cause to be received in any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, or knowingly to receive or cause to be received in any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, from any other State or Territory of the United States or District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, of any message presented by a person engaged in a commission or brokerage business or presented by a produce exchange corporation or association repared in a commission or brokerage business or the produce exchange, corporation, or association shall have filed, either personally or through the manager of such person or association, with the telegraph or telephone company an affidavit stating that the message or messages being sent and to be sent for the six months next ensuing by such person or association do not and will not relate to any such contracts as are described in section 1 of this act. A similar affidavit shall be filed before the end of the six months covered by the first affidavit. Any person owning or operating a telegraph or telephone line, or officer, agent, or employee of such person, who knowingly is a party to a violation of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $1,000 and shall be imprisoned for not more than $5,000 nor less than $1,000 and shall be imprisoned for not more than $5,000 nor less than $1,000 and shall be imprisoned for not more

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I introduce a joint resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 86) granting an extension of time to certain homestead entrymen was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all persons who made homestead entry in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Montana, and Wyoming, where the six months' period in which they were or are required by law to establish residence expired or expires after December 1, 1906, are hereby granted until May 15, 1907, within which to make actual settlement and establish residence upon the lands so entered by them tered by them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if the joint resolution has been before any committee of the body? I noticed the other day that a joint resolution was sent to the desk, and by unanimous consent it was passed. A joint resolution is a bill, and it seems to me it is a bad custom we are getting into if we pass bills in that way. I know nothing about the merits of this joint resolution, but I will ask the Senator if it has been before a committee?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The joint resolution has not been before the Committee on Public Lands, but it has been submitted to a majority of the members of the committee. It is an emergency matter, or I would not bring it here without submitting it to the committee. There is a very peculiar condition existing in certain of the Western States at the present time, owing to snow blockades, railroad tie ups, and so forth; a great many people are suffering hardships in consequence thereof, and the joint resolution is intended to meet that emergency.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that it can go to the committee and be reported back promptly, and that is the proper way to

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made—
Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not insist upon his objection. My committee does not meet until Wednesday.

Mr. GALLINGER (to Mr. HANSBROUGH). Poll it. Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will say to the Senator that I practically polled the committee on the floor this morning upon the joint resolution. It being an emergency matter, I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire should object to its consideration on the slight ground that it has not been before the full committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not wish to be captious about this measure, but it is important as a matter of procedure in the Senate. I suggest to the Senator that if there is no rule in the committee prohibiting it he can immediately poll his committee and report it back and pass it by unanimous consent.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The committee has been polled, as I said to the Senator.

Mr. FRYE (to Mr. Hansbrough). Why do you not, then, offer it as the report of the committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not been before the committee. I must insist on my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the objection, the joint resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on Public Lends.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire, in view of the condition relative to the joint resolution, to withdraw it for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is withdrawn.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KEAN. At the request of 25,000 commuters in New York and New Jersey, I offer a proposed amendment to the river and harbor bill and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Kean was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby directed to make such modifications of the rules and regulations now governing the opening of drawbridges spanning the Passaic and Hackensack rivers, in the State of New Jersey, by establishing, for a limited time, a closed morning and evening period daily for any one or more of such drawbridges as may seem to him reasonable and in his judgment to afford some measure of relief to railway passenger traffic."

NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $650,000 for the purchase of all the land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Me., not at present owned by the Government, intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment relative to the retirement with increased rank of brigadier-generals on the active list of the Army who served creditably during the civil war, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Sweden from $7,500 to $10,000 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to fix the salary of the United States consul-general at Rotterdam at $5,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for completing the public building at Alexandria, Minn., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

COLOMBIAN PANAMA CANAL SHARES.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Whereas statements published in the South American Journal of the 8th of December, 1906, disclose a correspondence between General Holguin, the Colombian financial agent for France, and Mr. G. R. Calderon and other persons on the subject of the Colombian Panama Canal shares, which statements are subjoined to the following resolution: and

Whereas the matters stated in such correspondence require the attention of the Government of the United States; and, considering the eighth article of the treaty of the United States with Panama of the 18th of November, 1903, as follows:

"The Republic of Panama grants to the United States all rights which it now has or may hereafter acquire to the property of the New Panama Canal Company and the Panama Railroad Company as a result of the transfer of sovereignty from the Republic of Colombia to the Republic of Panama canal Company to sell and transfer to the United States its rights, privileges, properties, and concessions, as well as the Panama Railroad and all the shares or part of the shares of that company."

And, considering that Colombia, at the close of the secession and independence of Panama, owned one-thirteenth part of the stock of the New Panama Canal Company, amounting to 5,000,000 francs, at the face value thereof, and the capital stock of said company, all of which was issued, amounting to 65,000,000 francs at its face value;

And, that the secession and independence of the State of Panama vested the ownership of such shares of said stock as then belonged to Colombia and in the property represented by such stock in the Government of Panama;

And, that Panama sold and conveyed the same, along with other property and rights situated in Panama, to the United States for the sum of $10,000,000;

And, considering that the United States have derived no benefit of $10,000,000;

And, considering that the United States have derived no benefit from said Panama Canal stock, or any proceeds thereof, and the same, or the proceeds of the sale of the same, is being held by the Government of France under a legal proceeding of attachment for a debt alleged to be due from Colombia to France, which process issued after the ratification of said treaty between Panama and the United States; And that it is the right and duty of the United States to assert its claim to the shares of stock in the Panama Canal Company, or the proceeds thereof, so held by France, and claimed by Colombia, so that the same may be rightfully and justly determined in such manner as will best accord with the sovereign rights of the United States:

*Resolved*, That the subject of the claim of the United States to the capital stock of the Panama Canal Company issued to the Government of Colombia, and to any property or fund that is represented by such stock, and all matters connected therewith, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for investigation and report as to the validity of the claim of the United States to such stock or any proceeds thereof, and of the right of the United States to dispose of the same.

Mr. MORGAN. Without reading the statement which is appended to the resolution, I will ask that it be inserted in the Recorp, that the resolution and paper be printed, and that the matter may go over until to-morrow.

There being no objection, the accompanying statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Statement from the South American Journal of December 8, 1906, regarding the Colombian Panama shares.]

THE COLOMBIAN PANAMA SHARES.

Statement from the South American Journal of December 8, 1906, regarding the Colombian Panama shares.]

The Colombian Panama shares.

Mr. G. R. Calderon has received from General Holguin the following matter for publication:

General Holguin, the Colombia financial agent for France, has communicated the following information and correspondence on the subject of the Colombian Panama shares to the Parisian press:

The Government of Colombia brought before the tribunal of the Seine a suit against the New Panama Canal Company, to reclaim the 50,000 shares that the self-same company had given Colombia in payment for prorogations, concessions, and lands granted to the company. These shares were deposited with the company, to the order of the Colombian Government, where they remained for more than two years, when the Panama revolutionary movement broke out, which Colombia could not repress. At this juncture Colombia wished to dispose of these shares, but the company refused to deliver them up, alleging that the State of Panama might claim them.

At the first sitting of the tribunal last year the Government of Panama declared, through their lawyer, that they renounced all claim to these 50,000 shares. Consequently the suit was virtually terminated, and I was congratulating myself on this prompt and just solution, when, contrary to all expectation, the French fiscal authorities made the objection that these shares should remain with the Panama company until the Colombian Government had paid 13,600,000 francs for registration fees for the concession accorded to the company, from which cause arose the second lawsuit.

I confess that this claim has astounded me—that the French fiscal should not redict it, and it should be here noted that in the contract of concession that we have accorded to a French company. I could not credit it, and it should be here noted that in the contract of concession this espressly stipulated that all differences which might arise between the Colombian Government and the concession that we have a lity with the stipulations of the treaty of commerce and navigation made between Colombia and France signed at Bogota, May 30, 1902, by which the two countries agreed to reciprocate "the most favored nation" treaty.

I reasoned, being the financial representative of Colombia to France, my duty clearly is to defend the interests of my country; but perhaps as patriotic feelings may distort my view of the matter, I will ask the opinion of other persons, who, by their neutrality, may judge more impartially, therefore, to have a clear mind on the subject.

I wrote to a Frenchman—a distinguished jurisconsult—who has resided many years in Colombia, and who is conversant with this fiscal litigation. I asked him to reply at once, giving me his ideas. His response was as follows: "The conflict which is on the point of commencing between Colombia and France can and should be avoided; consequently, I accomplish a patriotic work in stating the real case and relating frankly the facts.

"The French fiscal authorities, being the safeguard of the interests of all contributors, are evidently right in pursuing with tenacity for the payment of that which is legally due to them, but their office ends there, and more strictly than any other authority should they refrain from posing as creditors, when they can not prove the legitimacy of the debt. "In May, 1878, the Colombian Government conceded to the original Panama company the famous concession, the clauses of which it is unnecessary to recapitulate, as they are so well known.

"The concession was signed at Bogota, and simple reflection indicates that the Colombian Government had perfect right to claim and take the cost of stamps, registration, etc. General usage establishes, in fact, that it is the receiver of a concession who pays such costs. Thereupon it was the canal company who should pay; but Colombia, from chivalrous and deferential motives, would not accept anything. Now, the Republic is severely punished for this generosity, which the French fiscal does not appear to hav contracts, treaties, etc., which passed one.

"This incident places at stake the dignity of our country, and the government which is encharged with the good name of France would do wisely in passing to profit and loss account an asset which is plainly unrealizable. The real debtor is not Colombia, which, if it were, would present the unique case of a country claiming from a foreign government the payment of charges on a concession granted to its own people. ment the payment of change people, "Can you imagine Germany claiming money because of our Government signing a contract with German subjects? France can not lend herself to such a maneuver, which is a negation of all equity, and would forever allenate from us the lively and, occasionally, touching sympathies of all the South American Republics, especially at a time when the United States, with brutal rudeness, do not even dissemble their intentions to absorb, marching resolutely to this end, and dominate the South American Continent. It is not opportune that France should claim imperiously a considerable sum from a republic almost on the verge of ruin, owing to prolonged civil wars and the loss of one of its richest provinces.

"We forget that 70,000,000 of South Americans regard France as their elder sister, the great Latin nation toward which they turn their eyes full of hope, feeling that we would not look on with indifference at any attempt directed against their independence. We forget also that the South American market represents prosperity in the future. That hundreds of thousands of our compatriots find there cordial hospitality. That we do a large trade there, etc., and we run the risk of loshing all that, as also our privileged footing, by claiming a sun not owing to us.

"On which the hought. Natural champion of all ideas of justice and equity, our country can not countennee the procedure of a ferocious usurer, abusing his superior strength to rob a weaker people. "Colombia—still convalescent and hardly recovered from the painful trials which she had undergone—may well demand if we are yet the generous nation of which history chronicles such lofty actions.

"Do we intend forfeiting, for a paltry question of money, our splendid moral prestige, and, perhaps, ruin our trade with South America? We hope not, and believe that the fiscal, with better inspiration—and after calm reflection—will retire a claim twenty-seven years old, of which it is impossible to establish the legitimacy."

The following testifies in our favor also—the part contents of a letter that Mr. Maurice Huitin, formerly presid the complete and definite ruin of the shareholders of the Lesseps company.

"Later on, in 1901, when the agents of the United States Government, aided by questionable complications, prepared the work of spollation which your country so cruelly suffered, they volunteered the statement, made to me personally: We shall begin when you have finished, as you have neither the time nor the money to complete the canal; and, in fact, the time for construction elapsed in 1904. I obtained from your Government an extension to 1911.

"It would seem that all these events are forgotten, but what should not be overlooked is that your Government has always had the free disposing of the 50,000 shares of the new company, which has been attributed to it by Article IV of the law of December 26, 1890; that it has had the right to enter into possession of the titles when the subscription shares have been entirely liberated in 1901; that it should have been able to negotiate them advantageously from the commencement of 1902.

has had the right to enter into possession of the titles when the subscription shares have been entirely liberated in 1901; that it should have been able to negotiate them advantageously from the commencement of 1902.

"I wish to believe, indeed I am convinced, that my successor is in no way responsible for your adventure; but it is, all the same, very disappointing from every point of view, that your confidence should have been so singularly recompensed.

"The Chamber of Deputies, judging by the recent debate, appears resolved not to permit, under the pretext of recovering the rights of registration, that it be still more reduced, the dole which the shareholders of the original canal company have had to be contented with.

"I hope that the measures which will shortly be passed by the French Parliament may have, at the same time, the effect of returning to your Government the titles of which the ownership, in equity and in fact, I again repeat, should never have been questioned."

So that French opinion does not differ from Colombian views on this subject, and numerous cases have occurred in the history of nations which, as precedents, confirm the right of the Government of Colombia to possession of these shares.

By the advice of M. Rouvier, the minister of foreign affairs, I wrote an explanatory letter, November 18, 1905, to M. Merlou, the minister of finance, which has been published in extenso in the Gaulois.

A month after the formal acknowledgment thereof the finance minister curtly informed me that he had given instructions to make a detailed inquiry. Since then I have not heard anything, and when M. Rouvier quitted office I addressed a long letter to his successor, M. Poincare.

These are the chief points in this Franco-Colombian conflict. The French people will study them and pronounce their verdict. I appeal with confidence to their clear and enlightened judgment.

I have only a few words to add. At an epoch where the struggle for life has become so hard, both for individuals and peoples, where all qu the sympathies which attach a whole people to generous and magnanimous France. The Colombian people are strongly Francophile—by tradition and by choice. French influence—political, commercial, industrial, and, I may add, literary, also—is predominant in Colombia, and all our efforts tend to consolidate more and more the ties of friendship which attach us to France. The Colombian people follows with great interest the progress of this affair, and I had strong reasons for desiring that this Franco-Colombian dispute should be resolved diplomatically and not by judicial means. A diplomatic solution, whatever the issue, would not produce any emotion in Colombia.

At the same time I have full confidence in the spirit of justice and of equity, in the good sense and persplicacity of the Government and of the French bench. They will discover that there is not even ground for discussion, but merely a misunderstanding, and they will decidedly proclaim the indisputable rights of my country. I wish to think before quitting French soil, where for three years I have received generous hospitality and kindness, that I may have the ineffable satisfaction of proving once again that my convictions of France and the French people were right, and that your beautiful country is really worthy of the admiration of foreign peoples.

An act authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad Company, its successors and assigns;

H. R. 24104. An act transferring Phelps County to the eastern division of the eastern judicial district of Missouri;

H. R. 24275. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Flint River at Porter Shoals:

H.R. 24541. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes H. J. Res. 195. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two condemned cannon to the mayor of the town of Preston, Iowa; and H. J. Res. 221. Joint resolution to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. The foregoing House claims bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The message also communicated to the Senate resolutions commemorative of the life, character, and public services of Hon. William B. Bate, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 121. An act authorizing the extension of Seventeenth street NW.;

H. R. 128. An act for the opening of a connecting highway between Water Side drive and Park road, District of Columbia;

H. R. 8435. An act for the opening of Fessenden street NW., District of Columbia;

H. R. 10843. An act authorizing the extension of Kenyon street NW.

H. R. 14815. An act for the extension of Harvard street, Columbia Heights, District of Columbia;
H. R. 14900. An act to extend Fourth street NE.;
H. R. 16944. An act to amend section 878 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 21689. An act to increase the limit of cost of five lighthouse tenders heretofore authorized.

PORT OF BELLINGHAM, WASH.

Mr. PILES. I report back from the Committee on Commerce without amendment the bill (8, 7501) extending to the subport of Bellingham, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880; and I ask that the House bill on the same subject, which is on the Vice-President's desk, be laid before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 23114) extending to the subport of Bellingham, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the subport of Bellingham, in the State of Washington

Mr. PILES. I ask for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PILES. I move that Senate bill 7501, which I have just reported, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House joint resolution 221.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 221) to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the joint resolution may be read.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, shall be filled by the reappointment of George Gray, a citizen of Delaware, whose term expired January 14, 1907.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the joint resolution be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to all the amendments of the Senate, except amendment No. 222, to the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, and agreeing to amendment No. 222, with the following amendment:

Omit the matter stricken out by the said amendment and insert the Omit the matter stricken out by the said ancessarion of the Speaker following:

"That on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President of the United States, and the heads of Executive Departments who are members of the President's Cabinet, shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each, and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each."

And asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate decline to take any action on the question of the salaries of Members of the House of Representatives, Senators, and Cabinet officers, preferring that the Senate itself, if anything is to be done on the subject, should take its own course in reference to it. I therefore, for the purpose of getting a vote on the question, move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to amendment No.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, it seems to me the course proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] is unusual in regard to a general appropriation bill. The general custom has been, I think, where the House of Representatives disagrees to all the amendments of the Senate but one, that when the bill comes back to the Senate the motion is made that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The Senator from Illinois proposes to take out this one amendment of the House of Representatives, to agree to it, and to have a conference in regard to all the other items of amendment on the part of the Senate, as to which the other House have disagreed.

Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in reference to the pending proposition, but I prefer that the motion made by the Senator from Illinois should lie over until to-morrow, as I am not ready this morning to say what I desire. I am opposed to this amendment, and I desire an opportunity to give the reasons for my opposition. I therefore ask the Senator from Illinois to let the motion lie over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire, Mr. President, that the amendment shall be disposed of by the Senate to-day, and I know of no rule to take it over. So I hope it will be now disposed of by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I did not state that there was any rule to take it over; but it seems to me extraordinary on the part of the Senator from Illinois, after I had stated that I desired to speak upon the amendment and was not ready to proceed at this time, that he should insist that as to this particular amendment the rule is to be made different from any which has heretofore existed in the practice of the Senate. I think the request I have made, that the matter should be postponed until to-morrow morning, is not unreasonable. Then I can give the reasons why I am opposed to the amendment. If a majority of the Senate should differ from me and want to vote for it then they can certainly wait until to-morrow morning. There is no special hurry about the matter, so far as I can see, and I trust the Senator will not insist on taking the vote on it to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, if I really felt that the Senator desired delay in order to make preparation for a speech, I should feel inclined to yield to the Senator, but I think the Senator was disappointed a week ago when the bill was before the Senate, that he did not then have an opportunity to make a speech against the provision, which he supposed would remain in the bill. I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment going over.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I want to say that I am opposed-

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator begins

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] will not refuse the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] the courtesy which is almost universally granted to a Senator when he suggests that he wishes to address himself to a proposition, but for any reason is not ready to go on. It is the universal custom of the Senate, under such circumstances, to grant the indulgence. The Senator from Arkansas states in his place that he is not ready to go on to-day; and there is certainly no such emergency as should deny to him in this particular case what is generally granted to Senators whenever they make such statement and such a request.

Mr. CULLOM. I really did not believe that the Senator from Arkansas was in dead earnest about this matter.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator has served here with me for some twenty-two years; and if he has ever heard me utter a word on the floor when I was not in dead earnest, I should be glad to have him point out the time. I do not make statements unless I am in dead earnest. Mr. CULLOM. I will yield to the Senator, if he desires it, but I really thought the Senator was prepared to do what he proposes to do-that is, to oppose the amendment. If the Senator desires time I will yield.

Mr. BERRY. That is what I have said. I have stated that I desired that the matter should go over until to-morrow morning, as I am not prepared to go on this morning with the remarks I wish to submit.

Mr. CULLOM. The matter may go over, so far as I am concerned, Mr. President.*

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will go over until tomorrow morning.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am instructed by the majority of the Committee on Public Lands to report a joint resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 86) granting an extension of time to certain homestead entrymen, was read by its title.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the joint resolution be read at length. The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That all persons who made homestead entry in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Montana, and Wyoming, where the six months' period in which they were or are required by law to establish residence expired or expires after December 1, 1906, are hereby granted until May 15, 1907, within which to make actual settlement and establish residence upon the lands so entered by them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, having objected a few moments ago to the consideration of the resolution, it is proper that I should say that as it is now presented in the form of a joint resolution reported from the Committee on Public Lands I certainly have no objection to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to amend the joint resolution by inserting the name of the State of Idaho after that of South

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its chief clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the morning business is closed, I ask that Senate resolution No. 208 may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the modified resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] January 16, 1907, which will be read:

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906. Sald committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during sessions of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. Popparent

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I modify the resolution heretofore offered by me, No. 208, and ask that the modification may be read from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That, without questioning the legality or justice of any act of the President in relation thereto, the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13–14, 1906. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during sessions or recess of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. fund of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have repeatedly said since I introduced the first resolution on this subject that I had no purpose in introducing that resolution to refer to the Committee on Military Affairs any question as to the power, constitu-tional or legal, of the Chief Executive, my sole purpose being to have an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the In order that we might meet some of the suggestions facts. that have been made by others, who seemed to fear that question was involved because of the form of the resolution as I offered it, I have heretofore modified the resolution I originally That does not seem to have entirely met that objection, but I understand that the modification now offered does meet that objection, so far at least as my party colleagues are concerned. I have been of the opinion all the while, and am now, that that question was not involved and that it did not properly belong here, but I can understand how there may be differences of opinion about it on the part of men who are as earnest as I am and as anxious as I am to do only justice to all concerned in the matter.

I agreed to this modification with the understanding on my part that it does not change the legal effect of the resolution; that it does not restrict or restrain the scope of the inquiry as to the facts. When the facts are ascertained we will be in the situation of having not raised that question in any way whatever and of not being precluded as to that question by anything that we may have done in the case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have an amendment pending to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, which is the first amendment offered. I desire now to withdraw that amend-ment. I do it, Mr. President, for the following reasons:

I have had but one purpose in the part which I have taken in this debate and in the amendments which I have offered to the resolution presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and that was to exclude from the consideration of the committee what I thought neither the Senate nor the committee had the right to discuss—the power of the President to take the action which he took. That has seemed to me a question of the very greatest moment. Nothing has appeared to me more inept than the criticism that those of us who took that view were advocating measures of centralization or seeking to increase Executive power. If there is anything to my mind more essential than another for the conservative maintenance of the constitutional principles of the Government, it is to keep entirely separate the three great branches, as the Constitution provides.

It is not very long, Mr. President, since I most reluctantly, but most decidedly, in accord with a large majority of the Senate, voted to amend certain treaties before us, because it seemed to me that an interpretation had been placed upon those treaties which, if maintained, would be a distinct infringement upon the rights of the Senate; and as I am jealous of the maintenance of all the rights of the Senate and of the Congress, it is equally important that the rights of the other departments of the Government should be scrupulously maintained. If we begin to invade the well-defined provinces of the other departments of the Government, to review and revise Executive acts, performed in accordance with the powers conferred upon the Executive, either by the Constitution, by the statutes, or by both, the time is not far distant when we may look not merely for Executive interference with the action of Congress, but for Executive interference or Congressional interference with the decisions of the courts, than which I can conceive of nothing more disastrous to the conservation of those great principles on which I believe the security of our Government rests.

It was to exclude, Mr. President, entirely from the purview of the committee the consideration of the power of the President to take action which rested wholly within his executive discretion that I have taken part in this debate and offered this amendment. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio, as now modified, not only embodies in substance my amendment, but makes it-and I think wisely makes it-more explicit and exact. Of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio as it now stands, there can be no possible misunderstanding. I withdraw my amendment, and I trust that the modified resolution of the Senator from Ohio may pass exactly as it is now offered.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I want to ask the Senator this question: The Senator says there can be no doubt about the construction of this modified resolution, and possibly we may agree on that; but I desire to ask the Senator this question with a view to determining that point: The Senator will remember that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] was to insert after the words "Resolved, That" the words—

Without questioning or denying the legal right of the President to discharge without honor enlisted men from the Army of the United States.

The language used in the modified resolution of the Senator from Ohio is this:

That without questioning the legality or justice of any act of the President in relation thereto.

Now, taking those two sentences, does the Senator consider or understand that in construing the sentence as proposed in the modified resolution of the Senator from Ohio it is the same in intendment and effect as the language expressed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LODGE. The modification offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] excludes the question of the legality of the President's action not merely as to the discharge of the enlisted men without honor, to which the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] is confined, but the legality of any act relating thereto-that is, of course, as to the Brownsville matter.

Mr. BACON. So I understand, then, that the Senator construes the modified substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio to mean all that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky means and to go still further?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. You understand it to mean all that and to go still further?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ought to say that the words "or denying" are left out-

Mr. FORAKER. I want to suggest-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that, according to my understanding, the two amendments do not mean the same thing.

Mr. BACON. That was the exact point as to which I desired information.

The words "or denying" are left out, and Mr. FORAKER. the effect of the modification, as I have made it, is simply to leave out of consideration for the present time, and to express no opinion whatever in regard to it, all questions in regard to legality or power.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the words "or denying," which I did not think of when I replied to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] seem to me to be of no consequence whatever. The words used in the resolution are "without questioning."

Mr. BACON. Well, would the Senator object to inserting them, then, in the modified substitute resolution proposed by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I see no need of inserting the words "or denying," for the words "without questioning" mean that we do not question the President's right to do it, if the English language has any meaning at all.

Mr. BACON. The Senator thinks, then, that the words "without questioning" include "without denying."

Mr. LODGE. I think they do, to my mind, include it.
Mr. BACON. Yes. Therefore the Senator himself would have no objection to the insertion of the words "without denying.

Mr. LODGE. I certainly shall object to inserting the words or denying," if that is what the Senator means.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator desire, in the passage of this resolution, to leave any doubt as to whether or not the Senate deny it?

Mr. LODGE. The resolution as it stands is absolutely satisfactory to me. It states that we do not question the President's right either to discharge the troops or in any act relating thereto. Nothing can be plainer than that, in my judgment.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I do not think the Senator and I differ very materially as to the end we seek, but we differ materially as to the phraseology.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator in a moment, that the phraseology, as it now stands, seems to me to perfectly cover the point which I desire to cover. I agreed to it on that understanding, and I certainly shall not depart from my agreement. If it does not mean that, then I am greatly misled.

Mr. BACON. I hope that in the course of the consideration of this matter we may be able to insert in this modified resolution, as now proposed by the Senator from Ohio, after the word "questioning," the words "or denying."

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], that my understanding of this language is that it does not commit the Senate on this proposition in any sense whatever, except enly to let the whole matter stand in abeyance so far as this investigation is concerned. That is the theory upon which I am willing to modify the resolution, with that understanding. In other words, the effect will be precisely the same as though we "neither affirming nor denying the legality."

Mr. BLACKBURN. On Thursday last, Mr. President, I submitted an amendment which I proposed to offer to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and advised the Senate that, at the conclusion of that Senator's argument, I should submit some suggestions in connection with the amendment proposed by myself. During the time intervening it seems that the other side of the Chamber have found common ground satisfactory to themselves.

I was not willing, Mr. President, that the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio unamended should pass. My unwillingness was mainly attributable to the tenor of the speeches the Senator from Ohio had made upon his resolution. I understand him this morning to say that it was never his purpose through this agency of the Senate, the Committee on Military Affairs, to inquire into the question of law involved in the exer cise of a right which the President had asserted. I certainly did not so construe the speeches made by the Senator from Ohio in the earlier stages of this debate.

Mr. President-Mr. FORAKER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With pleasure. Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Kentucky will not find in any speech I have made on this subject, in either the earlier or the later stages, any statement that I expected the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the question of power.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Nor have I said so.
Mr. FORAKER. But the Senator will find in all those remarks, wherever I had occasion to speak of the subject at all, precisely the same statement in effect, that I wanted the facts and had no thought of asking or directing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into or to determine the question of Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all very true, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. There was, if the Senator will bear with me a moment, certainly some discussion of the question of power, and a great deal of discussion; but that was not because of the form of the resolution which was before the Senate, but only because that question had been introduced into the controversy by statements originally made in the message from the President himself and later in answer to arguments that had been advanced by Senators to the contrary of the position I have

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, Mr. President, I will repeat-for I am sure I can not be mistaken in my memory of this matterwhilst it is true, as the Senator from Ohio now contends, that he has not in any of his arguments upon this question avowed a purpose to go into the inquiry as to the existence of this power upon the part of the President, I can not be mistaken that in those earlier arguments which he submitted he did emphatically state, when that very question was raised, that he opposed any limitation being put upon the scope of the investigation which the committee was to make.

Mr. FORAKER. I just as earnestly and emphatically oppose any restriction or limitation being placed on it now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then-

Mr. FORAKER. But the investigation is to be an investigation as to the facts and not as to the law; and I also opposed anything in this resolution that would estop the Senate itself, if after the facts have been laid before the Senate it should see fit to do so, from taking any action it might think appropriate to take.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If I may have the permission of the Senator from Ohio I will proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg pardon of the Senator from Kentucky if I have interrupted him.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no need of that.

Mr. President, I am not mistaken in my recollection of another fact which bears very importantly and potently on the question now, that in those earlier arguments of the Senator from Ohio he quoted at length authorities, piled like Ossa on top of Pelion, in support of his challenge of the power of the President.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He denied that the President had the power, and he fortified that denial by an exhaustive quotation of authorities from yonder judicial branch of the Government. Will be undertake to tell us now that that question was never in issue? Will he undertake to tell us now that the legal authority of the President was never challenged? Then why that waste of time and that limitless citation of legal authorities?

I opposed the resolution of the Senator from Ohio. I was not willing that it should be passed unamended. Hence I gave notice of a purpose to put an amendment on it which would limit the scope of the investigation of the Committee on Military Affairs, and rule it down to an inquiry into facts, but with an express disclaimer in advance by the Senate that they did not mean to impeach or challenge, to question or deny, the legal authority vested in the President for the act which he had performed.

I belong to that advanced school in this discussion, which not only believes that the President held the statutory power and authority, but that he also held the constitutional warrant and the full authority given under the Articles of War. For that reason I submitted a proposed amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, and that amendment has but one purpose in view. It was to operate as a disclaimer, upon the part of the Senate, of any purpose of challenging the legal authority of the Executive.

Mr. President, now a modified resolution is offered as a substitute. I very much regret that it should even appear to fail to meet the views of any Senator upon either side of this Chamber. On Thursday last, as I have stated before, I expressed a purpose of submitting some remarks upon that amendment which I proposed. It may be that I am entitled to some small measure of credit for having by that threat of inflicting a speech upon the Senate contributed in some humble measure toward the restoration of harmony among my friends on the other side. [Laughter.]

The modified resolution as offered to the Senate to-day is amply satisfactory to me. It employs, with very slight change, the very identical language of the amendment that I submitted.

There is not a shadow of difference, except the elimination of two words—"or deny." With that exception the phraseology of the substitute resolution now offered by the Senator from Ohio embodies the precise phraseology of my proposed amendment, and goes further, for it declares that there is no question as to the discretion exercised by the President.

I say, sir, without the slightest hesitation or embarrassment, that I am entirely content-just as fully content with the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio as I would have been had his original resolution been amended as I proposed. would be lacking in fairness, I would be fairly subject to criticism for a want of candor, if I did not here and now in my place avow the purpose of insisting, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, upon the construction that the Senator from Massachusetts has just placed upon the pending resolution. I, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, serve notice now that should this amended resolution be adopted, as I doubt not it will be, I will go into that committee room with the firm conviction riveted in my mind that I have no authority from the Senate to inquire into either the legal authority of the President or the discretion that he employed in the issue of that order.

Now, sir, having said that much in that shape and in that form, I have nothing more to say. I am glad to advise the Senate of the fact that it has escaped the affliction with which I threatened it on last Thursday. And now, Mr. President, when I contemplate that within a very few weeks I am to pass out from this Chamber and cease to be a member, may I not indulge the hope that in my retirement, in the privacy of home and family, I will be remembered kindly by the Republican membership that I leave behind for the humble but apparently material and valuable assistance that I have contributed to their side in my efforts as a peacemaker. [Applause in the galleries,]
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate applause is not allowed.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER, Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. No one, Mr. President, has listened to the wild greater regret than I have. He is a friend of many years' standing, a man of great ability, of high character, lovable in every sense of the word, particularly in all his relations as a colleague in this Chamber. I listened to the valedictory, how-ever, not as one without hope, and I listened to it also, Mr. President, with a great deal of satisfaction in the thought that I could in response to him say that when he goes into the Committee on Military Affairs for the purpose of construing the resolution we are about to adopt in the way he says he will construe it he will find me construing it in precisely the same way. He would have found me so construing it if it had been adopted precisely as I first offered it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator allow me a word here? Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply ask this courtesy that I may disclaim even the semblance of a suggestion of doing an injustice to the Senator. We may differ, as we often have differed, upon questions, and some of vital importance. My acquaintance with the Senator from Ohio began long before he was known to fame. A quarter of a century ago, sir, he and I sat as a court for six weeks trying an important suit by the process of arbitration. I then was fortunate in having the opportunity of getting a measure upon that man, and I beg to say here in all candor that from then till now I have never had occasion to change that estimate nor to abate my full faith either in his frankness or in his ability. But he is entitled to have me say this: I never suspected him of fighting under cover. Of the many attributes which the Senator has there is none that I admire more than the open, bold, frank, manly way in which he conducts all his contests.

Mr. FORAKER. I am much obliged to the Senator from Kentucky for his interruption. I assure him I properly appreciate all he has said and all he has suggested.

Now, if I may repeat, for that is the only thing I am particular about, I will say again that I have had no thought at any time—and I have said that repeatedly in the progress of this debate-of questioning in the committee under this resolution the power of the Chief Executive or any act of the Chief At the same time I have strenuously contended that before the facts are ascertained, which we hope may be ascertained in full by this investigation, the Senate should not preclude itself as to any question upon which it may be called upon to take action. For that reason I have objected to anything that would be in the nature of a declaration on the part of the Senate that it did not have this power or that power or the other power.

I agree to this modification because I understand that it does not amount to any such precluding of the Senate, when the facts are all laid before it, to take such action as the Senate may see fit to take. For that reason I have been willing to adopt any language that might meet with acceptance on the part of other objecting Senators. I have not cared what the particular language was so we get the thing accomplished that I have been seeking to accomplish, namely, an investigation of the facts.

Mr. President-Mr. TILLMAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I rise merely to say that, sitting here and listening to these sweet words of friendship and peace, of renewed amity, I am reminded of that text in the Scriptures, "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." The Senator from Massachusetts has squeezed through a very small hole to get back to the majority of his party. The Senator from Kentucky has squeezed out of the very same small hole to get back to that consciousness of rectitude and of a nonpartisan purpose apparently with which he offered his amendment. I congratulate Senators upon all of us being agreed for once.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, when this resolution first came before the Senate I do not believe there was a single Senator who believed it was to be made the vehicle of a political ball game, and I for one Senator on this side am not ready to admit that it shall take that aspect even at the present time.

If it is to be considered as a political game, then I want to say frankly to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] that I think the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] has scored a good home run.

The true meaning of the amended resolution that has been presented and which the Senator says has practically been accepted by all of the Republicans is practically the same as that of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. The Senator from Ohio is a splendid lawyer; he knows how to express an idea clearly and definitely, and I am satisfied that if he had been drawing a resolution which he intended to mean that "independent of or without either affirming or denying the power of the President so to act" he would have used the term "without denying or without affirming that act."

The words "without questioning the power of the President" to take the action which he did in the Brownsville affair not only mean to the Senate, but mean to the public at large, that the power is unquestioned. But if we pass a resolution "without questioning the power," intending that it shall not question the power of the President so to act, we admit by that phraseology that the subject is not a questionable subject so far as the resolution is concerned.

If one were to take the serious expressions of the press for the last three days relative to this resolution and the divers amendments which have been submitted in relation to it, he would be forced to the conclusion that neither the Senate nor the President of the United States had outgrown the age of kilts. These reports present an attitude of childishness both upon the part of the Senate and the Executive that ill comports, in my opinion, either with the dignity of the one or the acknowledged common sense of the other. While I think this whole question has assumed a proportion entirely beyond its legitimate importance, I certainly deny for one, and for the credit of both parties in the Senate, that the Executive or the Senate so underestimates the intelligence of each other or the public at large, to say nothing of their honesty, as to suppose that either could be caught in so shallow a pit as has been discovered by the press.

There are those here who believe that the President has acted wholly within his constitutional and his legal power, who, nevertheless, believe that there should be a further effort made to ascertain and punish the guilty and to free the innocent from any further suspicion, and that our power should not cease and our efforts should be continued until it has been fully determined, if it is possible to arrive at such a determination, who the guilty parties are and who we can say are entitled to the verdict of not guilty.

For that reason alone, wholly independent of the power of the President, it was my intention to vote for this resolution. I for one had believed from the very beginning-and notwithstanding the very strong argument of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] I have not been for one single moment divorced from that opinion—that the proper construction of the fourth article in the Articles of War clearly and definitely gives to the President the absolute power to dismiss without honor. I concede that right. I believe that he acted wholly within his power.

But there may be another class of Senators here who have some doubts upon that question, and those who have the doubts would have been justified in voting for the original resolution which has been introduced and heretofore has been supported by the Senator from the State of Ohio. On the other hand, those—and there is certainly a third class—who believe that not only had the President the absolute power to act as he did, but who desire to assert and to declare that he exercised that power legally and constitutionally and justly, can certainly find a mode of expressing it in voting for the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], because this amended resolution does not change it, in my opinion, in the slightest degree. I can vote for this, not on the false assumption that it means something else than what its words are, but I can vote for it upon the assumption that it means that we do not question in any way, so far as this case is concerned, the legal power or the constitutional power of the President of the United States to dismiss without honor either in time of peace or in time of war.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. With great pleasure.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Does the Senator consider that the Senator from Ohio puts the same construction on this resolu-tion that he is now putting on it? The Senator from Ohio is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he will have to do with this question in that committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say that the Senator from Ohio does not put upon it the same construction that I do. The Senator from Ohio definitely stated that his construction of those words was that they meant the same as though the resolution read "without affirming or denying the power." That is not the fair construction, and it is not the general construction which will be given to this resolution if it shall pass. The proper construction, and it will be taken so to mean, is that the Senate has placed its seal of approval upon the constitutionality of the action of the President. I can not give it any other meaning, and I shall vote for it upon the assumption that it does mean that, and I will take no ground that will not bear me out in voting for it upon the express statement that I have made and not upon the idea that a half a dozen Senators who surround me have met together and concluded that the better way out of this whole thing is practically to adopt the sentiment that was expressed in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. President, I had intended to-day, if this matter had not received this pleasant settlement, to make an address upon the question of the constitutional and legal power of the President. We all practically now concede that in the resolution itself. I concede it independent of the resolution, and the resolution as it has been settled upon confirms me in that belief.

Mr. TILLMAN obtained the floor.

Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to Mr. SCOTT. me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I merely wish to express the hope that the majority of those negroes will not be dead before the Military Affairs Committee has an opportunity to investigate whether they are innocent or guilty.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly. Mr. CARMACK. I did not happen to be in the Chamber when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] offered his modified solution. I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee reresolution.

quests that the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio be read by the Secretary. The Secretary will read again the reso-

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That, without questioning the legality or justice of any act of the President in relation thereto, the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during sessions or recess of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere, the expenses of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to say just a word in relation to the amended resolution, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the modified resolution is practically identical with the one offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn], and if it really means what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] meant all the time, I would be glad to have some explanation as to why it has taken so long and so many anxious caucuses and so many midnight conferences to arrive at that conclusion.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. MONEY. I am indebted to the Senator from South Carolina for a few moments to submit a few remarks.

Mr. President, certainly I have all along during this debate misunderstood the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. I had understood all along that he had two objects in view, two points to make. One was that the President had no legal or constitutional authority to discharge without honor the battalion in controversy, and the other was that in exercising that authority he had not properly weighed the evidence and had exercised it without proper consideration. But whatever that impression may have been, it is dissipated by the language of the Senator this morning, who has told us what is his present mental status

Of course, it is very agreeable to everybody to see that the Republicans in their extremity have made common sacrifices upon the altar of harmony to get together, but it seems to me the speeches made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] show that while they agree upon the form of the words, they are just as much divided in opinion as they were before.

The Senator from Ohio, notwithstanding the declaration as to the proper construction of his resolution made by the Senator from North Dakota, has himself construed it—and nobody can construe a paper better than the man who wrote it, because he knows what was in his own mind, which can only be guessed at from contemporaneous circumstances by any other man.

Now, Mr. President, the conclusion is, as drawn now, that by taking out the words "or denying" in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, leaving simply the words "without questioning," that language means to the mind of the Senator from Ohio, and I presume of course to those who agree with him, and have been with him in this controversy, that we have a right to question, but do not choose to exercise it. To the mind of the Senator from Massachusetts, the mind of the Senator from North Dakota, and those gentlemen on the other side who agree with them that language means that we have no right to inquire into the exercise of constitutional and legal authority on the part of the President in his action. It seems to me they are as far apart as they ever were in their real meaning, but of course if this last is big enough to cover the whole point and bring the party together, each one must simply direct his understanding to it and vote for the letter of the resolution without any regard to its spirit or meaning

But to my mind it carries this idea: When we use the words, without questioning the authority of the President" the Committee on Military Affairs is authorized and directed to inquire into certain matters, and it means that they are not to debate at all or give any consideration to the question whether it be with or without authority, just or unjust, but they are simply to inquire into a certain state of facts which was the basis of the action of the President. The question arises, then, if we are not to consider the authority of the President in his exercise of authority in this matter, whether he had it or had it not, what is the utility of an investigation into the facts? You are not going to change his action on the investigation any more than you change the opinion of a judge delivered by affirming that he has given too much or too little weight to the evidence or has admitted incompetent evidence or improperly applied the law to the facts in the case. It does not at all alter the fact of what the judgment was. It does not relieve the judgment that some lawyer finds fault with the judge. So the question that arises is whether the Senate will undertake an investigation of the matter without any purpose in view, and if we have no purpose in view and nothing is to be accomplished, I shall vote against the resolution.

I am one of those who believe that the President has both the constitutional and legal authority to do this thing and that he alone had to determine it. Whether the weight of the evidence was proper or not, if we do not go into that matter, and do not intend to, it is evident from the different investigations made that he was satisfied about it. I care not whether his decision is right or wrong. It can not be attacked here as an authority, in my opinion. If we can not do that-and in the mind of many members here there is no intention to do it—I can not for my life understand why we are to get at the facts, if it is possible to get at them any more than they have already been arrived at by the grand jury and three or four military investigations. that reason I think the whole resolution ought to be tabled.

I am much obliged to the Senator from South Carolina. Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, it seems to be in order for all parties to this discussion to sweep around their doors. There has been much difference of opinion and difference of interpretation, one Senator saying this resolution means this and the other one saying it means that; but I suppose most people will finally arrive at the conclusion that it means what the English language means when it is written by men who know how to use it; that the general public will interpret it according to the words that are given, and this Senator's and that one's explanation of its purpose will not cut any figure.

In regard to my own attitude in this matter, I find myself for the first time since I have been a member of this body differing from all of my Democratic colleagues.

Mr. TELLER. Not all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, the Senator says "not all." glad to know there is another. Democrat here who feels about it as I do. Possibly there may be still others, though we have got to a point now where there is no question on which to vote yea or nay. I expect everybody will vote yea on this resolu-tion. Certainly I am in favor of an investigation.

In speaking about my own attitude, I knew as well as anybody else that the South would tumble over itself in this Chamber and out of it in approval of the President's action in the Brownsville case. My own constituents approve it. All the southern people approve it. Why? Because they do not believe there ought to be any negroes in the Army at all, and they are glad to get rid of them, however unjustly that riddance is obtained. And recollecting the actions of the negro soldiers who were quartered in the South in 1866 and 1867, the outrages, the infamies, the cruelties that were perpetrated upon our people by them, there is no wonder that we hate the very idea of a negro soldier wearing the uniform of the United States and representing authority.

I therefore knew that my own people would be indorsing the President's attitude, but as far as I myself am concerned, while I have been charged with being a monomaniac in my personal antipathy and hatred of Theodore Roosevelt; that I am incapable of judging him fairly or treating him with justice. Senators will recall that last June when the railroad-rate bill was about to pass; when it was fresh in my mind and fresh in the mind of everyone that the Democrats who had been called to the President's aid had been betrayed, that he had thrown us down-what did I do? He had betrayed us in pursuit of this very party harmony which is so dear to Republicans, but even under those circumstances and with that provocation I declared on this floor that whatever credit was due and whatever benefit might come from that bill it would be due to Theodore Roose velt, because without his help and his influence no bill on the subject could have been passed here at all. Yet in face of that acknowledgment I am charged with being so bitter, so narrow, so prejudiced that I can see nothing good in this man.

As far as this case is concerned, I plant myself on the bedrock principle that we ought not to punish innocent men for the sins of the guilty, and that every man ought to be considered innocent until he is proved guilty; and I will rest my case there.

This question of negro soldiers will come up later, perhaps. Mr. President, from habit and training I have never found it agreeable or pleasant to write anything to be spoken, but have always been willing to rely on such thoughts as might come to me and to use such words as would plainly express my meaning. In the hurry of extemporaneous composition I have been unfortunate at times in saying some things which did not clearly express my own feelings or thoughts. I have not qualified words sufficiently to make myself clearly understood.

As I am dealing with a very serious and grave question-I am speaking now broadly-and desiring to say nothing that does not express clearly and exactly what I think and feel, I have taken the trouble to write out or to dictate and have typewritten most of what I propose to say to-day.

I had not expected to have anything more to say on this subject, and would have contented myself with the presentation I made in the speech I have already delivered, but the remarkable and unprecedented actions and utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin have made it necessary that I should trespass again upon the attention of the Senate. It seems that after ten years of service together we have both misunderstood one another. We have had many clashes in debate. Sometimes these were sharp, causing momentary anger, first on one side then on the other; but with me that feeling has always passed away at once, leaving no trace of bitterness or unfriendliness, and I had supposed it was the same with the Senator from Wisconsin until last week. I have been forced, reluctantly, to feel that I have, without knowing how or when, earned the malicious enmity of that Senator; and while I still bear him no malice, self-respect compels me to comment upon his latest utterances.

During my twelve years of service here I have borne malice toward no man, and I am sorry to find that without provocation, that I am aware of, I have excited it in a man whom until now I thought to be my friend.

It is but my nature to be blunt and outspoken, and I have never taught my tongue the art of double dealing; and if there is any vice in men I abhor more than any other it is hypocrisy, and I am too old to begin to practice it now.

A brief statement of facts which are fresh in the minds of all who heard the Senator's speech will explain my meaning. He began that speech with a sneering comment on my lynching record, or my ideas on lynching. In the course of his argument the Senator from Wisconsin was discussing the inability of the President to find out who the guilty soldiers were who had shot up Brownsville, and, having asserted with great positiveness that there were no grounds for criticism, I presumed, in an orderly and respectful way, to ask a question, and this was what was said on both sides:

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has not said anything about the crime or the omission to do their duty being an offense which was triable by court-martial. It is not a question of the affidavits which were offered. I think the Senator agrees with me that there have been a good many

I think the Senator agrees with me that the lies sworn to.

Mr. Spooner. The Senator is not asking me any question. A reply to it would be difficult or, if made, would not elucidate in any way the question which I am discussing.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator was making an assertion, though, and I wanted to answer it.

Mr. Spooner. What assertion did I make?

Mr. TILLMAN. You say these men, if I recall it, were not triable; that they had done nothing that would give any excuse for a court-martial.

Mr. Spooner. I did not say that.

Mr. TILLMAN. That was the meaning of your words, if I understood the language.

tended to say, or had said, and coming on down to a point in which he praised Major Penrose-I quote from the Record-

Mr. Tillman rose.

Mr. Spooner. No; not now. He stands by his men when he can. It is a part of the comradeship of the officer and men that he should. Moreover, no man could have a higher, intenser interest in the determination that his command was guiltless than Major Penrose, for he knew it would involve himself, as it has involved himself.

Mr. Tillman rose.

Mr. Tillman rose.

Mr. Tillman rose.

Mr. Tillman will the Senator allow me a question?

The Vice-President. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. Tillman. I will make it like a bullet.

Mr. Spooner. It depends on the nature of the question. What is it?

Mr. Tillman. I will make it like a bullet.

Mr. Spooner. Well, you shoot your bullet very slowly. Go on.

Mr. Tillman. I like to look in the Senator's eyes.

Mr. Spooner. Go on.

Mr. Tillman. Why did not the President, if he had so much regard for this officer's recommendation, follow it in regard to employing detectives and enlisting them in the company and trying to get at the facts?

Then, Mr. President, the Senator become what he are in the senator's expense when he was a senator in the senator when he was a senator in the senator of the president in the facts?

Then, Mr. President, the Senator began what he said was not an attack on me, but a defense of the law.

While the Senator's manner was supercilious and his utterances none too courteous, I paid no attention to it; but when he continued to defend the President's action and to stress the point that the President had done all he could, and was proceeding to praise Major Penrose, I again, in a deferential and respectful way, tried to enter the debate by asking another question, which was entirely pertinent and bore directly on the point. I propounded this inquiry about the detectives. Instantly the Senator's manner changed to one of great aggressiveness and anger, and in a manner as insulting as it is possible for a man to assume he commenced an attack upon me personally that has never been paralleled in this body since I have been a member of it. When, for the purpose he had in view, I saw that he was laying the foundation for a justification for his harsh words by garbling and misquoting my own utterances, I interjected the remark, "Do not misquote me." His reply was, "No; I put it mildly; I do not intend to misquote you. Quote yourself, if you please."

Then this colloquy ensued:

Then this colloquy ensued:

Mr. TILLMAN. I said it is the fundamental principle of English and American liberty that every man shall be considered innocent until he is proved guilty—

Mr. Spooner. Proved guilty where?

Mr. TILLMAN. In a court, of course. And that ten guilty had better escape than one innocent suffer. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. Spooner. Mr. President, the statement is accurate, generally speaking, but with what grace can the Senator, using that as a foundation, charge usurpation in this case and a violation of fundamental principles of liberty upon the President of the United States? Is not that principle applicable to a black man in the South as well as to the white man in the South or the white man in the North? The Senator, who says, "We shot them, we killed them, and we will do it again," on a former occasion—

Mr. TILLMAN. May I get in?

Mr. Spooner. What do you want to get in for? I want to finish. What is it?

Mr. Spooner. Well, strike back a little?

Mr. Spooner. Well, strike back; go on.

Mr. TILLMAN. On this proposition which you are discussing you first branch off on one phase of it. You had better sit down a little, if you please.

Mr. Spooner. No; I do not intend to yield for a speech. The Senator please.

Mr. Spooner. No; I do not intend to yield for a speech. The Senator can answer me later. If he wants to ask me a question, he is welcome. Mr. TILLMAN. Is that all?

Mr. Spooner. That is all.

Now, Mr. President, I would do the Senator from South Carolina no interfer.

Mr. Tillman. The Senator from Wisconsin, however, turns himself directly to me, mentions me by name, speaks of things I have said and of my motives, and all that sort of thing, and then says I may answer him hereafter, but he will only let me in now for a question.

Mr. Spooner. I wish to finish what I want to say. What is the question.

Mr. Spooner. I did not start to ask a question.
Mr. Spooner. Start to ask it.
Mr. TILLMAN. I said I did not start to ask a question.
Mr. Spooner. I add not start to ask a question.
Mr. Spooner. I decline to allow the Senator to make a speech. I am

At this stage of the debate it dawned on me for the first time that the Senator from Wisconsin had intentionally and in cold blood brought things to this pass in order to give him the opportunity to carry out his preconceived plan, and I recalled that in a preceding part of his speech he had used language which caused me at the time to feel aggrieved, but I let it pass, because I had no desire to get into an altercation with the Senator or to indulge in any of those running discussions which have marked our debates in the past, when it was a case of cut and thrust with no blows below the belt.

The phrase to which I alluded in the Senator's speech is that in which he had declared that it would not be decent for him to comment upon the actions of the officers Penrose and Macklin, because they were now under trial by court-martial. The word "decent" there is entirely, I suppose, parliamentary; and as my name was not mentioned, it was of no serious moment. I let it go by, although I had commented at length and severely upon both Penrose and Macklin, had called their actions in question, and had said that they were incompetent and were derelict in the discharge of their duties, or words to that effect.

The Senator's idea that these men being under charges should not be commented on here is a rightful one if he chooses to occupy that attitude. I do not dispute his rights in that particular, and I was not supersensitive about his saying it would not be decent. I had only used the language, not as harsh lan-guage as Blocksom and Garlington and the Judge-Advocate-General used, in commenting on these same officers in the report sent to us, and I felt justified in criticising them.

Having shut me off in a discourteous and brutal fashion-I had almost said ungentlemanly—the Senator went on to read me a lecture, to quote from my utterances in debate in this body and from extracts of supposed speeches given in newspapers, all the while deprecating the unpleasant work he was engaged in, excusing himself upon the plea of duty—public duty—and claiming that he had been "led off" from the orderly course of his debate. He repeated that phrase, "led off," "led off," three or four times in his anxiety to appear as a great public censor performing the unpleasant task solely from a sense of It was a most excellent piece of acting, and was worthy of Uriah Heep in his most humble exhibition of himself.

Since when did it become the duty of the Senator from Wis-consin to play schoolmaster here and presume to teach other What justifica-Senators the proprieties and decencies of life?

tion did he have for his conduct on that day?

He has the right, of course, to express his opinion of my utterances and actions, and as he has not minced words or been very careful of feelings, he must not blame me if I shall imitate his bad example.

I call attention to the fact that in all I interrupted him but four times, and two of these were after he had began playing his subtle game and in answer to direct allusions to me by name and to things which I had said or was supposed to have said.

Take his first attack, which was indirect and which I let pass without comment. He declared it would not be decent to comment on the actions of Major Penrose or Captain Macklin, because they were on trial and ought to be left alone until after the court-martial. He knew as well as anyone else that I had commented at some length upon the actions of both of these officers, and I have never felt and do not feel now that there was any indecency in doing so.

Everything I said was based upon the official documents which had come to us. There could be no doubt at all of their authenticity. I said nothing that had not been said in stronger language by the inspection officers and authorities of the War Department, and while his own proclamation of unwillingness to criticise them may have arisen from a refinement of feeling, I would have passed it by without taking it to myself if it had not been for the manner of delivery and the other actions accompanying it and from what subsequently followed, compelling me to believe that the Senator had set out to provoke me to interrupt for the express purpose of shutting me off in the manner he did, and thus giving him a chance to abuse without having his unfairness and injustice exposed.

When I asked the question "Why did not the President adopt Major Penrose's suggestion and employ a detective," he dodged it most adroitly by following the old rule of strengthening your case by abusing the attorney on the other side.

I call attention, by the way, to the fact that each of the three champions on the other side who have been most vociferous in applauding the President's course and defending his conduct dodged this same question. My bluff friend from Georgia [Mr. CLAY!, earnest and honest as he is, dodged it. The impetuous and brilliant champion from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack] dodged The subtle Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] dodged it. Why were they unwilling to treat this question seriously? Simply because none of them have any answer to it. Here was a battalion of 167 men, no more than 20 of whom were under accusation of having committed the outrage at Brownsville, and yet in direct opposition to the advice of the officer most concerned the War Department and the President refused to adopt the only practical suggestion that was made, and in every way the President seems to have labored with no other end in view than to gain applause from unthinking men in the South. If there has been a single honest and sensible effort made to detect the murderers in this case I fail to find a record of it.

Reliance upon the inquiry set on foot among the soldiers by Major Blocksom and General Garlington as the sole means of detection are to my mind nothing less than idiotic.

In this connection, Mr. President, I noticed in yesterday morning's Post the report of a speech made at Boston by Mr. Long, former Secretary of the Navy, a bosom friend of President Roosevelt. I will read one sentence, but I wish to have the whole extract printed in full in the RECORD. Ex-Secretary Long

Everybody knows that had time been taken, had efficient means of detection been set at work, had advantage been taken of the leaks which were sure to open in a matter of which so many are claimed to have had knowledge, the truth could have been got at and the offenders found out.

That is the gist of the Secretary's position, and it is the verdict, in my judgment, which will be finally arrived at by ninetenths of the American people. I ask that the entire extract be inserted in the Record without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The extract referred to is as follows:

EXCUSE FOR PRESIDENT-JOHN D. LONG SAYS TROOPS' DISMISSAL WAS IMPULSE—APPROVES AN INVESTIGATION—FORMER SECRETARY OF NAVY INTIMATES ROOSEVELT'S ACTION IN BROWNSVILLE AFFAIR WAS HONEST, BUT HASTY—SUGGESTION OF IMPEACHMENT ABSURD—DECLARES MILITARY NOT RACE ISSUE IS INVOLVED.

BOSTON, January 19.

Boston, January 19.

The Brownsville incident was discussed by former Secretary of the Navy John D. Long, at a dinner of the Massachusetts Club, an organization of prominent Republicans, here to-day. The speaker offered as a possible reason for the President's action in this affair what he termed "Mr. Roosevelt's impulsive nature," and said that it was right, as matters stand at present, for Congress to have a thorough investigation of the facts. He referred to the suggestion of impeachment as "absurd and trifling."

of the facts. He referred to the suggestion of impeachment as "absurd and trifling."

"In this Brownsville matter, while there is a very decided difference of opinion as to the propriety of the President's action," said Mr. Long, "I can not think that anybody doubts his honest purpose. In one sense the black man is not involved as such, because the principle at stake pertains not to him specially, but to all who are in the military service. It is often asked what actuated the President to such an unlimited sweep which, without a hearing of the parties accused, inflicted severe punishment, not only on those suspected of guilt, though not proved guilty on trial, but also, if there were guilty ones, on innocent and guilty alike.

ROOSEVELT'S IMPULSES.

ROOSEVELT'S IMPULSES.

"It has occurred to me that the reason is perhaps to be found in the impulsive nature of the President, whose impulses, always toward the right, are not always directed with sufficient consideration. No President has been more emphatic of his assertion of the rights and political equalty of the negro, for whose sake he has braved criticism political equalty of the negro, for whose sake he has braved criticism and contumely.

"What more natural than that, when occasion came, he should seize it to show that he is as quick to discipline the negro citizen as to defend him, and that he does not propose to make fish of one race and fowl of the other. It was an honest, if a hasty, impulse.

"Everybody knows that had time been taken, had efficient means of detection been set at work, had advantage been taken of the leaks which were sure to open in a matter of which so many are claimed to have had knowledge, the truth could have been got at and the offenders found out. found out. INVESTIGATION FITTING.

"Of course, it is right and fitting that, in the present posture of the matter, Congress should, as now proposed, have a thorough investigation of the facts, with a full hearing of all whose rights and fortunes are involved, and if innocent men have suffered do them justice. And surely nobody will then be readier to do it than the President, who by his manly withdrawal of that part of his order, which in his haste was improprerly included in it, has again shown his readiness to correct an error."

Mr. TILLMAN. The grand jury could get no clew because they were only working among the citizens of the town, with the general result that the evidence was overwhelming that soldiers did it, but as to which soldier they had no evidence to learn. Can anybody be made to believe that the thirteen men who were by general suspicion pointed out, had they been placed in solitary confinement and allowed to see no one and an offer of amnesty for turning State's evidence been made, that something would not have come of it? Is it possible to believe that if a large number of the other men were accessories before or after the fact that black detectives enlisted and placed among them would not have discovered some clew? Is there anyone ac-quainted with criminal procedure bold enough to declare that a clew once obtained would not have soon led to the detection of all the guilty parties? The whole procedure has the appearance of a well-laid plan to shield and protect the real criminals, and in the most effective manner possible, and to hurry the expulsion of innocent and guilty men alike from the Army, so as to put it out of the power of anybody at any time to ever prove who the guilty men were and mete out adequate punishment to them.

No Senator, not even the Senator from Wisconsin, liked to answer the question about enlisting the detectives. Instead of doing so, he proceeded to abuse me to distract attention from this glaring failure of the authorities to do what every sensible man knows ought to have been done.

I return now to another point in the Senator's indictment. It is that part of his speech where he asks whether the law should not apply to the black man in the South as well as to the white man in the North.

With great emphasis and eloquence he made the inquiry, "Is not that principle applicable to a black man," etc. And what I wish to ask, in view of the attitude which has been shown by the War Department toward the negro soldiers at Brownsville and the white soldiers at Athens, Ohio, is not this principle as applicable in the one case as in the other?

It was adroit for the Senator to shift the minds of his auditors and the readers of the Record from the President's outrageous discrimination against the black soldiers and favoring the white ones to my own utterances and attitude toward the negro rapists, and the shrewdness and dishonesty of the argument and the indecency of the attack was emphasized when the Senator from Wisconsin proceeded to quote from a former speech of mine in this body, in which I said:

We shot them; we killed them; and we will do it again.

When I asked for permission to point this out and show how unfair and unmanly was the attack he shut me off incontinently, refusing absolutely to give me an opportunity to explain or defend myself

Now, what about those words of mine: "We shot them," etc. In what connection did I utter them? If I mistake not the Senator from Wisconsin was in this Chamber when I used that language. There were present a large number of leading Republicans. I challenged each and every man here to show wherein the people of South Carolina were not justified, and no one dared reply. I will repeat the statement of fact and circumstances. It was in 1876, thirty years ago, and the people of South Carolina had been living under negro rule for eight years. There was a condition bordering upon anarchy. Misrule, robbery, and murder were holding high carnival. The people's substance was being stolen, and there was no incentive to labor. Our legislature was composed of a majority of negroes, most of whom could neither read nor write. They were the easy dupes and tools of as dirty a band of vampires and robbers as ever preyed upon a prostrate people. There was riotous living in the statehouse and sessions of the legislature lasting from year to year.

Our lawmakers never adjourned. They were getting a per diem. They felt that they could increase their income by remaining in session all the while. They were taxing us to death and confiscating our property. We felt the very foundations of our civilization crumbling beneath our feet, that we were sure to be engulfed by the black flood of barbarians who were surrounding us and had been put over us by the Army under the reconstruction acts. The sun of hope had disappeared behind a cloud of gloom and despair, and a condition had arisen such as has never been the lot of white men at any time in the history of the world to endure. Life ceased to be worth having on the terms under which we were living, and in desperation we determined to take the government away from the negroes.

We reorganized the Democratic party with one plank, and only one plank, namely, that "this is a white man's country and white men must govern it." Under that banner we went to battle. We had 8,000 negro militia organized by carpetbagers. The carpetbag governor had come to Washington and had persuaded General Grant to transcend his authority by issuing to the State its quota of arms under the militia appropriation for twenty years in advance, in order to get enough to equip these negro soldiers. They used to drum up and down the roads with their fifes and their gleaming bayonets, equipped with new Springfield rifles and dressed in the regulation uniform. It was lawful, I suppose, but these negro soldiers or this negro militia—for they were never soldiers—growing more and more bold, let drop talk among themselves where the white children might hear their purpose, and it came to our ears. This is what they said:

The President is our friend. The North is with us. We intend to kill all the white men, take the land, marry the white women, and then these white children will wait on us.

Those fellows forgot that there were in South Carolina some forty-odd thousand ex-Confederate soldiers, men who had worn the gray on a hundred battlefields; men who had charged breastworks defended by men in blue; men who had held lines of battle charged by men in blue; men who had seen real battles, where heroes fought. They forgot that putting in uniform a negro man with not sense enough to get out of a shower of rain did not make him a soldier. So when this condition of desperation had reached the unbearable point; when, as I say, despair had come upon us, we set to work to take the government away from them.

We knew—who knew better?—that the North then was a unit in its opposition to southern ideas, and that it was their purpose to perpetuate negro governments in those States where it could be done by reason of there being a negro majority. Having made up our minds, we set about it as practical men.

I do not say it in a boastful spirit, although I am proud to say it, that the people of South Carolina are the purest-blooded Americans in America. They are the descendants of the men who fought with Marion, with Sumter, with Pickens, and our other heroes in the Revolution. We have had no admixture of outsiders, except a small trickling in from the North and from other Southern States.

Clashes came. The negro militia grew unbearable and more and more insolent. I am not speaking of what I have read; I am speaking of what I know, of what I saw. There were two militia companies in my township and a regiment in my county. We had clashes with these negro militiamen. The Hamburg riot was one clash, in which seven negroes and one white man were killed. A month later we had the Ellenton riot, in which no one ever knew how many negroes were killed, but there were forty or fifty or a hundred. It was a fight between barbarism and civilization, between the African and the Caucasian, for mastery.

It was then that "we shot them;" it was then that "we killed them;" it was then that "we stuffed ballot boxes." After the troops came and told us, "You must stop this rioting," we had decided to take the government away from men so debased as were the negroes—I will not say baboons; I never have called them baboons; I believe they are men, but some of them are so near akin to the monkey that scientists are yet looking for the missing link. We saw the evil of giving the ballot to creatures of this kind, and saying that one vote shall count regardless of the man behind the vote and whether that vote would kill mine. So we thought we would let you see that it took something else besides having the shape of a man to make a man.

Grant sent troops to maintain the carpetbag government in power and to protect the negroes in the right to vote. He merely obeyed the law. I have no fault to find with him. It was his policy, as he announced, to enforce the law, because if it were bad then it would be repealed. Then it was that we stuffed ballot boxes, because desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and having resolved to take the State away, we hesitated at nothing.

It is undoubted that the Republicans will assume all responsibility for the condition in the South at that time. They have never shirked it. The Senator from Wisconsin acknowledged his participation in it the other day. He has no apology to make for it. I do not ask anybody to apologize for it; I am only justifying our own action. I want to say now that we have not shot any negroes in South Carolina on account of politics since 1876. We have not found it necessary. [Laughter.] Eighteen hundred and seventy-six happened to be the hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, and the action of the white men of South Carolina in taking the State away from the negroes we regard as a second declaration of independence by the Caucasian from African barbarism.

The other day the Senator from Wisconsin defined liberty. "Liberty is that," I believe he said, "which is permitted by law to be done." The Senator has the right to give whatever idea of liberty he may have, and I have no objection to that. In a general way it is a very good definition. But I here declare that if the white men of South Carolina had been content to obey the laws which had been forced down our throats at the point of the bayonet and submit to the reconstruction acts which had thrust the ballot into the hands of ignorant and debased negroes, slaves five years before, and only two or three generations removed from the barbarians of Africa, the State of South Carolina to-day would be a howling wilderness, a second Santo Domingo. It took the State fifteen years to recover and begin to move forward again along the paths of development and progress; and in consequence of the white men interpreting the word "liberty" to mean the liberty of white people and not the license of black ones, the State is to-day in the very vanguard of southern progress, and can point to the result as the absolute justification for every act which we performed in "76, however lawless our acts may be in the eyes of the Senator from Wisconsin.

South Carolina and Louisiana were the two last States to throw off the blood-sucking vampires which had been set over them by the reconstruction acts.

I would not have tried to do more than to give a statement of facts the other day, but I was not permitted to do so. I was ordered to take my own time, and I am now taking it in answer.

ordered to take my own time, and I am now taking it in answer.

Now, Mr. President, a word about lynching and my attitude toward it. A great deal has been said in the newspapers, North and South, about my responsibility in connection with this

My position has been purposely misrepresented, and the Senator from Wisconsin has assumed to himself the right to arraign me in this body and to pass judgment of condemnation in most biting and vindictive phrase. It is not worth while to ask who made John C. Spooner my keeper or gave him the right to assume this hectoring and masterful attitude. With a self-righteousness that is characteristic of his breed, he dons the robe of the Pharisee, spreads broad his phylacteries, and calls up the Senator from South Carolina for sentence and pronounces his decree. These are his words:

calls up the Senator from South Carolina for sentence and pronounces his decree. These are his words:

Mr. Spooner. Now, Mr. President, I believe in law. I believe that wherever a man perpetrates a crime, or a crime is committed and the perpetrator or suspected perpetrator can be identified, the law should seize him. I believe he is entitled to a trial before sentence. I believe he is entitled to a day in court.

I am opposed, Mr. President, to any man making himself judge, juror, and executioner. I look upon it as shocking beyond expression in civilized communities, Mr. President, for the populace to seize a human being, charge him with crime, drag him to a tree protesting his innocence, and hang him or burn him at the stake. "In the corrupted currents of this world" it sometimes happens. All just men deplore it. No man ought to encourage it. It is a crime against civilization to encourage it.

I have looked with peculiar honor and pride upon the brave, continued efforts of southern governors to conserve the law, to maintain peace, to make that a real shield which the law in every civilized community is intended to throw around a man accused of crime. I have admired Governor Vardaman for it; I have admired the governors of other States in the South for it; I admire the governor anywhere who has done his uttermost to prevent lynching and to punish lynching.

And, Mr. President, I have been shocked more than once. I was shocked the other day here by the statement of the Senator from South Carolina justifying it and supporting its continuance. If there is one man under the sky who ought not to do it it is a maker of the laws which govern the people.

Mr. President, this is not an attack nor is it intended to be upon the Senator from South Carolina. It is a plea for good government, orderly government, real liberty—not the liberty of one man, but the liberty of all. What is liberty? It is not license. Liberty was once well defined to be "freedom to do that which the law permits." That is what liberty is. I say aga

Have I ever advocated lynch law at any time or at any place? I answer on my honor, "Never!" I have justified it for one crime, and one only, and I have consistently and persistently maintained that attitude for the last fourteen years. As governor of South Carolina I proclaimed that, although I had taken the oath of office to support the law and enforce it, I would lead a mob to lynch any man, black or white, who had ravished a woman, black or white. This is my attitude calmly and de-liberately taken, and justified by my conscience in the sight of God.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin speaks of "lynching bees." As far as lynching for rape is concerned, the word is a misnomer. When stern and sad-faced white men put to death a creature in human form who has deflowered a white woman, there is nothing of the "bee" about it. There is more of the feeling of participating as mourner at a funeral. have avenged the greatest wrong, the blackest crime in all the category of crimes, and they have done it, not so much as an act of retribution in behalf of the victim as a duty and as a warning as to what any man may expect who shall repeat the offense. They are looking to the protection of their own loved

The Senator from Wisconsin prates about the law. He erects the law into a deity which must be worshiped regardless of justice. He has studied law books until his mind has become saturated with the bigotry which ignores the fundamental principle in this Government: "Law is nothing more than the will of the people." There are written laws and unwritten laws, and the unwritten laws are always the very embodiment of say-age justice. The Senator from Wisconsin is incapable of understanding conditions in the South or else he has lost those natural impulses which for centuries have been the character-Tacitus tells us that the "Germanic people were ever jealous of the virtue of their women." Germans, Saxons, Englishmen, they are practically one, springing from the same great root. That trinity of words, the noblest and holiest in our language, womanhood, wifehood, motherhood, have Saxon origin. I believe with Wordsworth-it is my religion-

A mother is a mother still, the noblest thing alive.

And a man who speaks with lightness or flippancy or discusses cold-bloodedly a matter so vital as the purity and chastity of womanhood is a disgrace to his own mother and unworthy the love of a good wife.

Look at our environment in the South, surrounded, and in a very large number of counties and in two States outnumbered, by the negroes—engulfed, as it were, in a black flood of semi-barbarians. Our farmers, living in segregated farmhouses, more or less thinly scattered through the country, have negroes on every hand. For forty years these have been taught the damnable heresy of equality with the white man, made the puppet of scheming politicians, the instrument for the furtherance of political ambitions. Some of them have just enough educa-tion to be able to read, but not always to understand what they read. Their minds are those of children, while they have the passions and strength of men. Taught that they are oppressed, and with breasts pulsating with hatred of the whites, the younger generation of negro men are roaming over the land, passing back and forth without hindrance, and with no possibility of adequate police protection to the communities in which they are residing.

Now let me suppose a case. Let us take any Senator on this floor—I will not particularize—take him from some great and well-ordered State in the North, where there are possibly twenty thousand negroes, as there are in Wisconsin, with over two million whites. Let us carry this Senator to the backwoods in South Carolina, put him on a farm miles from a town or railroad, and environed with negroes. We will suppose he has a fair young daughter just budding into womanhood; and recollect this, the white women of the South are in a state of siege; the greatest care is exercised that they shall at all times where it is possible not be left alone or unprotected, but that can not always and in every instance be the case. That Senator's daughter undertakes to visit a neighbor or is left home alone for a brief while. Some lurking demon who has watched for the opportunity seizes her; she is choked or beaten into insensibility and ravished, her body prostituted, her purity destroyed, her chastity taken from her, and a memory branded on her brain as with a red-hot iron to haunt her night and day as long as she lives. Moore has drawn us the picture in most graphic language:

One fatal remembrance, one sorrow that throws Its bleak shade alike o'er our joys and our wees, To which life nothing darker or brighter can bring. For which joy hath no balm and affliction no sting.

In other words, a death in life. This young girl thus blighted and brutalized drags herself to her father and tells him what has happened. Is there a man here with red blood in his veins who doubts what impulses the father would feel? Is it any wonder that the whole countryside rises as one man and with set, stern faces seek the brute who has wrought this infamy? Brute, did I say? Why, Mr. President, this crime is a slander on the brutes. No beast of the field forces his female. He waits invitation. It has been left for something in the shape of a man to do this terrible thing. And shall such a creature, because he has the semblance of a man, appeal to the law? Shall men coldbloodedly stand up and demand for him the right to have a fair trial and be punished in the regular course of justice? So far as I am concerned he has put himself outside the pale of the law, human and divine. He has sinned against the Holy Ghost. He has invaded the holy of holies. He has struck civilization a blow, the most deadly and cruel that the imagination can conceive. It is idle to reason about it; it is idle to preach about it. Our brains reel under the staggering blow and hot blood surges to the heart. Civilization peels off us, any and all of us who are men, and we revert to the original savage type whose impulses under any and all such circumstances has always been to "kill! kill! kill!"

I do not know what the Senator from Wisconsin would do under these circumstances; neither do I care. I have three daughters, but, so help me God, I had rather find either one of them killed by a tiger or a bear and gather up her bones and bury them, conscious that she had died in the purity of her maidenhood, than have her crawl to me and tell me the horrid story that she had been robbed of the jewel of her womanhood by a black fiend. The wild beast would only obey the instinct of nature, and we would hunt him down and kill him just as soon as possible. What shall we do with a man who has outbruted the brute and committed an act which is more cruel than death? Try him? Drag the victim into court, for she alone can furnish legal evidence, and make her testify to the fearful ordeal through which she has passed, undergoing a second crucifixion?

Here is the picture drawn by a southern poet:

A little woman, slight and deathly pale, Within her eyes
The dim shame lingers of a sin unsinned.
She speaks.
Her voice is broken as her pride. It hath
No music and no color and no warmth.
From eyes like hers and tones like hers a man
May learn how merciful is death.
She tells She tells
The story of her guiltless infamy—
Tells it beneath a fire of interruptions,
Cross-questions, and objections, and the like,
Sanctioned by Law's procedure.
And insults from a shyster privileged

Thro' his employment to insult her so— Tells it From start to finish, and is not spared a word, Until. at last, A pitifully living corpse, she falls Back into fearful silence.

And, facing her.
The while, the Beast leans forward, huge and black, Its simian arms crossed on the breast of it—
Whispering, at times, in the attorney's ears Suggestions as to questions to be asked—
And tho' the fear of death and hell agape
Be in its belly, still unable quite
To hide a grin of reminiscent lust
Behind a sweating palm.

That is the picture—
Do I hear you say
Again: "The Law should take its course?"

That is what the Senator from Wisconsin says he would do, and he is welcome to all of the honor he can get out of it. Our rule is to make the woman witness, prosecutor, judge, and jury. I have known Judge Lynch's court to sit for a week while suspect after suspect has been run down and arrested, and in every instance they were brought into the presence of the victim, and when she said, "That is not the man," he was set free; but when she said, "That is the man," civilization asserted itself, and death, speedy and fearful, let me say—certainly speedy—was meted out. I have never advocated, I have deprecated and denounced, burning for this or any other crime. I believe it brutalizes any man who participates in a cruel punishment like that. I am satisfied to get out of the world such creatures.

As far as the people of the South are concerned, it is said I do not represent them here. Somehow or other I seem to represent one State, and I do not hesitate to assert that it is my religious belief that on this subject of rape I voice the feeling and the purpose of 95 per cent of the true white men of the Southern States. Whether I do or not, I voice my own. I am not ashamed of them. I have no apologies to make for them.

The Senators from Wisconsin and Colorado may rave, the newspapers may howl, but men who were reared by virtuous mothers and who revere womanly purity as the most priceless jewel of their civilization will do as we of the South have done. On this question I take back nothing and apologize for nothing. I spurn and scorn the charlatanry and cant, the hypocrisy and cowardice, the insolence and effrontery of any and all men who call my motives in question.

Now, Mr. President, I will give a very brief outline of my con-

Now, Mr. President, I will give a very brief outline of my conception of conditions in the South to-day. I believe I understand the conditions there as well as any other man. I may be mistaken.

Never in the history of the world has a high-spirited and chivalrous people been called on to face a more difficult and dangerous situation. That a crisis is approaching every thoughtful man must confess. That there is a promise of a safe or happy solution is doubted by all. The Senator from Wisconsin dismisses the question with a wave of the hand and with an admonition to me and others who think like me to keep quiet and be good, urging that he had originally advocated the force bill, but confessed that he was wrong, and that it is better it did not pass. He contends the southern people, black and white, must live together and that the rest of the nation have for the time being left the matter alone; that there has been no discussion among the Republicans in this Chamber such as marked his earlier service in the Senate upon the subject. He says he knows of no better way to precipitate a race conflict than to be always talking about one. And he holds me up as the greatest sinner in that regard. You can not pick up a paper any day but that you will find an appeal from some negro in the North, some convention, some resolution of some kind somewhere de-nouncing the wrongs done the negroes in the South and demanding justice for them. Those papers circulate in the South. They go everywhere. Our schools, supported by the taxes paid by the white people, are educating these negroes to read such appeals.

If talking about a race conflict is going to precipitate one, I wish to ask, has the Senator forgotten the proclamation of William H. Seward that there was "an irrepressible conflict" between the North and the South on the matter of slavery and that his prophecy came true? Does he forget that Lincoln declared that the Republic could not exist half slave and half free? Are we to hide our heads in the sand, like an ostrich, and ignore the dangerous signs of the times and wait until the tempest bursts upon us in all of its fury? The Senator from Wisconsin, living in a northern Commonwealth where there are no negroes, who knows nothing about the situation, can not understand it and will not take the trouble to go and study it. What right has he to criticise me, who sees down the road these dangers and would try to prevent them?

The Senator warns us that the fourteenth amendment contemplates the reduction of representation in the electoral college and in the House of Representatives on account of the South's attitude. Is it a question of political power or is it a question of the preservation of our civilization?

The Senate last week unanimously declared that the war of 1861-1865 was not a rebellion. It struck out the words "war of the rebellion" and substituted "civil war." If this means anything, it means that the lawmakers of this country have at last come to realize that it was a civil war and that it was a contest over constitutional interpretation, and that the southern people fought for what they believed to be their constitutional rights.

A couple of days ago, at Lexington, a distinguished citizen of Massachusetts, a man of affairs, a representative of northern civilization, a soldier in the Union Army, proclaimed that he had fought Lee during most of his service in the war, and would have been glad to kill him then; but he recognized the greatness of that grand man's character, and said that if he had been in the South he would have fought with Lee. That is all we want anybody to acknowledge—the purity and honesty of the South's attitude.

I say here, from my observation and experience, and I claim to know something about it, that there is among the northern people little or no sectional hatred left. I have been among them. I have tested them. I have touched their nerves, if they have any, on the raw. I have seen nowhere any indication of hatred for the South as the South. And the people of the North are no longer blinded by passion. Newspapers of a partisan character are contending for political reasons for the maintenance of the settlement and the continuance of the adjustment of the issue after the war. I do not care to go into the political phases of this question, to point out the number of negro votes in the North, which compel, in a way, the continuance of that attitude. We were told, until this happy adjustment in regard to this resolution about Brownsville, that the leader of the Republican cohorts had threatened and had prepared a resolution to investigate conditions in the South in regard to elections.

Mr. President, the South has no fear of an investigation of that kind. It might have been dangerous fifteen or twenty years ago, but it can no longer do us any harm. We court it; at least I do. We have no objection in the world to an investigation from top to bottom and from end to end of elections North, South, East, and West. Of course the composition of the committee might be partisan. They might not undertake to arrive at the facts and get a real insight into conditions, to set about a statesmanlike work of relieving an intolerable situation. But I do not hesitate to say here and now that if this issue is presented to the American people, unless I am mistaken about that people, if they are made clearly to understand what is involved in the conditions in the South now, and what will come inevitably in the near future, they can no longer and never will be rallied again under the cry of a "free vote and a fair count" for the negroes of the South.

The Republican party itself has forsaken its old war cry of "the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." It has denied the Filipinos any participation in the Government, proclaiming that they are not fit. The southern people know they are unfit. We do not dispute it; but in the name of common sense and honest dealing, if the Filipinos are unfit, why are the negroes fit? Everybody knows that the Caucasian stands first, the Mongolian second, the Malay third, the Indian fourth, and the negro fifth in the scale of civilization as fixed by ethnologists. We have had to deal with the other four races besides our own. We have excluded the Chinese. Why? In order to satisfy the selfish desire of white men who are interested. We have butchered the Indian and taken his land. We have settled him. We have denied that the Malay is fit. Yet here we stand proclaiming that the African is fit.

The disfranchisement of the negro in the South for the time being has been acquiesced in by the people of the North without protest, but the fourteenth and the fifteenth amendments are the law of the land. Of course there is great doubt as to whether they were ever adopted in a constitutional way. I should like to hear the Senators from Wisconsin and Ohio, after studying the question a little, argue the point as a purely legal one, without reference to political conditions.

As a discussion of the race question in general goes on throughout the country and the future status of the negro in the United States and how to ameliorate conditions which are well-nigh intolerable now will more and more attract attention to the fundamental question as to whether or not the races are equal, must come to the front. It will be settled finally on that basis, yes or no. If the majority of the white people make up their minds that the negroes are not their equals, they will sooner or later put it in the law that they shall not have a part of the inheritance of the white race.

There was an irrepressible conflict in 1860 between slavery and freedom; between the idea of a confederation of States and a perpetual Union. Is there any man bold enough to deny that is an irrepressible conflict now between civilization and barbarism and that the living together upon an absolute plane of equality of the two races in the South-one the highest, the other-the lowest in the scale-is an impossibility without strife and bloodshed?

Let the newspapers of the country answer. Take up on any day you please a paper published anywhere and read of these conflicts and murders and ravishings, and all that sort of thing. Is it too much for me to say that the American people want this question investigated and discussed calmly and without passion or partisan bias, and have their lawmakers here set about trying to do something? That is all I am trying to accomplish. I do not expect to live to see any change in the Constitution of the United States one way or another. I doubt if there is a man in this Chamber who will ever see it changed by amendment.
